The two views may be contrasted thus: One deals with the fossils of the dead past. The other has to do with the living issues of the present, and the promises of the impending future. One is the sailor, loading down to the water's edge with dry bones, inviting disappointment, disaster and a descent, that may end his folly amid his exhausted fossils! The other nourishes his faith in the living Law Giver to nature, and who is also the revealed Redeemer in grace, and is heir to all the promises and possibilities of the still unfolding future!

The one acts as if persistently putting himself out of the pale of Divine promise. The other belongs to the entire category of the worthies and forehopers noted in the evelenth of Hebrews,—expecting immortal life and everlasting heirship in Paradise restored.

There is a desire for knowledge, and of course, for that pertaining to the past and present; but it is in the constitution of things most reasonable and righteous to cherish "the blessed hope" for the future, that is still opening to us in Divine promise.

J. B. COOK.

Dear Brother in the Lord:—

We are a little band of believers in the Lord Jesus Christ and his soon coming on earth to reign and to sit on his throne as he sitteth on his Father's throne, God help us to overcome.

No doubt you have seen in the World's Crisis about three years ago, a piece about how the little flock of believers sprung up or how it originated in this place. Brother Rathgeber, now our elder, a carpenter by occupation, was repairing an old canal boat and while at work he found an old tract amongst the debris which he stuck in his pocket, and when at leisure he read it, and glory to God it contained the blessed truth of Christ's coming on earth again to reign and dwell on earth forever. And the brother embraced the glorious truths and wrote on for more tracts, and he began to distribute them among some of the church members of the Evangelical Methodists of which he was a member, but not long thereafter he was brought before a committee for spreading a false doctrine a devil's doctrine as the would be Christians call it. But the brother left their church and he became the instrument in God's hand to convert several and bring them into the fold of Christ and the blessed truths, and they again become the means of gaining some of their friends to believe the precious truths and so I was brought to light from darkness by one of the brethren, and I was the means of bringing some four into the threshhold of our Lord and Savior, and now we only number 10; some have removed; two families which leaves our number as above stated, but Sunday Oct. 1st, we will add another to our flock, Brother Rathyeber will baptize him in the River Lehigh. This tract was found about 8 years ago; the little flock increases a little faster than the flock of Noah increased after preaching 120 years. I may add yet that I was converted and brought to light from darkness three years ago the 8th of last January, and was baptized in the River Lehigh when the ice was cut and measured 22 inches in thickness. The Lord was with me and Brother Flegg as we went into the cold watery grave. I could give a long history, but I have had the main points published in the Crisis which you no doubt have seen. May the blessing of God rest and abide with you for ever. Your brother in Christ,

JAMES J. EDMONDS.

If there be quarrels, we must bear the blame and the shame; if peace, God must have the glory.

Afterward.

Not while the surging billows roll
And overwhelm the struggling soul,
While darkness sleep as Egypt's night
Shuts out all gleams of heavenly light;
Not then the Heavenly comes to show
The fruits that from afflictions grow—
But afterward.

Not while with quivering lip and eye
We watch our dearest treasures die,
And gaze into the open grave
Feeling our impotence to save;
Then only precious seems the care;
The peaceful fruits of righteousness
Come afterward.

When the first tempest-gust is o'er,
Calmed by a voice unheard before;
When God's own hand the cloud uplifts,
And stars beam brightly through the rifts:
Tis then the heart begins to know
What fruits from secret grief below
Came afterward.

When some sweet flower, till then unknown,
Springs, with a power and grace its own,
Beside the path no dark before,
And fills a blessing evermore;
Then the lone heart may learn to smile,
Counting its treasures from the while—
Then afterward.

But ah! not yet may we discern
One-half the lovingness, nor learn
The hidden good that lurks within
Each painful stroke of discipline.
Till Jesus comes we ne'er shall know
All the rich fruits which earthly woe

Conference Report.

The fourth annual session of the General Union State Conference of Iowa convened Aug. 30, 1870, at West Irving, Iowa. This report will necessarily be somewhat abbreviated and contain a synopsis of the business transacted. The absence of the President, M. Chandler, the vice-president, P. F. Willoughby presided. Brethren P. W. Hough, R. B. Dutton, and C. W. Pitsor were appointed as committee on credentials, who reported all the members present entitled to act with us. Brethren Charles Huson and Thomas Hollis were recognized as delegates from the Southeastern District.

The minutes of the last meeting being called for, were read and approved. A written report from the treasurer was received stating that no demands remain against the conference, and that all bills were paid. Bro. J. Ridley, former secretary, sent a letter to the conference stating his inability to be present, and containing some good advice in regard to union.

Under mis'ellaneous Business, J. F. Willcox, J. T. Prime, and W. R. Chandler were invited to take part in our deliberations. C. W. Pitsor then reported his inability to report as missionary until the close of the meeting. Remarks were made by different brethren in regard to the necessity of faithfully discharging the duties assigned by the conference in collecting funds, which were practical. The auditor, R. B. Dutton, reported that owing to illness at the time the accounts were presented to him to audit he could not do so.

August 31.—Under the head miscellaneous business, proceeded to the consideration of a proposition relating to admission of the Conference of the Church of God into this Union Conference. Remarks were made by brethren Willcox, Ramsay, Hough, Hill, Hollis, Dutton, Marsh, and Pitsor in regard to it, which were generally favorable; and some suggestions and advice were given by these brethren which is not necessary to introduce here, but will say the spirit of those who addressed the conference was admirable throughout, and all were favorable to the proposed union. A committee of three were then appointed by the chair to meet the committee from the General Conference of the Church of God, and brethren R. B. Dutton, P. F. Willoughby, and Chas. Huson acted as the committee.

Sept. 1. On motion, report of the committee was read and accepted. They report that on joint conference it was decided that each conference may retain its own organization, and act independently in all matters within its own jurisdiction, but shall meet annually to confer with the members of this union body, and as a basis of union adopt the following resolution which shall be incorporated into the constitution as a permanent part thereof.

Resolved, That this conference accord the fullest liberty of speech, of thought and of conscience, to all its members, and while they maintain the essentials of the Christian faith and character, no one shall be proscribed on account of his faith, in relation to the doctrine of the "Age-to-Come," so-called, or be hindered in giving expression to his thoughts either for or against. But that we will aid each other to the extent of our power to attain a knowledge of the truth in all matters till we arrive at the fulness of the stature of men and women in Christ Jesus. J. F. Willcox, J. T. Prime, R. J. Hill, C. A. Huson, P. F. Willoughby, R. B. Dutton, Joint Committee.

The aforesaid brethren also presented the following resolution:

Resolved, That each subordinate conference comprising this body be requested to act upon the above amendment to the constitution, and report such action at our next annual meeting.

The question for consideration being; shall the resolution by the committee become a part of the constitution or not?

Resolved, That we, as members of the Union State Conference, do hereby pledge ourselves that we will use our utmost endeavors to promote the spirit of the resolution; and we will work to bring about a permanent union at our next annual meeting. We also recommend that the brethren at large render their hearty co-operation in effecting this union.

Before voting upon it remarks were made by different ones in regard to them, which were generally favorable. The rules were also suspended in order to give Eld. F. Burr, editor of the A. C Times, an opportunity of conference with us, and a motion made to re-read the report and resolutions for his benefit, which was done. Bro. J. F. Willcox then made some observations on the resolutions, and read the proposition of the conference of the Church of God and their desire for union, as recorded in the Restitution. After due consideration, and having met all objections, they were carried unanimously.

The following officers were then elected for the ensuing year: M. Chandler, president; P. F. Willoughby, treasurer; and E. A. Marsh, secretary. The directors were then elected by acclamation: D. A. Dickenson, of the N. E. District C. P. Burroughs, of the N. C. District; G. G. Emery, of the N. W. District; P. A. Smith, of the S. W. District; Charles Manda, of the S. C. District; Charles Huson, of the S. E. District.

Sept. 2. P. F. Willoughby then brought in his report as missionary; stated his inability to do much on account of sickness and other unfavorable causes. Reported accepted.

On motion a campmeeting committee of five were appointed to manage the meeting and locate the grounds. Committee: Charles Huson, P. F. Willoughby, Thomas Hollis, A. Willer, Clarke Newcomb. By motion, Thos. Hollis was chosen to locate the grounds, subject to their approval. A motion was made and carried that the conference business should be done hereafter upon the Wednesday following the commencement of the meeting.

It was also moved that the campmeeting committee arrange to board all who come to remain on the grounds at the rate of ten cents (more or less) a meal, and to provide ministers and delegates with tickets entitling them to board and lodging free during the meeting. Also provided that transient comers shall pay at the rate of twenty-five cents per meal (or at the option of the committee), and shall be furnished tickets also. Motion prevailed.

The president then appointed collectors for the different districts, who are required to report and remit to the treasurer, P. F. Willoughby, every three months. His address is Jefferson, Green county. Collectors: E. A. Marsh, C. C. Ramsay, C. W. Pitsor, Chas. Manda, P. F. Willoughby, R. A. Olmstead. Bro. R. B. Dutton was then chosen to act as auditor the ensuing year.

The treasurer of the Iowa Union State conference, P. F. Willoughby, reports the following amounts received and expended at the West Irving campmeeting. The items will appear in the Conference Record. For material used on camp ground, freight on tent, locating grounds, etc, $51.20. Receipts from various sources, $75.23; leaving a balance in the treasury of $14.03.

A vote of thanks was then given to Bro. G. S. Williams for the use of the grounds free of charge. Moved, That the proceedings of this conference be sent for publication to the A. C. Times, World's Crisis, and the RESTITUTION.

Iowa Conference Report.

The annual conference of the Church of God in Iowa assembled at West Irving, Tama county, Iowa, on Thursday evening, Sept. 21, at which time Brother G. M. Myers, of Plymouth, Ind., addressed the congregation.

At 10:30 a. m., Friday, we again assembled, and held an investigation meeting, which was enjoyed and was continued in the afternoon. In the evening Brother G. M. Myers spoke again.

On Saturday, at 9 a. m., we met for conference business. Brother J. T. Prime, our president, being absent, Dr. White was called to the chair.

On motion a committee of arrangements was appointed by the chair, consisting of Brethren L. Marsh, Wm. Eychaner, and J. Steffes.

The committee appointed to meet with the general union state conference report their action, which has been reported by Brother J. F. Willcox, in the RESTITUTION, and I will not rehearse.

On motion Brother A. J. Eychaner and Brother G. M. Myers were chosen as a committee to prepare a resolution for presentation to the general union conference; the following was offered and unanimously adopted, viz:

WHEREAS, At the third quarterly conference of the Church of God in Iowa, held at Rock Creek, June 8-10, 1876, a committee was appointed for the object of effecting a union between said conference and the general union state conference; they adopted a resolution proposing an amendment to their constitution, according full liberty of thought and speech to all its members maintaining the essentials of Christian faith and character, and discarding all proscription with regard to the age to come, so-called; and

WHEREAS, Said body took other favorable steps looking toward a union; therefore

Resolved, That we, in conference assembled, do heartily endorse the action of the committee in the steps taken to effect a union, and the Christian manner and favor by which said propositions were received;

Resolved, That we appoint three delegates to attend the next annual meeting of the general union state conference, to represent our interest at that gathering; also a committee of three to bear to them a copy of these resolutions, accompanied by an address containing the sentiments of the Church of God in regard to a permanent union.

A committee was then chosen to present said address, consisting of Brethren J. T. Prime, A. J. Eychaner, and R. J. Hill.

The chair was requested to appoint three delegates to represent us in said meeting. Brethren L. Marsh, J. Carr, and P. P. Cady, were appointed.

Adjourned until 2 o'clock.

Dr. White then delivered a discourse on the subject of faith.

Assembled at 2 p. m., and proceeded to elect officers for the ensuing year, which resulted in the choice of Brother A. J. Eychaner as president, John Fitz as secretary, and Brother J. Carr as treasurer.

Brother G. M. Myers then read an address from the Indiana conference in regard to organization and co-operation, after which it was decided to take up the constitution of the Christian Association of America by articles and act on it. Constitution read by G. M. Myers. Articles 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, adopted; article 7 amended so as to read, "recommended by their local churches or conferences." Article 11, stricken out. Articles 12, 13, 14 and 15, adopted. Article 16, 17, 18, and 19, stricken out. Article 20, adopted. Article 21 amended by inserting 'may,' in lieu of 'shall,' and by striking out sections 4 and 5. Articles 22-3-4-5, adopted. Article 26, amended by inserting "delegates" at annual meeting instead of "churches."

A motion was then carried to strike out the words "home mission," wherever they may occur in the constitution, and insert "executive committee" in its place.

Committee of arrangements were then instructed to recommend time and place of holding our first quarterly meeting.

Adjourned until 2 o'clock to-morrow.

In the evening Brother A. J. Eychaner preached from 1 Peter i, 7-13.

At 11 o'clock Sunday morning. Bro. G. M. Myers preached. Subject—What is Man? After this we repaired to the water, and two were baptized into Christ.

At 2:30 p. m. conference convened to finish business.

On motion Brother R. J. Hill was chosen as a delegate to attend the Plymouth meeting.

Voted that we raise $25 or $30 to defray the expense of said delegate, and that the secretary furnish him with a copy of the constitution as above amended.

Committee recommend that our next meeting be held at or near Colo, Story county, Iowa, as Brethren Carr and White may arrange, on the 21st of December, 1876. Report of committee adopted.

On motion, the chair appointed Brother John P. Robinson as solicitor for the general fund of the conference.

On motion we adjourned until Dec. 21, 1876.

Brother Myers remained until Wednesday, and baptized three others into the Name, making five during the meeting.

JOHN FITZ, Secretary.

Sunshine at Home.

Many a child goes astray, not because there is a want of prayer or virtue at home, but simply because home lacks sunshine. A child needs smiles as much as flowers need sunbeams. Children look little beyond the present moment. If a thing pleases, they are apt to seek it; if it displeases, they are apt to avoid it. If home is the place where faces are sour, and words harsh, and fault-finding is ever on the ascendent, they will spend as many hours as possible elsewhere.

Correspondence.

Dear Brethren:—

I am glad to see there is an effort out west to unite believers in the great truths of the Advent of Christ, and leave liberty of speech and action to all who in some points may honestly differ in opinion.

It is well you had but one decanting rules to such a union, no enviable notoriety, in my opinion, though too common in this section. It seems to me there is much more Christian feeling on this subject in England, than in this country, and they certainly make greater progress in the good cause than we do. I take the Rainbow and the Bible Echo; and it is a great gratification to me, to see the truth spreading so fast in my native land. I have no doubt the same results would be seen here, were we equally free from prejudice and bigotry. Against those who may see things from a different point of view, and are willing that all should judge and act for themselves in such matters, without being denounced as heretics. I wish our friends in the east could see how much they stand in their own light, by the unchristian way in which they have so long denounced, and misrepresented those of us, who believe in the future ages, and love to dwell on the good news that they finally believe to be in the Bible And if they are so confidently persuaded we are in error on this subject, why do they and and all refuse to make it a subject of discussion? "Echo answers why?" I have a friend who formerly believed in our views, the sleep of the dead, the destruction of the wicked, etc. He chose to hide his light under a bushel, and now he has no faith in the Bible, or anything else, shut up in "Doubting Castle."

JOSEPH PARRY.

Bro. Editors:

I see by your paper of August 30th, that you are trying to get up a plan for a more extensive organization of all the churches of the Abrahamic faith. I would think that it would be a very good plan if it could be accomplished in love, and faith, and harmony. But it seems to be very hard to come at what is the Abrahamic faith. The writers in the RESTITUTION seem to differ very much upon the great plan of redemption of the human family, or the descendants of Adam. Both parties claim to have the same faith and hope; but in reality they are as far apart as the poles of the earth, for certainly both cannot be right. I was in hope that the discussion would be continued until we would come to some understanding on the subject, but you Editors, put on brakes without giving any notice. Of course you know your own duty best. I have been over 30 years trying to get the truth, and I find it is impossible to come to any conclusion by the confused theories of men and creeds. We must go to the old book itself. I have never been a believer in the one class resurrection, although it is quite popular in this part with a few. If it is true I don't see what sense we can make of Rev. xx: 12, 13, 14, 15. But it is quite evident that this does not transpire till after the thousand years of the reign of those persons who were beheaded because of the testimony of Jesus and because of the word of God; even those who did not worship the beast nor his image, and did not receive the mark on their foreheads nor on their hand, and they lived and reigned with the anointed One the thousand years. See Rev. xx: 4. Some think that the righteous will be received in the first resurrection, but I think that is doubtful, as the book don't say so. It is quite evident that this great time of trouble is not come yet. But it will come at the close of Gentile times. Some think that there will be only the wicked dead raised at the end of the thousand years; it is quite evident from the 15th verse that, there will be some that will have their names in the Lamb's book of life. Dear Brother, I think this doctrine of part resurrection is too limited for the great plan of God in Christ, who willeth that all men be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth; and if this doctrine of the one class rising be true, there will not one in a thousand of the descendents of Adam come out of hades. The good old book tells us hades will give up the dead and death, and the sea will all give up at the sound of the last trumpet, but if it be as some say, that the greater part of the human family will lie in the grave forever, then death and hades will exult in victory through all the bounds of eternity. Some find great fault with orthodox sects in their hell-fire theory. Well, I don't think but that both views are pretty near alike; for one says that the greatest part of the human family will remain in hades on in the grave, and the other says they will remain forever in hades or hell. All the difference is the one say that they are dead and the other say they are alive. But it is quite evident that the unjust will not be left for ever in the grave, for they will be brought forth to judgement, and if found unworthy, are to be cast into the lake of fire which is the second death. Rev. xx: 14. Psalms xxxvii: 20. Mal. iv: 1, 3.

A fair chance believer.

JOHN JAMES.

The Michigan Meeting.

This meeting was to have been held at Jamestown, commencing Sept. 29th as first announced. Afterward it was postponed one week, as was said by my consent. I did not mean to be so understood. But as it was deemed impracticable to hold the meeting at the last date, we requested Bro. Myers by letter, to come at the time first announced if he could, and change the notice to correspond; but if he could not come at that time to take up the appointment. We waited for the paper until Tuesday before the meeting, but did not receive it. We did not know whether the appointment was changed or taken up. But to settle the matter, we, upon our own responsibility, gave notice by cards, that the meeting would commence Friday Sept. 29th At the time appointed a goodly number from abroad came together. Many more than we expected, from the confused notice which had been given. Meadow, Lowell, Vergennes Fruitport, Holland, Byron and Grand Rapids were well represented.

On Friday evening, after the usual greetings and congratulations, Bro. Miller gave us a good discourse on prayer, from the instructions of Christ in the sixth chapter of Matthew. He very earnestly urged the duty of prayer, but in all our prayers he thought we should be governed by the instructions of the word. On Saturday morning we engaged for an hour and a half in social conference, without a moment of unoccupied time during the meeting, after which, Bro. Miller spoke from 2 Cor. 6: 1., "We then, as workers together with God." He said the church is God's building; God's husbandry, the soil to be cultivated. That the ministry are the builders under God, the cultivators of this soil. That they should take heed how they build on the foundation that has been laid.

In the afternoon I spoke on Christian union as set forth in the savior's prayer, John xvii: 20, 22. I called attention to three questions suggested in the text.

1. How did Christ and the Father become one? This is important for us to understand, as it is the basis of the reunion of the saints with Christ and the Father, and with each other. I said that Christ and the Father became one by the covenant God made with Abram and his seed after him. That in all covenants the minds of the parties must meet in the objects of the covenant. This brings the parties together, it makes them one. This is the way Christ and the Father became one.

2. How are Christians to be with Christ and the Father? By accepting the same covenant. This makes them one with Christ and the Father, as they are one.

3. How are Christians to be one with each other? By making a covenant with each other concerning the Gospel, as Christ and the Father became one by making a covenant with each other concerning the Gospel. And in this way they will become one as Christ and the father are one, and on the same plan.

In the evening Bro. Miller preached on the parable of the sower. He presented a very fresh good view of the subject. Sunday morning we had a very good conference meeting for about an hour, after which, O. R. L. Crosier occupied a couple of hours. In his introductory lesson he gave especial emphasis to this passage. Rom. xvi: 17. "Now I beseech you, brethren mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them." The subject of his discourse was the church. He said that the church is a congregation of believers. That there is but one church recognized in the Bible, that it is made up of the body of Christ, that their names may be enrolled on the church book, or they may not be enrolled. That they are not voted into the church, neither are they voted out of it. He said that a member cannot be compelled to stay in the church, or go out of the church. That he is at liberty to follow Christ or not to follow him as he chooses. He said there should be Elders to preside at its meetings, and look after its spiritual interests, and Deacons to look after its finances. He said that the church should be very slow to introduce any measure that all sound minded members could not agree to.

In the afternoon I spoke from the words "Hear ye him." Matt. xvii: 5. In this passage God said, "hear ye him," Moses said, "hear ye him" and Christ said "Teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have said unto you." I asked the following questions: What did Christ say when he began to preach? Mark 1: 14, 15. What did he continue to teach? Luke viii: 1. What did he teach after his resurrection? Acts 1: 3. What did he send his Apostles to teach? Luke ix: 2. What did he say must be preached in all the world? Matt. xxiv: 14. What did Christ say we must do? Matt. vi: 33. What must we pray for? Matt. vi: 10. What must we believe? Mark xvi: 16. What did Christ promise? Luke xii: 32; xxii: 29. When did he say we should recieve it? Luke xix: 12, 15. Matt. xix: 29-xxv: 31. 2 Tim. iv: 8. What did he say the kingdom is? Matt. xxv: 34. For what object did he promise it. Rev. iii: 21; ii: 26; Matt. xiii: 41. What did he say would be its final condition? Matt. xiii: 41, 43; Matt. xxv: 31, 32, 34; Matt. vi: 10.

In the evening Bro. Miller preached upon the invitation of the Spirit and the bride. Rev. xxii: 17. He gave a very good exhortation in harmony with the spirit and instruction in his text. The congregation was large Saturday evening, Sunday and Sunday evening. We hope that the effort made and the seed sown will bear fruit of the spirit. JOEL A. SIMONDS.

We are glad to learn by the above report that the meeting in Michigan was a success. It was not our intention to disappoint the brethren; but supposing the postponement of the meeting was satisfactory, I left home for Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin, and did not receive a notice of the intention to hold the meeting as first contemplated—Sept. 28th, till it was too late to reach the place. We will be glad to meet with them at some time in the future when it may be convenient.

It concerns us to hasten out of our natural state lest death surprise us in it.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

J. M. Stephenson's address is now 342 Warren Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

J. M. Stephenson will preach at Borgat's corners, Ind., the last Saturday and Sunday in October, and near Paris, Ill., as Brother Young may arrange, the first Sunday in November.

Can remain at Borgat's Corners until the middle of the following week. Can commence at Paris on Friday evening before the second Sunday in November.

J. M. Stephenson will dedicate the church at Tuscola City, Wisconsin, next Sunday.

The congregation near Severance, Doniphan Co., Kansas, will hold a meeting over the third and fourth Sundays in October, 1876. Preaching brethren are invited. We look for Clover, Kinney, Adams and I Pierson. Come, others, if you can, both brethren and friends to the cause. Part of the meeting will be at Severance, and part at Syracuse school house, two miles south of Severance. The meeting commences on Saturday night before the third Sunday in October, 1876.

S. P. RUNKLE.

There will be a conference meeting of the brethren of the Church of God at the Freed school house, commencing on the Friday before the second Sunday in October, ten miles southwest of Girard, Crawford Co., Kansas.

We hope that Brethren Kinney, Hayden, Butts, Bridger, Hobbs, Foore and Pickett, of the preaching brethren will be with us, and all others who can come. Any one coming on the cars should write to me, and I will meet them at Girard. Come, brethren, as this is the central point for the people of this county, and thousands throng the centennial exhibition. Let us meet in the name of the soon-coming King who will certainly all the centennial that ever may will be. Come one, come all. Let nothing but sickness keep you from coming. We will do all in our power to make you comfortable while you are here.

E. TAYLOR.

Girard, Crawford Co., Kansas.

Notice is here given to the brethren of the Abrahamic faith in South-eastern Missouri, and South-western Kansas to meet in conference with the Church of God worshipping on Indian Hill, Cedar county, Kansas, near Myers Station, M. K. & T. R. R., commencing Friday, Oct. 27, 1876, at 7 o'clock p. m.

The object of this conference is the propagation of the Gospel of Christ, the establishment of Gospel order among believers in Christ, to take action under the Constitution of the Christian Association of America, the duty of supporting our papers—the RESTITUTION and Sunshine and all necessary business that may be presented for action. The church worshipping on Indian Hill will be glad to meet all the conference all lovers of church order, all that are not tired of preaching the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ and hearing them preached, that is satisfied with the Gospel of this dispensation.

I wish to say, in justice to those who chose me to call this meeting, that it is are but few of the faith living near the place of meeting, and those few though rich in faith are poor in this world's goods. Let us go up, then, to this meeting, as the JEWS did to their feast of tabernacles.

By order of the church.

J. W. LOVELESS.

FORT SCOTT, KAN., Sept. 5.

Charity.

In the hour of keenest sorrow,
In the hour of deepest woe,
Wait not for the coming morrow,
To the sad and sorrowing go;
Make it thy sincerest pleasure
To administer relief,
Freely opening thy treasures
To assuage a brother's grief.

Go and seek the orphan sighing,
Seek the widow in her pain;
As on mercy's pinions flying,
Go dispel the darkest learn:
Seek the stranger sad and weary,
Pass not on the other side,
Though the task be sad and dreary,
Heeding not the scorn of pride.

Go with manners unassuming,
In a meek and quiet way,
O'er the fallen o'er presuming,
Though thy brother sadly stray:
'Tis a Savior's kind compassion,
'Tis his righteousness alone,
All unmerited salvation
That around thy path has shone.

When thy heart is warmly glowing
With the sacred love of prayer,
Be thy works of kindness flowing
Not as with a miser's care;
Duty's cry shall be thy watchword,
Pity drop the heavy tear,
Always toward the fallen cherish
Sympathy and love sincere.

Destiny of the Wicked.

"What shall the end be of them that obey not the Gospel of God?" 1 Peter iv: 17. Many and conflicting are the theories of men, relative to the destiny of the finally impenitent.

One class holding to the view that all men without an exception, will finally be made "holy and happy." Another class presents, as "the chief corner stone" of their theology, the revolting and God-dishonoring doctrine of endless misery. The former view (based as it is, upon the false assumption of man's present immortality,) cannot be harmonized with God's justice, neither can the latter be harmonized with His mercy. There is still another view, which, if true, effectually scatters to the winds, the theories above alluded to, of "endless happiness" or "misery." I refer to the Bible view, held and promulgated, both in England and America by men of undoubted ability and learning. The Bible for me, is sufficient. I accept it as true. And cannot, with love and reverence to its Author, present one cheering ray of hope to those who persist in allis of sin and unbelief. They have no hope. 1 Thess. iv: 13; Eph. ii: 12.

Neither will I cast a libel upon the character of God, by telling my fellowmen that God designs to punish the mass of His creatures, with the most excruciating pain, throughout the endless "Ages to come." At the same time, telling them "God is love." 1 John iv: 8, 16. Could they believe both statements? Reason revolts at the idea of such a vindicative tyrant. The theory of "endless misery" is well calculated to drive men into Atheism. We do not however, screen the guilty. Justice and mercy go hand in hand. "The wicked shall not go unpunished;" but what is the punishment? Is it "endless misery?" Or is it endless "death" and "destruction?" "The ways of sin is death." Rom. vi. 23. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Ezek. xviii. 4, 20. "Sin when it is finished, bringeth forth death." James vii. 15; v. 20. "He that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption." Gal. vi. 7, 8. "Where are the dwelling places of the wicked? Have ye not asked them that go by the way? And do ye not know their tokens. That the wicked is reserved to the day of destruction? They shall be brought forth to the day of wrath." Job xxi. 29, 30; Dan. xii. 2; John v. 28, 29; Acts xxiv. 14, 15. "But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume; into smoke they shall consume away." Psa. xxxvii. 20. "But the transgressors shall be destroyed together." Chap. xxxviii. "God shall likewise destroy thee forever, he shall take thee away, and pluck thee out of thy dwelling place, and root thee out of the land of the living." Psa. lii. 5. "Thou castest them down into destruction." Psa. lxxiii. 17, 19. "When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed forever." Psa. xcii. 7. "The Lord preserveth all them that love him: but all the wicked will he destroy." Psa. cxlv. 20. "The perverseness of transgressors shall destroy them." Prov. xi. 3. "Destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity." Prov. x: 29. "Whoso despiseth the word shall be destroyed." Prov. xiii. 13. "Destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity." Prov. xxi. 15. "He that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy." Prov. xxix. 1. "And the destruction of the transgressors and of the sinners shall be together, and they that forsake the Lord shall be consumed." "For our God is a consuming fire." Not simply a scorching fire. Isa. i. 28; Heb. xii. 29. "And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people." Acts iii. 23. They are as "vessels of wrath fitted to destruction." Rom. ix. 22; ii. 1-10. "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy." 1 Cor. iii. 17. "For when they shall say, peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them." Thess. v. 3. The wicked, at Christ's coming, "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." 2 Thess. i. 8–10. "Whose end is destruction." Phil. iii. 19. In the two last citations, we have a direct answer to Peter's inquiry: "What shall the end be of them that obey not the Gospel of God?" Their "end is destruction" and not salvation. It is "death" and not life. They are to "be consumed" or "destroyed and that without remedy." It will be a simultaneous destruction of all the ungodly. They "shall be destroyed together" in Gehenna-fire, called "the second death." Matt. xiii. 40–42; v. 22, 29, 30; Rev. ii. 11; xx. 6, 14; xxi. 8. They are "as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed." 2 Pet. ii. 1, 12. The proud and "all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them and neither root nor branch." Mal. iv. 13. "He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Matt. iii. 12. They "shall be cut off from the earth." Prov. ii. 21, 22; x. 30; xi. 31. Psa. xxxvii. 9, 22, 28, 34, 38. It is but a problem of loss or gain. The wicked loose what the righteous gain. The one gains "eternal life," the other does not. Rom. vi. 23. The one gains the earth, as an endless home, the other does not. Matt. v. 5; Psa. xxxvii. 9, 11, 22, 29, 34; iii. 5; Prov. ii. 21, 22; x. 30. In short, the one shall gain an immortal existence, on the earth renewed, and share with Christ all the glories of the ever-unfolding ages of eternity. Rom. ii. 7; Dan. xii. 2; 1 Cor. xv. 51, 55; Luke xx. 34–36. While the wicked shall be removed into non-existence! "They shall be driven from light into darkness, and chased out of the world." "Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more." Psa. x. 4, 35. "For yet a little while and the wicked shall not be." Psa. xxxvii. 10. They will have no existence whatever, either of happiness or misery. Their very being will be blotted out of the universe of God. Psa. lxix. 28; Rev. iii. 5. "As the whirlwind passeth, so is the wicked no more." Prov. x. 25. "They shall be as nothing, and as a thing of naught." Isa. xli. 11, 12; Jer. x. 24. "They shall be as though they had not been." Obadiah 16th verse. Then all the remaining inhabitants of earth "shall be righteous." Isa. lx. 21. Then throughout the vast universe of God will be heard the grandest notes of praise that has ever been sung by created beings. Psa. v. 9, 10, 13. The wails of the lost will not then be heard. They shall be hushed forever in the silence of "the second death." To the sinner I would say "Flee from the wrath to come." Escape for your life. Let "the goodness of God," (in placing within your reach the means of gaining an endless existence of felicity,) "lead you to repentance." Rom. ii. 1-9; 2 Pet. iii. 9. "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon. Isa. lv. 6, 7. "Depart from evil and do good, and dwell forevermore." Psa. xxxvii. 27, 29; xxxiv. 14; Isa i. 16, 20; Amos v. 14, 15; Rom. xii. 9. O sinner, in the name of the Master, arise. Bestir yourself. Shake off the lethargy that binds you to "death" and destruction. "Let nothing come between you and Christ" God has set before you life and death. Choose life. Deut. xxx. 19. "Lay hold on eternal life." 1 Tim. vi. 11, 12, 19. Think, Oh! think, "eternal life" is to be lost or won. An endless existence in God's presence, where there is "fulness of joy," and at his right hand where "there are pleasures forevermore." Psa. xvi. 11. Will you, can you barter these endless pleasures for sinful pleasures, which are but for a season? Heb. xi. 24-26. Jesus offers you "a crown of life," will you accept it? Rev. ii. 10. He offers to share the glories of his throne with you, can you refuse it? Rev. iii. 21; Matt. xix. 28; Luke xxii. 29, 30; 2 Tim. ii xii. Those that overcome shall be permitted "to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Rev. ii. 7. They will obtain an entrance into the city whose walls are of jasper, whose gates are of pearl, and whose streets are of gold! They "shall inherit all things." Rev. xvi. 7. The crown, the white robe, the victors song, the best society earth ever knew, may all be yours, if you to decide it. According to your decision, so it will be. "The life that now is" soon will have vanished away. Hence the uncertainty of life, should in thundertones, admonish us of the absolute necessity of a preparation, that we may obtain and enjoy the life "which is to come." "Search the Scriptures," believe and obey them, and when the reign of death is over, the bliss of immortality will be yours. John v. 39; Rom ii. 6, 7; Rom. v. 14; 1 Cor. xv. 26, 55.

AUSTIN CURTIS.

A Letter From Mrs. Alexander Campbell.

An article from your pen in the Christian Messenger of March 10th headed, "Our Insignia, the Holy Scriptures," attracted my attention and greatly interested me. The mind and pen guided by the inspired, infallible word, cannot fail to impart wisdom, and its instructions transcend all that could be gained from books that have been written from time immemorial by the wisest sages and philosophers the world ever saw. The fountain is always higher than the stream springing from it, so with the Author of the Holy Scriptures; he is the unfailing fountain of life and light eternal to man! All of the grandest libraries of earth are but the figments of bewildered, distracted imaginations, not a jot or a tittle of them worthy of being relied up in comparison with the heaven-inspired, heaven-bequeathed legacy to man—the Bible! Inspired prophets and apostles have handed down to us the history and origin of man, what he is, and what his destiny will be through the ages of eternity? And not all the cavils of infidel men, nor all the malice of the great adversary of God and man that has now been at work since the fall of our first parents in Paradise, have been able to controvert its truths or set them aside!

These sublime truths have enlightened the world in ages past, and will continue to be the only true source of light and life spiritual, the joy eternal to poor, lost, ruined humanity, through all succeeding years, until the second advent of our adorable Redeemer into this dark world of untold woe shall close the scene and institute a "new heaven and a new earth, in which righteousness shall dwell forever."

But my brother, I feel impelled to advert to another engrossing and most startling topic that has appeared in a still later issue of your paper, entitled, "The Crack of Doom." The interviewing that took place lately with a French savant in regard to the destruction of our planet, mother earth, being from all the signs of the times near at hand. It appears from what he says that he is not a religious personage. "As a rule, I despise priestcraft, and I resent the interference of religion with science." But he acknowledges that the signs of the last day coincide with his views of science, after quoting from the New Testament, "and there shall be signs in the sun, and the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring; the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of heaven shall be shaken." It seems to me that we are on the very border of the era thus indicated. In fact, both science and revelation agree in declaring the advent of eternity (the Lord Jesus Christ) to be, so to speak, at our very door." This truly awful and grand foregoing topic was dwelt upon by the apostles in their days. Numberless references are made to it throughout the New Testament Scriptures. But especially read the discourse of the apostle Peter, the third chapter of his second letter, and all must acknowledge the solemnity of that day!

But it is said, "of that day and of that hour we know not." True it has been so said, but as it was the case in regard to the first advent of our Lord, there was a general expectation, a longing, and a looking for his coming without being aware of the precise day and hour; thousands are now looking anxiously for his coming, and may it not be now similar in regard to his second advent? Is anything too hard for God to accomplish, who made the heavens and the earth with all their tenantries? The same word that deluged this planet in the days of Noah by a single fiat can reduce it to ashes.

Dear Mr. Campbell, in often discoursing upon this theme, used to say, "that all that would be necessary would be for the Creator to separate the gases, and the great seas would ignite and burn like inflammable oil, and boil like a cauldron," so that the upheaving by earthquakes on this little globe of ours will not be necessary if God should set the ocean on a blaze. But the views of some excellent christians are, that the millennium must first come, and the Jews restored to their ancient land; that they will be gathered back to worship the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as formerly. It is prophesied of them that "kings and queens should become their nursing mothers and fathers," etc. But as yet to the most devout and inquiring minds, these rest dubiously. It was the opinion of Mr. Campbell that the line of prophecy ran out in 1866, though he was exceedingly cautious in expressing himself, and never dogmatically affirming, as many have done.

Sir Isaac Newton asserted "that before a certain prophecy could or would be accomplished, there must be a mode of traveling discovered at the rate of 40 miles per hour." What that prophecy to be accomplished was, I never saw stated. But from all of the wonderful discoveries and events taking place, we certainly do live in "perilous" and most momentous times!

Let us, dear brother, who have professed to believe and to have received into our hearts, the ennobling, sublime, comforting heaven-taught doctrine of our Lord and Savior Jesus the Christ; yes, the simple gospel he preached in Jerusalem, and also his inspired apostles, and which has been left upon record for the salvation of a lost and ruined world, freely given as the morning dew, to all who will accept and obey the divine mandates. Yes, let us be ready like the "wise virgins, keeping our lamps well filled with oil, trimmed and burning;" thus we shall be ready to meet our divine Master. If we should be so honored as to meet him, majestically descending from the throne of his glory, attended with "his Father's glory, his own glory surrounding him, and that of the hosts of holy angels," to come and take us up to the New Jerusalem! or should delay be a little longer, so that our mortal bodies shall be consigned to the silent tomb! may we be awakened by the trump of God to a glorious resurrection from the dead, robed in the resplendent robe of Christ's righteousness! For "this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."

The Wine Cup.

How many men, (old and young) do we find traveling the road to destruction, by tarrying at the "wine cup," the card table and the ball room, where all manner of vice prevails. Let us look about us and see what is transpiring. Here we see drunkenness and gambling with all its viciousness, and there murder in every form that can be imagined. And what is the cause of all this? It is because people give way to their evil passions instead of trying to control and keep them under. Now, these things ought not so to be, but we should resist the devil (evil passions) and he will flee from us. Let us then take heed to let the unclean thing alone, and listen to what Solomon says about this matter. "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, (and) when it moveth itself aright." For "at last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." And again he asks the questions, "Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? who hath redness of eyes?" And he answers thus: "They that tarry long at the wine; (and) they that go to seek mixed wine." Prov. xxiii. 31, 32; xxiii. 29, 30. Is it not evident, that Solomon, the wise man, saw these vicious habits in his day, by the description he gives? Yea; to be sure. And Solomon speaks again on thus wise: "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." And, why "not wise," because it (this poison distilled liquor) "takes away the heart" (or understanding). Hosea iv. 11. Then their "eyes behold strange women, and their heart uttereth perverse things." Prov. xxiii. 33. What is the consequence when they "have erred through wine, and through strong drink are out of the way? Isa. xxviii. 7. Habakkuk, the prophet says, "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, and puttest thy bottle to him, and makest him drunken," etc. Yes, "woe unto him," for he (the drunkard) not only loses his character and pious principles in this life, but he is not permitted to enter the kingdom of God, where all will be peace and harmony, with Moses, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, also the redeemed and immortalized saints. Some may say it looks awful to think that a drunkard will not be saved, but the inspired Apostle Paul says they will not. 1 Cor. vi. 10. It behooves us then, that we take heed to what the Savior says, watch and pray, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh." Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his household to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing. Verily I say unto you, that he shall make him ruler over all his goods. But, and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, my Lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow servant, and to eat and drink with the drunken; the Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Matt. xxiv. 44–51. Will this be otherwise? It seems not. For "as it was in the day of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man." "They did eat, they drank, they married wives," etc., "and the flood came and destroyed them all." Matt xxiv. 37-39; Luke xvii. 26-30. So will it be in the end of the world when the Lord will come taking vengeance of them that know not God, and obey not the Gospel, etc. 2 Thess. i. 8.

Living Unto God.

The dead are utterly and absolutely blotted temporarily from actual being. How can they be raised. The just in all ages live unto God through Christ, (for Christ is the hope of the world); the unjust unto condemnation and death.

What is living unto God? Simply in the mind, memory and purpose of God alone they exist. Actually they have no existence; personally, they are as though they had not been. For the dead know not anything. All go unto the same place. All are of the dust, and all turn to dust again; and the spirit (ruah—breath or wind,) shall return unto God who gave it. But God preserves the pattern or identity of the man in his memory. For he knoweth our frame, he remembereth we are dust. (Rank materialism this.) The body is built up of atoms. An atom is the smallest quantity of a substance that can enter into combination to produce the molecule. A molecule is a group of atoms united by chemism, and capable of existing by itself. Atoms are indestructible, therefore can not be annihilated. Molecules are susceptible of endless change, and it is a law of chemistry that elementary substances combine only in the formation of new substances by chemical force or atomic weight. That is, compound atoms are formed from single atoms, (making the molecules,) but only in certain proportions,—for example: 71 parts of chlorine unite with 32 parts of sulphur, and with 56 parts of iron; but 32 to 56 is the ratio in which sulphur combines with iron,—according to the substances forming the combination. Underlying this is a fact that atoms of each substance differ as to size, weight and form. The divisibility may not be susceptible of demonstration, (yet Sir Wm. Thompson says if we conceive a sphere of water as large as a pea to be magnified to the size of the earth, each molecule being magnified to the same extent, the magnified structure would be coarser than a heap of small lead shot, but less coarse grained than a heap of wooden cricket balls); but infinite diversity in nature assures that fact. Such being the case, the vital force of each human body must select only such atoms as are appropriate to itself. All other are rejected, coming from what source they may. The atoms assimilated into one human body cannot be into that of another. Infinite diversity is the law of nature. The identity of one cannot be absorbed into that of another, or the atoms forming the identity annihilated. Two atoms of different substances are no more alike than two faces. The law of infinite diversity inevitably determines the identity. The very hairs of our head are numbered. And the little sparrow when it falls is remembered; and are ye not of more value than many sparrows? God has resolved to resurrect or reproduce them; they live in his purpose. As to whether a resurrection is possible under the existing combinations into which man may have seemed to have passed is simply a question of God's power. Can he restore to the atoms the vital force by which they were originally brought together and made to cohere? That is, can he exactly reproduce a being who has vanished from actual existence? The Bible says he can. If then he can give vital force to the atoms that originally were made to cohere, that is resurrection. And where vital force is stayed (those atoms make the dust and ashes under the feet in that day. Mal. iv. 3.) that is non resurrection. It is not the creation of a new being, any more than the creation of a new earth, but a recreation or the giving vital force to the old one. Man vanisheth away, and where is he? Yet Job truly said: In my flesh (not ruah—breath or, wind) shall I see God.

O. H. ADAMS.

Truth is truth though all men forsake it—it still remains unchanged, the same, and its own excellence will recommend it, even though the conduct of its professors does not.

It is very common for reprovers to be unjustly upbraided as usurpers.

It is a matter of comfort to the honest, that God knows and appreciates their honesty.

If God be our enemy, all creation is at war with us, not excepting frogs and flies.

Negro Race.

Is Africa without her heraldry of science and of fame? The only probable account which can be given of the negro tribes is, that, as Africa was peopled, through Egypt, by three of the descendants of Ham, they are the offspring of Cush, Misraim, and Put. They found Egypt a morass, and converted it into the most fertile country in the world. They reared its pyramids, invented its hieroglyphics, gave letters to Greece and Rome, and through them, to us. The everlasting architecture of Africa still exists, the wonder of the world, though in ruins. Her mighty kingdoms have yet their record in history. She has poured forth her heroes on the field, given bishops to the church, and martyrs to the fires; and, for negro physiognomy, as though that should shut out the light of intellect, go to your national museum; contemplate the features of the colossal head of Memnon, and the statues of the divinities on which the ancient Africans impressed their own forms, and there see, in close resemblance to the negro feature, the mold of those countenances which once beheld, as the creations of their own immortal genius, the noblest and most stupendous monuments of human skill, and taste, and grandeur. In the imperishable porphyry and granite is the unfounded and pitiful slander put licly, and before all the world, refuted. There we see the negro under cultivation. If he now presents a different aspect, cultivation is wanting. That solves the whole case; for even now, when education has been extended upon the poor and undoubted negro, it has never been bestowed in vain. Modern times have witnessed, in the persons of African negroes, generals, physicians, philosophers, poets, linguists, mathematicians, and merchants, all eminent in their attainments, energetic in enterprise, and honorable in character; and even the mission schools in the West Indies exhibit a quickness of intellect, and a thirst for learning, to which the schools of this country do not always afford a parallel.

Mourning in the East.

The mourning customs of the east have not materially changed since the days when Joseph went up to bury his father in the land of Canaan. Professional mourning women announce the death by a shriek, shrill and piercing; they weep, they beat their breasts, they tear their hair. The entire household join with them in noisy and obtrusive demonstration of sorrow. The outer garment is some times replaced with a coarse robe or shawl of sackcloth. Oftener it is rent in the distraction of grief. But a reasonable regard to economy is not forgotten on these occasions. The undertaker first goes to every mourner, and carefully rips the central seam of his robe three or four inches down the breast. The rending of the garment is thereafter only the ripping of a seam; a needle and a little thread easily repair the damage. The sacred tears of affection are treasured up in a bottle. For this purpose the master of ceremonies presents each weeping friend with a piece of cotton-wool with which to dry his eyes. This cotton is preserved, and the tears wrung from it into the tear bottles, as a future and affectionate remedy in the last hours of life. Thus a carefully pre-arranged extravagance of grief prepares for and accompanies the last hours of life. When the time of burial arrives, which in that warm climate is never long delayed, the body is dressed in its best attire, and laid, not in a coffin, but upon an open bier, perhaps adorned with flowers, and so borne, by the Turks in silence, by the Christians with softly chanting hymns, to its last resting place. Yet even here economy is not forgotten; every valuable article of clothing is taken from the remains, which are then buried, without a coffin, and in a shallow grave.—Van-Lennep in Harper's Monthly.

Correspondence.

I have been attending the Nevada Baptist Association, and especially to their preaching of "total depravity," and "the inner man of Adam sinning in the Garden," and of "immortal souls being renewed, or born again," and other phrases as much unscriptural. Hence, I purpose on next Sunday to make this proposition, the N. B. Sunday School to be placed in the hands of the Superintendent. That the first scholar of the Nevada Baptist Sunday School that will find in the Scriptures commonly called the Bible, either of the following sentences or parts of a sentence, as "total depravity," "immortal soul," or "never dying soul," and give the chapter and verse to the Superintendent, shall receive a two dollar greenback as a reward for their search. I, as a matter of course, do not include my three children in the proposition above. S. S. HAYDEN.

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It now advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations, the restoration of Israel, the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and baptism as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The Second Death.

A REPLY TO S. R. BRAIDAN.

Question—Can any die the second death unless they begin to live the second life, and how do they begin to live the second life? Read Ephesians ii. 4, 5. Compare Rom. vi. 2. Is not this the way to begin the second life? How do they die the second death? Is it not by apostatizing from the faith? If so, is it a literal death? Rev. iii. 1.

ANSWER.

Your quotations as arranged lead me to conclude that you substitute the figurative for the literal in the second death. You forget that the terms first and second are relative and must refer to subjects of the same kind. You could not say "this is my first son;" if all the balance were girls. In like manner it is triumphantly proved that the six days of Genesis were periods of twenty-four hours each if the seventh was which "the Lord God hallowed" as a sabbath. The first day, the second day,—the seventh day, imply that the whole of the series were of the same species.

So a first death implies at least a second of the same kind. Hence your phraseology is imperfect when you call the life on which the Christian enters after baptism "a second life." It is proper to call it a new life but not a "second." So if there is such a thing as "spiritual death" in the commonly received meaning of the term and, after entering on the new life, a man should apostatize he certainly would have died twice: spiritually or metaphorically. However the passage in Jude 12 which speaks of some being "twice dead" we think is correctly rendered by the Diaglott "unfruitful for two seasons." Nevertheless the ungodly are everywhere spoken of in the Scriptures as dead; if then this death is merely a state of sin or "spiritual death," and the second death is second in relation to this, it of course must be a second state of sin which can only follow the new or what you call the "second" life. But if you allow the first death to be a literal one the second must be also. That it is so is evident from the fact that it is the punishment of sin. Would you concede that the wages of sin is apostacy? Would you concede that to apostatize is to be "cast into a lake of fire?" The only Scriptural author who uses the term, himself defines it to be a lake of fire. Shall we not believe him?

But how are we to understand the expression "dead in trespasses and sins"? In what sense are the wicked dead while literally alive? I deny that the ordinarily received idea is correct, and consider it as one of the fruits of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. The idea is that a state or condition of sin is called death. I concede that the sinner while in that state is said to be dead, but that state is not itself called death. The distinction is a nice one but an important one. To illustrate. If I say "The married state is one of happiness" do I mean that they are identical? so that it would be proper to say that every happy man is also a married man? My meaning is very apparent it needs no explanation. The married state and the happy state are two different states but they generally coincide. So the sinful state and the death state are two entirely different ones yet he who is in a sinful state is also in the death state. Now it remains to show how a man who is alive can be properly called dead. Of course it is only by a metaphorical use of the word that it can be true. A few instances of its use in Scripture will enforce and illustrate my idea better than a volume of writing without them. The angel said to Abimelech "Behold, thou art but a dead man for the woman which thou hast taken." Gen. xx. 3 Why? 7th verse "if thou restore her not thou shalt surely die."

"The Egyptians were urgent upon the people that they might send them out of the land in haste; for they said, we be all dead men." Ex. xii. 33. Why? Because the angel had slain the firstborn throughout the land and they were certain that unless this strange people left the country they would all perish.

God said to Adam "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Why? because his death was certain; none could stay God's hand, but he would drive him from the life-perpetuating tree and he would finally return again to dust. He was judicially dead, i. e. a condemned criminal awaiting execution.

"She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth" said Paul 1 Tim. v. 6. Why? Because "the end of those things is death." "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood ye have no life in you" said the Life-giver. John vi. 53. Why? Because there was no way of escaping from death. "If a man keep my sayings he shall never taste of death." John viii. 52. Why? Because "I will raise him up at the last day."

Here you see that the certainty of an event justifies one in speaking of it in a figure as already having taken place. The ungodly are dead because they are under condemnation of death and the event is certain. The righteous have "passed from death unto life" and "never taste of death" because "there is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus" and they "sleep in Jesus" waiting "the last day" when he will "raise them up." Jesus said of Lazarus "He sleepeth." Of the ruler's daughter, "She is not dead but sleepeth." Why? Because he purposed to restore them to life. Their lives had suffered but a temporary interruption. Of Lazarus he said "this sickness is not unto death," and yet he had been dead four days when he woke him out of sleep.

It seems to me that the principle on which such language was used cannot be mistaken. The temporary character of the life we now live; of the death we die and a reference to the final condition and its certainty can alone justify it. Hence in this view the righteous never die and the wicked never live:

The death of the righteous is but a brief sleep; they awake to endless life. The life of the wicked is not life, Jesus being witness; "Ye have no life in you" said he. It is but an embryotic state which ultimates in abortion. If raised to judgment they are still but the dead which stand before God. And when consigned to horrors of the lake which burns with fire and brimstone they only drop back again the second time into the death state out of which they have been called for judgment and the life they then have is no more worthy of the name than the temporary passage of the criminal from his cell to the gallows is liberty.

I think the passages which you collate are misunderstood by you from the manner in which you compare them; but if this view of the life and death question is correct, they are not hard to understand. Ephesians ii. 4, 5, 6 reads "But God who is rich in mercy for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace are ye saved) and hath raised us up together, and made us to sit together in the heavenlies (Diaglott) in Christ Jesus." You seem to understand the quickening here spoken of to be the new life in Christ, or spiritual life, and the raising up to refer to "rising to walk in newness of life" from the baptismal grave. I do not agree with you but interpret it by the foregoing principles. When Christ was quickened or made alive from the dead all who will be saved were in him on the principle of faith, precisely as we were all in Adam seminally when he sinned. And, although our actual quickening is yet future, yet, because it is certain, it may be regarded as having taken place "together with Christ." Even as "God who quickeneth the dead and calleth the things which be not as though they were," called himself "the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob," even though they were dead, because their resurrection being certain he regarded them as alive. "They all live unto him." Again "He hath raised us up together" (or exalted us) "and made us sit together in the heavenlies in Christ Jesus." Christ was not only quickened but exalted (or raised up) to supreme authority, having sat down on the Father's throne, and we by faith are made to share his glory as certainly as though it had already taken place. That this is what is meant by "sitting in the heavenlies" is clear from what Paul says in the preceding chapter, which see. "Which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead" (or quickened) "and set him at his own right hand in the heavenlies," &c.

But I have already exceeded my limits and for the present must forbear.

Yours for the truth.

Can the Soul be Killed?

"Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear Him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."—Matt. x. 28.

These words are commonly supposed to teach that the essential nature of man resides in his soul, which is said to be a substance quite distinct from the body, which is only, we are told, a machine, constructed for the purpose of enabling the soul to live in, and hold intercourse with, this material world. They are further asserted to imply the indestructibility and deathlessness of the soul, which, it is affirmed, is altogether beyond the reach of any mortal injury, and that the utmost man can do is to destroy the material machine, or body, and effect its separation from the soul, which soars away to some new place, and in a new condition of existence.

Now I ask the candid and intelligent reader on what authority does he suppose that the soul is a distinct substance—a complete organization in itself—and constituting the human personality, apart from the body? Is this extensively prevalent notion derived from the Bible? Will the reader pause to recall any portion of the sacred Scriptures where the soul is so described as combining in itself the essential properties of the human being, and capable of a separate state of existence?

If we are to hold the popular opinions about the human soul, what does our text mean? In reply to this question, I request the reader to examine the parallel passage as recorded in Luke xii. 4, 5: "I say unto you, my friends, be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do; but I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear; fear Him who, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell." In this version of our Lord's words, the word "soul" does not occur; and instead of "are not able to kill the soul," we have the words "have no more that they can do." The meaning, then, is clearly the following: Although wicked men are able to kill the Lord's people, they can do no more than this; they have no power to keep them dead; they cannot destroy the soul or life which the Lord has promised to give his people, by raising them from the dead to die no more.

The word "soul" is to be understood in this passage the same in meaning with the word life; in proof of which I ask the reader's consideration of the following passages which occur in Matt. xvi. 25, 26: "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it, and whosoever will lose his life for my sake find it: for what is a man profited if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Now the word translated life twice in the 25th verse, and soul twice in the 26th verse, is one and the same Greek word in all four places. Why should one word receive different translations in two such closely connected and current texts? The answer is plain. The translators of the Bible held the popular heathen notions about the human soul, and therefore to have used the word "soul" in the 25th verse would have grated upon their ears. "Whosoever will save his soul shall lose it [i. e. life]; and whosoever will lose his soul [i. e. life] for my sake, shall find it." Hence they employed the word "life" in this verse, and the word "soul" in the verse following! But there is evidently no good reason why one Greek word, occurring as it does in this passage four times consecutively, should be translated by two English words. If the reader will substitute the word life in the 26th verse for the word soul, as is done in the previous verse, he will find a natural, and, as I believe, the strictly correct meaning of our Lord's words: "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it, and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it: for what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own life? or what shall a man give in exchange for his life?" What our Lord says here is very plain; "Whosoever will save his life [in this world, at the expense of his duty to me,] shall lose it [in the world to come]. And whosoever will lose his life [in this world] for my sake, shall find it [in the world to come]. For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole [present] world, and lose his own life [in the world to come]? or what shall a man give in exchange for his [future and everlasting] life?" To lose the soul then, does not mean that the soul as a separate being, without a body, goes away to be everlastingly tormented; but means to lose the blessed privilege of endless life. When the soul is lost, the man himself, in his entire and complete nature, is lost or cast away from conscious and endless existence, as [also in the parallel passage to that we are now considering, most clearly represents. "For what is a man advantaged if he gain the whole world and lose himself, or be cast away?" Chap. ix. 25.

The text at the head of these remarks is but partially and imperfectly understood by those who quote it with so much assurance in proof that the soul, as a separate being, cannot, and will not, be ever destroyed. What our Lord says is, that man is not able to kill the soul, or destroy the life which he will give his people; but he himself is able to kill the soul, and cut off the wicked from having endless life. "Fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." And as our Lord warns mankind to fear him as having the power to destroy the whole man in the all-consuming fires of hell, he evidently implies that such is the punishment which he will visit upon the wicked. The miserable subjects of the future punishment will not be perpetuated in conscious sin and suffering, but shall be burnt up as chaff or stubble in the lake of fire which shall flow around the burning world. "The heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men." 1 Peter, chap. iii. v. 7.—Rev. J. Panton Ham.

The Truth in Love.

Some persons speak the truth harshly. They are not corrupt, but they are vindictive. They fancy that the fault and fall which are brought to their notice must be sternly handled. They must cut up the offender by the roots. They must put down the criminal instantly, openly, firmly. They set their teeth, straighten their backs, and proceed to discipline the transgressor. Such individuals are often the very best of men in all other respects save one. They have integrity, courage, consistency, everything but love. They never feel it, however often they read the thirteenth of Corinthians; they never read it, as they and all should always read it, with "love," instead of "charity." If they are teachers, order is heaven's first, last, and only law; any infringement of their half-fine edicts brings forth the rod. How our hand blisters yet in remembrance of the leathern ruler filled with pegs, which used to be laid on a four-year-old palm by as good a woman, and as refined, as the town could boast, who believed in making all the babies in her room sit and act like the oldest of maids and bachelors.

Some pastors get that crazed. We have heard of one who disciplined about half his church out of it, not by the truth he enforced but by the harsh and merely just way of applying it. This cold, hard, relentless adhesion to the truth is not Scriptural; it is the opposite of God's word and way. It is not Christlike. His course was directly the contrary. Before most insulting Pharisees, most debased publicans and harlots, he was faithful and gentle; full of truth; also full of grace. Edwards' terrible sermons are denounced as harsh and cruel, and critics wonder how he dared to frighten people with such horrible pictures of the state of the lost; they wonder too what made his hearers catch hold of their pew doors in their agony, and cry out, "Is there no hope?" It was not the truth that overwhelmed them, it was the spirit in which it was spoken. No man ever spoke the saddest truths from a deeper heart. All his preaching was wrought in love. He was melted with the goodness of God. He pleaded so urgently because he felt so deeply. He spoke the truth in love. So has it been with all great revivalists; not one of them but was strikingly possessed of these two great traits of great souls, truth and love.

Every person should make this state of grace his. You are called to utter the truth. It is often a painful utterance; it is often a surgical operation on a sensitive spirit. Be careful never to utter it unless duty compels. Be careful to utter it in the spirit of love. Take up no railing accusation. Circulate no slander. Talk not about other's faults, merely for the sake of talking. If all these are truths, your uttering them is a lie, for you do it in a false and Christless spirit. Preachers sometimes criticise each other in the spirit of the devil much more than of Jesus. They listen to sermons only to censure; they mention their brothers' names only to condemn. They call it truth when it is only backbiting.—Zion's Herald.

What Will Thou say when He shall Punish Thee. Jer. xiii: 21.

Bro. Reed:

Having listened to a sermon delivered by Mr. Allison, a baptist preacher upon inherent immortality, with the above as his text, and considering his positions unscriptural, we hope you will allow us space in the RESTITUTION for a short review of his discourse. We can find nothing in the text even hinting at inherent immortality or the heathen doctrine of eternal torment. The only other text introduced to sustain his position was the "rich man and Lazarus," but this is admitted to be a parable, and it is an admitted fact that parables should never be used to establish a doctrine, but only to illustrate a point already proven by a plain "thus saith the Lord."

Our reverend speaker said it was only the spirits of the rich man and Abraham. Do spirits have tongues, fingers, &c.? He says "the soul can not die—shall be forever dying but never die." We will give a few texts from the Bible and leave the reader to judge which he will believe, the Bible or heathen fables as taught by Mr. A. "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction." 2 Thess. i: 9. What will be left after a man is utterly destroyed. "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root or branch. And ye shall tread down the wicked, for they shall be ashes under your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts. Mal. iv: 3. Are the wicked still dying after they become ashes under the feet? It does not look to us that this is sufficient proof to satisfy any one who believes the Bible, that the wicked are utterly destroyed, and not eternally tormented in flames of fire, as first taught by heathen philosophers, and advocated by the orthodox churches of the present day. Mr. A. gave as a proof of immortality, that all men desire eternal life. We suppose that all men desire wealth and happiness,—do they obtain it?

Again,—he said that the justice and mercy of God was displayed in the doctrine of eternal torment.

We are unable to see it in that light and thank God there is no such doctrine taught in the Bible.

He said that man received his reward at death;—what does the Bible say upon this point? "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the Prophets and to the saints, and to them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them which destroy (corrupt) the earth." Rev, xi: 18

Here is the proof as to who are immortal; "Who only hath immortality dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto." 1 Tim. vi: 16. Paul, you must be mistaken. Mr. A. says all men are created immortal, and you say God only hath immortality. "His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not, and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them." Job xiv: 21. Mr. A. says the soul in death knows more than we do in this life. Judge ye between his doctrine and the teachings of the Bible. "For in death there is no remembrance of thee, in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" Psalms vi: 5. "But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." Psalms xxxvii: 20. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Psalms cxlvi: 4. We read that in the garden of Eden there was a tree of life, and after the disobedience of our fore parents, they were driven out of the garden, lest they should eat of the tree of life and live forever, and since the gospel era we have Christ, as the tree of life; and all who partake of him, that is believe and obey his gospel, thereby obtain immortality, and live forever. We find the destruction of Sodom and Gomorah, set as an example of God's wrath upon the wicked and they were consumed by "eternal fire." Does any one suppose that the fire is still burning on the sites of those cities? No, they were destroyed, and so it will be with the wicked. We find one text, and only one, in the Bible which even hints at immortality, that is, Gen. iii: 4. His Satanic majesty being the author of that text, we pass it without further notice. From the much talk that we hear from orthodox teachers upon immortality, we would expect to find it upon every page of the Bible, but strange to say, we only find it named five times in the Bible; and here they are, examine for yourselves and see if they prove inherent immortality: "The King eternal, immortal, invisible." 1 Tim. i: 17. "Who only hath immortality." 1 Tim. vi: 16. "Jesus Christ who hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel." 2 Tim. i: 10. "To them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for and glory, honor, and immortality, eternal life." Rom. ii: 7. "For this corruption must put on incorruption, and this mortal immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written. Death is swallowed up in victory. Thanks be to God who has given us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. xv: 53, 54, 57. We see that God only hath immortality, and that we can only obtain it through belief and obedience to the Gospel, why seek for that which we already possess. We hope all who have any desire to know the truth will lay all prejudice aside and read the Bible for themselves.

R. M. SALTS.

Italy's population is, approximately, 27,000,000. Of these 19,000,000, or 73 per cent.—almost in the proportion of three-fourths—cannot read their native language. In thirty of the fifty-six departments this average is exceeded. In some it rises to eighty per cent.; and only one Italian in ten can read! In the city of Rome itself, with its swarms of educated and uneducated priests, monks, and nuns, only five persons in every ten, priests, monks, and nuns included, can read. This suggests what Rome has done, and what she likes to do—for surely she has had her own way here—for the minds of men.—Congregationalist.

THE RESTITUTION

PLYMOUTH, IND.,... NOV. 15, 1876

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞ Brother and sister Chaplin left our city on Monday for the Centennial. They will be absent about three weeks. We wish them abundant success in sight seeing. The railroads have reduced the fare to $14 for the round trip.

☞ From a private note from Bro. Stephenson, we learn that his book entitled "The Great Salvation," will be ready in a short time. His book has been looked for a great while, and we are glad to announce its immediate issue.

☞ The news from Europe is more pacific. Indications are favorable for peace. The conflict in Servia is still going on and the Turks are represented as being successful. It is difficult at this time to say what the result of the present peace negotiations will be.

☞ Dr. A. C. Barry, of Fond Du Lac, Wisconsin, a prominent universalist, has openly renounced universalism. Mr. Barry is a strong man and thinks for himself. Whether he goes over to the endless misery side, or believes with Paul, that "the wages of sin is death," the dispatch does not say.

☞ The Boston Investigator is in hot water about a rumor, to the effect that Thomas Paine's bones have been found in an old house, in England. The Investigator will probably be asking the question of the prophet:—"Can these bones live?" But as that paper believes in no God, it must refuse to accept God's answer.

☞ The last quarterly conference of the Church of God in the state of Indiana will be held with the church at Goodland, Newton county, Indiana, commencing the Friday evening before the second Tuesday in November, 1876. Let there be a general turn out at this meeting. It is designed to continue the meeting during the week following, and longer if the circumstances and interest justify. We expect to attend this meeting.

☞ People have no definite idea of the influence of fanaticism. As an illustration we may refer to one of our brethren whose wife has gone over to a certain "time movement." While the brother was away preaching one Sunday morning, his wife, mother-in-law and father-in-law, dipped his little son three times in a bath tub. While the fanatics think it has prepared the little fellow for glory, he openly protests against such treatment. Baby sprinkling is a figment of the Catholic church and belongs to an age of barbarism. Sensible people know better, but churchcraft makes it necessary.

Russian Territorial Progress.

The advance of Russia in the present century is unexampled in history. Since 1722 she has doubled her territories. Within 80 years she has advanced 350 leagues on the road to Vienna and to Paris; she has swallowed up half of Sweden, and of Poland as much as would make another Austrian empire; she has conquered from Persia about as much as the area of Great Britain. From Turkey she has wrested by successive wars and treaties states about as large as Prussia was before the war of 1866; and we have recently seen her advancing over Central Asia, with accelerated rapidity. To this movement, as against Europe and Turkey, the Crimean war put a stop; and although the barrier raised against it was not impenetrable or insurmountable, it has proved for-ten years effectual.

Trying to Live Without Real Work.

The following from the pen of Horace Greeley is true, and applicable to this day:—"Our people are too widely inclined to shun the quiet ways of productive labor and try to live and thrive in the crooked paths of speculation and needless traffic. We have deplorably few boys learning trades, with ten times as many anxious to 'get into business;' that is to devise some scheme whereby they may live without work. Of the journeymen mechanics now at work in this city, we judge that two-thirds were born in Europe; and the disparity is steadily augmenting. One million families are trying to live by selling liquors, tobaccos, candy, &c., &c., in our cities, who could be spared therefrom without the slightest public detriment; and if these were transferred to the soil, and set to growing grain, meat, wool, &c., or employed in smelting, the metals or weaving the fabrics for which we are still running into debt in Europe, our country would increase its wealth at least twice as fast as now, and there would be far less complaint of 'dull trade' and 'hard times.'"

Dr. Barry.

[Special Telegram to the Chicago Times.]

"ELKHORN, Wis., Oct 30.—The Rev Dr. A. C Barry, whose renunciation of Universalism is announced in to-day's Times by a telegram from Fond du Lac, was interviewed by your reporter here this afternoon, he having just returned from the Fountain city by way of rail. The following is the learned divine's answer to the charge of recantation: While he would make no renunciation of Universalism, he announced to his audiences a new departure in regard to Christ and His atoning sacrifice. We learn that his sermons, as reported gave great satisfaction to one of the largest Christian assemblies ever held in the Congregational house of that city; that it was known that no recantation was to be made, but that the doctrine that he should advance was simply that full regeneration was necessary for final redemption."

The fact then seems to be that Dr. Barry has simply repudiated Ballou Universalism and gone back to the sentiments of Old Father Murray, or what is known as Restorationism. The change we regard as for the better as the sentiments of Hosea Ballou were simply outrageous. All that Dr Barry differs then from the Protestant Evangelical sects is in this particular: that he repudiates eternal misery. Both parties hold to the same intent as to the means necessary to salvation—faith in Christ and repentance. The Doctor thinks that all will ultimately comply with these conditions and thus be saved while his orthodox admirers in Fond du Lac, hold that the number of those who will reap the advantage of the means of salvation will be exceedingly small and the rest——, well we hardly know how to define the faith of the orthodox sects in this particular nowadays. It is Universalism without the name. The old fashioned doctrine of hell-fire has a very slight hold on the popular heart, nowhelt it still remains in their creeds? We congratulate—not the sects with having made a convert, but—Dr. Barry with the fact of the almost universal conversion of the Orthodox world to Universalism. The mountain has come to Mahomet. J. F. A Text for a Sermon and a Sermon for a text.

Some one signing himself H. M. S. but who is a stranger to me, desires that I shall write an article from the text "The wicked borroweth and payeth not, but the righteous showeth mercy and giveth," Psa. xxxvii; 21. I should judge from so singular a request, that some one has borrowed money from him and can't or won't repay it, and he wishes to rebuke him through the columns of our paper; or perhaps he has himself been drawn to borrow, and has fallen into distress and want in these hard times, and is charged by his creditors with dishonesty and knavery, and is pressed to the wall and scandalized and abused by the relentless Shylock, who demands his pound of flesh. If the last is the case, I would say it is better to suffer wrong than to do wrong. You know whether you borrowed through necessity or not. If you borrowed to speculate with and are under the harrow, why grin and bear it like a man, you deserve the scourging you are perhaps receiving; but if through no fault of your own you are financially involved, as often happens, and the hard times, sickness, an increasing family, or a thousand other honest causes have prevented payment, you deserve the sympathy of the thousands of struggling men all over the land who are suffering from similar causes, and I take the liberty to speak for them and myself, when I tender you their sympathy and my own. Your oppressor is probably only one out of thousands of men all over the world, who having been devoted all their lives to money making, and been prospered, have become calloused to human suffering and are incapable of sympathy with their less fortunate brethren. But let me say to you that he deserves your pity rather than your anger, and if you are a Christian you must not cherish feelings of animosity towards him. Poor fellow with all his broad acres and stocks, and bonds, gold and silver, etc., he is not as happy as you are, or may be in your poverty. He only gets his board and clothes out of it all, and you have that. Think of his sleepless nights and anxious days, to all of which you are a stranger. And the most of all poor man, his god Mammon can't save him. This fleeting world is all he can boast of, the world to come with all its glories is hidden from his eyes. No, no, don't envy nor blame him, pity and pray for him. It is possible he may be a professing Christian or even a brother in the church, but this only agravates is offense, and he stands all the more in need of your pity and your prayers. Poor, silly, deceived man. Alas! how many such there are. It is needful that he remember the last clause of your text: "The righteous showeth mercy and giveth." He would not probably feel the loss of a hundred times [illegible] and meet with Christ to the gates of the beautiful city. The feet that have been worn and wearied in the campaign, shall keep step to the music of the kingdom.

They that have hungered after righteousness, shall eat from life's fair tree. They that have thirsted for the waters of life shall drink from the beautiful river. They that have fainted and fallen in the land of the enemy shall meet around the love spread table and drink the wine of immortality.

Darkness must reign through the night but joy cometh in the morning. The battle with the hosts of wrong may be close and steady but victory will come at last.

Hope is fair and winning but the glorious reality shall await us on the other side. The mists of time must cloud our vision and cover the valley but the glory clad mountains beyond shall gleam with untold beauty.

MRS. H. V. REED.

The Christian Warfare.

"Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life wherein thou art also called and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses."

Much has been said and written upon the Christian warfare, and some of us seem to have the idea that in order to "fight the good fight of faith" we must zealously contend with everybody who happens to differ with us in opinion. We must make our faith as obnoxious as possible, instead of trying to win souls to Christ. We must be "a peculiar people," not zealous of "good works" particularly, but very zealous of our (unwritten) creed.

And having either conquered or disgusted our neighbors we must turn upon each other, and finish "the good fight," with a general "unpleasantness" among ourselves.

Perhaps we could not better specify this undesirable state of things than by quoting Paul's description of a belligerent. "He is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions, and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds . . . . . from such withdraw thyself."

The Christian warfare is not a physical contest, neither is it an intellectual battle ground where one set of ideas contends with another for the championship.

"For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ."

Our weapons then are for the pulling down of strong holds, and bringing into captivity every thought. Our battle ground is unseen by mortal eyes and the mailed feet of the combatants give forth no sound. Right is struggling against might. Benevolence against selfishness, truth against error, and duty is contending with temptation.

The conflict goes silently and fiercely on. Though storm and sunshine—in noonday's glare or beneath the cold starlight, the tide of battle ebbs and flows. The hosts of right are sometimes gaining on the foe but perhaps at the next onset they are borne down and overcome by selfishness or hatred. Vain imaginations must be cast down and the heights must be held by moral nerve. Everything that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God must be conquered and every thought be brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. The battle is close and doubtful—no man can fight it successfully alone for he must contend against himself. The love of ease, the love of fame, and the love of power are laid in the balance—envy, jealousy and hate, are also against him, but away in the distance stand the glory crowned mountains, and at their feet is the fair river of life. Hope is pointing to victory and help is near at hand. The Lord of hosts stands ready to vindicate the right. The God of battle has pledged himself to assist every soldier that calls for his aid.

When worn by trial and borne down by temptation, he has only to call for reinforcements and faith comes near with robes of victory while hope unveils a gleaming crown. Soon the warfare will all be over and the victors will meet in a glad reunion on the banks of the beautiful river. No faithful ones are left upon the field—no gallant comrade is lost in the charge of death—when the roll is called by the captain of our salvation the faithful troops will all be there. Some of them have been sleeping on their arms, during the long night of weeping—but when the morning breaks, and the roll-call runs through the valley they shall awaken and march to the gates of the beautiful city. Has Christ Yet Organized His Church?

"And I say unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Matt. xvi. 18.

Has the church yet been builded? If it has, please answer when? Or, is it now in a state or process of building to be placed upon the rock at the coming of Christ? Z. GOWER.

REPLY.

1. It is said in Scripture that God and Christ are one—that is, that they are one in the great work of saving the world. It is through Jesus Christ as his agent that God expects in the future age to judge the world. It is said that we—his disciples—are Christ's and that Christ is God's. Then with propriety may the church be called Christ's, while at the same time it is said by the apostles to be God's. One church belonging to both God and Christ, not two churches.

2. The word church is from ekklesia which according to Pickering, Greenfield, Grover, Donnegan and others signifies an assembly, a meeting, a congregation; and may be either organic or inorganic. As an inorganic body, God had an assembly, a congregation in the Wilderness in the day of Moses. Acts, vii. 38. Also from the meaning of the word and God's purposes toward the world, we conclude that he must have had an assembly, a congregation, a called out body of people more anciently than in the Wilderness. Yea, that all who heard the Gospel, believed it, and obeyed the commands of God, from the day of Abel to that of Christ, as well as since, were members of that called out body.

3. Of the inorganic body thus existent in his day, as Jno. Baptist had prepared many of them, and Christ and his apostles had prepared many more, Jesus, in the text speaks, calls it his congregation—called out body—and says upon this rock (Peter's confession), I will build—organize—it. The word oikodemeso here rendered "I will build," cannot in this place be used in any other sense than to organize.

4. Jesus said to his disciples relative to their mission, that he that heareth you heareth me, and he that heareth me heareth him that sent me. It does not therefore follow necessarily that since Jesus decided to organize this inorganic body, that he must do it person. Nor do we find that he ever performed personally one single organic act while on earth, but left the entire work to his apostles. And notwithstanding they made additions to this inorganic body frequently. Acts. ii. 41, 47; iv. 4. Yet we read of no act looking in the direction of organization till the seven servants—deacons—were called in the city of Jerusalem. Acts vi. 1-6. The next official functionary we read of in the church aside from apostles and inspired men are elders, eleven years subsequently. Then five years later we read of the appointment of elders in the congregations where Paul and Barnabas had preached. And still later we read of qualifications to be possessed by these church officials or servants. 1 Tim. iii. 1-13; Titus i. 5-9; and also of instructions to them relative to their duties, and of rewards in case these duties were performed. Acts xx. 17 32; 1 Pe. v. 1-4.

Thus from a study of the Scriptures upon this subject the following points we can correlate:

1. God had an inorganic congregation (ekklesia) from the days of Abel to Christ.

2. Christ speaks of this inorganic body, ekklesia and calls it his own, and says upon this rock—Peter's confession—I will build—organize—it.

3. Christ did not organize this congregation in person, but did it through the apostles.

4. The apostles did not organize or commence to organize this body upon Pentecost, but simply added to the inorganic. Acts ii. 41, 47, and at a subsequent date commenced the organic work. Acts vi. 1-6.

5. This organic work was not accomplished momentarily, but gradual

6. This organic work does not pertain to centralization with one grand representative head of Christ on earth, but to congregational organization and independency.

When Christ returns this assembly—congregation—of brat-borns will be delivered from the dominions of death, and brought into the more perfect organic state—the Kingdom.

Death in Scripture.

The Scriptures primarily treat of death in its legal aspects, as the penalty for the violation of the law. It is spoken to Adam as the result of disobedience. The Bible declares that, "sin is the transgression of the law." That the sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law." "The wages of sin is death." "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death."

Seeing then, that he hath "concluded all under sin," therefore, all are condemned to death. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." All are under death, all lie in death. The murderer is "guilty of death." "He that hateth his brother is a murderer, and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." "He that loveth not his brother, abideth in death." "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." The death sentence is not impending in our case. The death penalty was promulgated to the first man in case he sinned, and having sinned, it was pronounced upon him. "Dust thou art, and unto dust, shalt thou return." This was death, absolute, final, perpetual, eternal—unless modified by some supervening Providence of the Creator and Law-Giver. This is the death of Scripture.

We are accustomed to think of death as a state followed by a resurrection to life, but that is not the Bible idea. The Bible idea of death, is the death that sinners die. That death, the disciples of Jesus will never see. Paul calls them "asleep." Their "life is hid with Christ in God." They are united to him in a personal relation which will be manifested when "death is swallowed up in victory." Then sinners are as good as dead. They are called dead, for death is inevitable. None of them can give a ransom for his brother that he shall not see death,—for the redemption of the precious soul—that it ceaseth forever. So "let the dead bury their dead." Let the criminals who still live, bury those who are executed. They are dead in sin. Sin is their normal condition, and sin, when it is "finished, bringeth forth death." J. J. CALKINS.

ADRIAN, Mich.

We cannot forbear calling attention to the truth so well expressed in the above article. If it were thoroughly understood, all the trouble on the subject of the resurrection would vanish. We have seen the light on this point for years, and have done all we could to spread it, and are glad to find others also entertaining clear and consistent views in the matter. Let it be understood that death is per-se an endless state. Life cannot be evolved from death,—the Omnipotent hand of God alone can rescue a victim from its grasp. Let it be understood, also, that every sinner is a condemned criminal awaiting execution, and is, therefore, legally dead. While the believer in Christ is justified and passes at once from the death state to the life state, never tastes of death—just falls asleep in Christ, to awake in the morning never to sleep again. While the rejector of Christ comes out of his grave like a criminal dragged from his cell to execution. His coming forth to judgment is no more a resurrection properly than is the felons passage to the gallows, liberty. When this can be clearly seen, all difficulty will vanish on the great themes of life, death, resurrection and judgment.

Science and Credulity.

The present age, we suppose, prides itself on being scientific, if it is anything. The achievements of civil engineering, the subtile problem of chemical analysis extended to the furthest limits of stellar space, and a hundred other applications of science, make the times we live in. The fact cannot be disputed; yet there are other facts equally well attested, which are not quite so flattering, and which serve to show that the scientific habit of looking at things is by no means very widely diffused. How is it that the vagaries of table-turning found so many believers? When Faraday produced an apparatus to demonstrate its fallacy, how many converts did he make? Look at the tens of thousands of people in America who credit a fortune-teller; who would as soon doubt the influence of the moon on the weather as their own existence. No, there are many scientific men in the world, but the mass of our people are not scientific. It is even questionable whether the spread of knowledge could ever make it so. It becomes all the more important that everyone who has the opportunity should cultivate, as far as he can, the scientific temper of mind; and he will do well to begin with a respectable observance of rules of evidence.—Jewish Chronicle.

Turkey.

THE BATTLE OF SUNDAY.

BELGRADE, Oct. 30.—Particulars of the battle between the Turks and Servians on yesterday state that the Turks attacked the heights of Djunis. The Servian artillery, irritated at General Tchernayeff's deprecatory manner, refused to fight, and abandoned their position despite the Russian officers. The volunteers defended the heights desperately—half of their number being killed. The Turks carried their positions, thus cutting the Servian army in two. After the fall of Djunis, Gen. Tchernayeff with his staff and a part of the army retreated to Ragunj but have since returned to the neighborhood of Deligrad. Gen. Hoverstovich's corps of 10,000 men have been finally completely beaten and driven back upon Knichevatz and Deligrad. Its positions are now untenable. Last night patrols went through the streets of Belgrade summoning the sojourning Russian officers to proceed to the ministry of war, whence they were dispatched to the front. Prince Milan left for the army to-day, escorted by a body of Russians. The prince had a long conference yesterday with Mr. Karthoff, the resident Russian diplomatic agent.

It is reported that the Turks captured ten cannon and a large quantity of muskets and ammunition in their last battle at Djunis.

Another special from Belgrade does not single out the artillery as the most prominent in the defection on that occasion, but states that the Servian army, which was reduced to such a condition that the men were hardly able to crawl, openly declared it would fight no longer, and abandoned its positions en masse. Tchernayeff telegraphed to Prince Milan, imploring him to come and prevent the army from crumbling entirely to pieces. The prince conferred with M. Karthoff five times during the night. It is impossible to make a stand at Caprilja. At Deligrad, Ragunj and Baratchin, and all along road, the wildest confusion prevails. The wounded, the wagons, the staff and deserters are mixed up in an inextricable mass. The Circassians have appeared before Ragunj.

The Bible True.

Skeptics revile at the Red Sea passage and assert its impossibility. But every research of man into the wonderful East, every discovery of true science confirms the sacred word. On this miracle, an able writer in the Scientific American, thus speaks: "On a long, sloping beach, the wind is often known to blow the water seaward to such an extent that ships at anchor near the shore, in high tide, instead of being able to set sail in a succeeding high tide, have been left on a dry beach. In the passage of the Israelites through the Red Sea, we are told that the Lord caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night, and made the sea dry land. Observations in connection with the survey of the Suez canal route have revealed the fact that at the probable place of crossing was a sandbar, but a little beneath the surface, which is now visible above the surface. The strong east wind was sufficient to force back the water from this sandbar, and make a dry passage. So this statement of Scripture is in strict accord with the discoveries of science." Amen!

Study of the Word.

In putting on your armor, don't forget that the sword of the Spirit is the Word of God. Not content with merely reading your Bible, study it. Instead of skimming over whole acres put your spade into the most practical passages and dig deep. Study the twenty-fifth Psalm, and the twelfth chapter of Romans, as well as the sublime eighth chapter. Study the whole epistle of James. It will teach you how a Christian ought to behave before the world. As you get on further you may strike your hoe and your mattock down into the rich ore-beds of the Book of John. Saturate your heart with God's Word.

THEO. L. CUYLER.

The old Jewish custom—to give the tenth part of their possessions to the cause of charity is still prevalent in our days; the wealthy give the tenth part,—of what they ought to give.—Jewish Chronicle.

To induce others to acts of charity when we ourselves are deficient in this noble trait of the human character, is, to say the least, presumptuous. We might with propriety say to such: "Better open your pockets than your mouths."

The Stream of Life.

BY MARVIN LUDLOATER

We are slowly drifting down life's stream,
With steady hand we steer;
And many a token sign and gleam
Of by-gone days appear.

We pass the dark Susquehanna shore
Who o'er the water bore a cross;
And both by the far depths
Of those who have gone below.

Of those who've gone below. Who sleep
In the ocean's stormy wave;
They're all those would survive to weep
O'er those lonely ones gave.

And we who yet on earth remain,
Who living, act and tread,
Will find the same mournful refrain
For those, who now are dead.

Yes! We whose days are not yet spent,
With fingers sweet and slow,
In grief and sorrow will lament,
The ones who've gone below.

And then how strange does it appear,
That in this river small,
Where death is passing far and near,
And yet no shudders fall;

There should be some, who careless are
To the dangers all around,
Who fain man's happiness would mar,
And the Right of sweet sound.

The Christian Association of America.

I have waited for the author of the 28 articles of the prospective constitution of the above named association to stand forth in defense of his pet theory of finances. If his father is willing to see it immolated and not move a finger or pen in its defense, all others should be startled. The chairman of the committee reserved to himself the financial part of the work submitted to the committee of which I was a member. He delayed writing out his well matured plan until the morning of the day during which the conference must close. Only four of the committee could be got together, and of these only two had matured any plan. It was proposed that each should write out his plan. Bro. Reed and I sketched a plan of union and co-operation upon which we then thought, and I still think, the brotherhood could be united so far as to act in concert. Neither of our plans filled more than one page of foolscap. Our worthy chairman's constitution and by-laws were very many, and most of them I think superfluous. We did the best we could to have any report before the close of the conference. Had the committee discussed every item as they commenced doing, no report would have been made. I suppose that the conference would prune the overgrown tree, which should have been only a scion. But there was no time to investigate so lengthy a document so, after a few random speeches and motions, the whole thing was tabled; and afterwards resurrected only to be submitted as a whole to the churches and conferences to be accepted, changed, modified, or rejected, as they in their wisdom might choose. Surely, if there is anything in these resolutions so alarming, the brethren are capable of discriminating between the good and the bad, without one or two deciding the whole question. They differ not a whit in principle from resolutions which have been passed by conferences composed of our good brethren for the past twenty years. The arguments of the opposition have been as much against doing anything, either for the support of our paper, editors, evangelist, or the poor, as against the twenty-six articles that were submitted, from among which to select that which would suit them best. Our critics seem to condemn them all, without offering anything better. If, as clearly intimated, the time is past in which there need be any concern or effort for the salvation of sinners; if the quota of kings and priests are so nearly selected through the proclamation of the gospel, that we are no longer under obligation to labor for the salvation of others, or to aid those who are spending their whole time and energies under false ideas of duty,—if none of our brethren can be trusted in any position without becoming proud and popish, or with what little money that shall be placed in their hands for the benefit of the poor, or for the meager support of their families while they are preaching the gospel of the kingdom, without corrupting them,—if we have no confidence in the honesty, wisdom, or prudence of anybody except ourselves, then let us oppose all co-operative effort, all responsibility outside of our own domiciles, or at least to the salvation of ourselves as individuals.

One writer truthfully says that, "Any form of government is better than anarchy." Those who are most prolific in objections to everything proposed by others, are the least prolific in suggesting better or more efficient plans themselves. I would commend the action of the conference which recently convened at West Irving, Iowa. Instead of indiscriminately rejecting the whole, they carefully investigated each item separately, and intelligently rejected such as they could not endorse, and accepted such as they could. I can neither endorse nor recommend the action of the conference at Fairfield, Wis. They rejected the whole without giving any reason or substitute. Are we to understand that they are opposed to any financial arrangements, or concert of action among the widely scattered brotherhood? This cannot be the reason, because some of the largest churches which were represented there have practiced for years the very same plan recommended in the details of the plan which they rejected in whole. I think it was either for lack or want of investigation, or prejudice, perhaps, caused by the appeals which were hurried into our paper.

Only one conference has elected a delegate to the general association to be held at Plymouth the last of December. They also resolved to bear the expenses of their delegate. I think that brethren Reed, Myers and Chaplin were appointed to attend to this business, as they expected to attend the conferences east, west, north and south. I can do as all I can individually for the promotion of truth as a steward of Christ. I am willing to co-operate with my brethren in any efficient plan. I have no fears of being elevated so high in this dispensation as to excite egotism or make a little pope of me, nor have I had in the past enough money of my own or anybody else's to endanger my salvation through filthy lucre. More may be accomplished through the preaching of the gospel now than at any other time.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

I desire to add a few words to the above by way of explanation. Bro. J. M. S. is in error in saying that the chairman of the committee reserved to himself the consideration of the financial scheme to be embodied in the report of the committee. The subjects, as assigned by him, were the following: To Bro. J. M. S. was assigned the preparation of a paper on the offices and duties of a pastor.

To Bro. Reed was given the subject of Evangelization; to Bro. Miller that of local church organization; to Bro. Esselstein, church finances, and to myself a plan of union among the different churches for mutual comfort and co-operation. Brethren Stephenson and Reed prepared no report.

Bro. Esselstein delayed till just time for his paper to reach the conference, but by the fault of the mail it failed to put in an appearance till after the conference.

Bro. Miller was early, and his excellent article appeared, by his request, in the RESTITUTION before the conference convened. As for myself, I had digested the whole matter, but written nothing till the meeting, as I expected papers would be prepared by the brethren of the committee, and the matter reserved for myself could as easily be submitted to my fellow-members without writing as with. I had no pet scheme for anything; but was compelled to draw up something and present to the committee, which I did during the conference. It was adopted by the committee, and presented to the conference as our report; was adopted by the conference and sent out to the brethren for acceptance or rejection as they saw fit.

The criticisms upon it were to be sent privately to Bro. Myers the secretary of the conference, who was to retain them till the meeting in December, when they were to be presented to that meeting and duly considered. By a mere blunder they found their way into the paper, and the case, to a certain extent, prejudged, and prejudice raised against the action of this conference in some quarters. The criticisms have been wholly upon a misunderstanding of the subject criticised. The entire scope and object of the scheme has been misapprehended, and hence, nearly all that has been said is pointless.

I have not felt especially called upon to defend the report of the committee to the paper. I am not ashamed of its action, but am ready to defend it when the proper time and place comes for such defense. Before the delegate meeting, was and is, the only place to either attack or defend.

There is, however, one point upon which the handful of brethren East, differ so radically from the great body West, that I cannot forbear making a word of comment.

Is it the duty of the church to preach the Gospel? Not has God a select company of Popes to lord it over God's heritage? but, is it any and every man's duty to proclaim or make known the glad tidings to the perishing, as God has given him or her ability? To aver otherwise is so monstrous a proposition that I cannot believe that the brethren East understand what we of the West mean by Evangelization. In the report of the Baltimore meeting (which I hoped to have attended in response to the invitation of the Baltimore church through the private letter of Bro. Weeks, but other duties prevented), Bro. Grein is justly spoken of as an eloquent and able workman in the Gospel field. Let me ask if the brethren there took an pains to gather the unbelieving multitude to hear the truth as it fell glowing with the sunlight of heaven from his lips?

If so, they were guilty of evangelizing, in the full sense, and for the entire purpose for which we labor. Again, did they feel deep enough over Bro. Orcutt's work to get down into their pockets and assist him on his way? If so, they had a "thrilling minister," lording it over God's heritage," to the least extent of our Western laborers.

No! not brethren, it is clear that we do not understand each other. We must come together as that Plymouth meeting and se the matters so we can all pull together.

Correspondence.

BRO. REED:

On the 30th day of September last, I left my family to visit the brethern of the Omaha church at their request. I have known that there was an organization at that place but had not been permitted to visit them. I arrived at Bro. William Loe's about sun set on the same day, after a hard ride of nearly forty miles over some very rough roads. I found Bro. Levi Davis and Bro. and Sister Loe anxiously looking for us. I was soon made to feel that I was indeed among my brethren; the hearty shake of the hand, and the lively looking countenances, was evidence that they welcomed me. After a hearty repast we all repaired to the school house and found a small but interesting congregation awaiting us. Bro. Davis had spoken to them on Friday evening and on Saturday at 11 o'clock. We spoke at this hour by request of Bro. D. Our subject was "The Death of Christ;" showing first, why Christ is the Son of the living God, also that there had been false Christs and many now believe in that kind. I presented to them the fact that they must believe that Christ died, I Thess. 4 13-5, and how He died according to the scriptures, I Cor. 15v, by quoting Isaiah LIII Chap. portions of verses 8, 10 and 12. "He was cut off out of the land of the living," eight verse; "When thou shalt make His love an offering for sin," tenth verse; "Because He hath poured out His soul unto death," twelfth verse." Proving that the whole being died and not one part, the other escaping death. Bro. Davis followed in a short but feeling exortation asking all to examine and see that the truth had been spoken.

On Sunday at 11 o'clock we met a good congregation, and at the request of a lady from Bonneville, Mo., (Mrs. Quigley) we spoke on the subject of the "soul," showing the bitter fruits that are gathered from this tree, (immortality of the soul,) viz: Spiritualism, Romanism, Mormonism and others. I then gave them the scripture use of the word soul. First in its primary, then secondary sense. We found that it was subject to death, Psalms 78. 50. We found different kinds of souls, but not one immortal soul. After an hour on this subject Bro Davis closed in an exortation, asking them to take God at his word and denounce error. We assembled again in the afternoon at 3 o'clock and found the house well filled with those who were anxious to hear more of the strange things we had to say. We spoke an hour, examining the positions taken on the establishment of the kingdom, viz: The kingdom is within you; second, in the days of John the Baptist; third, the day of Pentecost. By the word of God we showed them that their affirmations could not be proven. We spoke one hour upon this subject, during this time we attacked their strongholds and without the least opposition we removed their foundation At the end of the hour we found many interested and some moved to tears. Bro. Davis closed by contrasting truth with error. We are pleased to say that Bro. D. is a fearless proclaimer of God's word taking a plain, "thus saith the Lord—nothing more nothing less—

At lamp-light we met the people again. The house was filled to overflowing. During the hour he spoke on the kingdom as taught by the Prophets, Christ and his Apostles, showing that we had no promise of an inheritance in heaven. We followed with an exortation, a warm feeling resulted and tears flowed freely. We very reluctantly bid them farewell, many gave us their hands as a token of respect and approbation. One who was interested said, "Brother Robinson don't forget me." Twenty-four hours before we were strangers, now we parted as friends—I asked her to prepare to meet me in the kingdom of God's dear Son.

In conclusion I will say, I met many warm hearted brethren and sisters. We shared the hospitality of Bro. and Sister Loe, our friends Mrs. Quigley and Bro. J. D. Summers, and would have visited others but could not. We formed the acquaintance of brethren Marsh, Peter Summers, Triplate and others whose names we have forgotten, but their faces and kind greetings never. On Monday morning we left for home.

God bless those kind brothers and sisters of Omaha church, who so kindly received us, and those good friends with whom we ate on Sunday; may they continue to examine the word of God until they may be made free by the law of the liberty of life. Brother Davis has been laboring in this place for nearly three years, and has proved himself to be the shepherd of the sheep and not a hireling. May he remain faithful and when the Great Life Giver comes, receive a crown that faileth not away. From your brother in hope of life through Christ.

The Woman on the Waters.

"The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues."—Rev. xvii. 1-15, 18.

"The generality and best of Protestant writers understood by Babylon and by this woman, Rome as it is to-day, under the rule of the Pope."—People's Commentary.

One of our exchanges noticing Historical Studies, by Eugene Lawrence, (a book just issued by Harper & Brothers, of New York,) gives the following extract from it, which shows how the words of the Apocalyptic seer are applicable to the Papal Hierarchy to-day—as they have been during many long and weary centuries of the past:

"In her faded magnificence, Rome still possesses the most imposing of earthly empires. She rules over nearly two hundred millions of the human race. Her well ordered army of priests—both regular and secular, arrayed almost with the precision of a roman legion, and governed by a single will, carry the standard of St. Peter to the farthest bounds of civilization, and cover the whole earth with a chain of influences, radiating from the central city. The Pope is still powerful in Europe and America. Africa and the East. He disturbs the policy of England, and sometimes governs that of France; his influence is felt in the revolutions of Mexico, and the elections of New York."

Charley Ross.

A new clew seems to have been struck to the fate of Charley Ross. Letters of importance have been discovered showing who were the accomplices of Mortimer and Douglass in the abduction, and all have been taken into custody by the police in Philadelphi. Hopes are entertained that the boy is still alive.

One of the largest theatres in Rome was recently crowded to repletion, not only to protest against the barbarities of the Turks, but to denounce the "infamous course of the pope, in giving countenance to these barbarities."

Valuable English Works.

Our readers are informed that we expect shortly to have for sale the works mentioned below. Orders and remittances for the same may be sent at once to this office.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Burdsall, Congregational minister, and W. Kelly, editor of Bible Echo, and minister of the gospel. Both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by W. C. B. 2. That the Scriptures teach that man in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth, bevelled boards, well bound, 450 pages 10c. Paper cover, 35c; postage 8c.

Duration and Nature of Future Punishment. By Rev. D. Constable, St. A late Prebendary of Cork, Ireland. 320 pp. An elaborate argument touching the punishment of the unsaved. It is particularly fine in its philological chapters respecting the meaning of the Greek words used by the inspired writers to indicate the doom of the lost. Price $1; postage 10c.

"We hail this book with truly satisfaction. Undoubtedly the subject which it treats with such an attractive combination of learning and modesty, of power and reverence, has held hold of the minds of many of the most thoughtful Christian men of our day. Its growth, from a pamphlet in the first edition, to a handsome volume of three hundred and thirty pages in the fourth, is conclusive proof that the question discussed is one of profound importance.... We must also compliment the publishers on the liberal and handsome dress in which they present the book to the public, and express the hope that the necessary outlay will speedily be much more than repaid for the sake of a work which must take a standard place in this painfully misunderstood department of Christian theology.—The Examiner.

This work presents the Bible doctrine of the state of MAN between death and the resurrection.

"Mr. Constable has, in a series of valuable, elaborated works, sought to establish, from Scripture and other sources the real nature of the future state; and the present book is the result of his more elaborated labors on one special point. His arguments, if supported by no little learning, is keen logic, and a clear and available style. There is a good deal to be said for the general doctrines propounded."—The Nonconformist.

"It is characterized by his usual vigor of thought and clearness of expression. To all lovers of truth, rather than of tradition, we cordially commend the treatise."—The Church Messenger.

Bible Echo. Volume I, May to December, edited by W. Kelly, 1874. This only English weekly that advocates the ancient Gospel. Bound volume of numbers of the Bible Echo, containing important papers and discussions on vital matters, and the more controversial to be opposed to the scriptural doctrine of immortality. Price $.25

"We took in one of the most satisfactory it is our find that could be writing. Indeed we know of none other in every way so pleasing to those who see the necessity of maintaining the Bible as a revelation from God. We would be more than content, we would be proud, if the title page bore our name instead of that of a comparatively unknown lady, the author of the "Bible Triumphant" was a good work, and it is, we know, warmly appreciated by many; but this work, so original, so forcible, so convincing, if it could be kept in print where for once we will end. Every body should possess a copy."—Ed. Bible Echo.

Four Anchors.

BY MRS. H. E. BROWN.

The day is thine, the night also is thine.
Psa. lxxiv. 16.
The darkness and the light are both alike to thee. Psa. cxxxix. 12.
They cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day. Acts, xxvii. 29.

The night is dark, but God is my God
Is here, and in command;
And sure am I, when morning breaks,
I shall be at the shad[illegible]
And since I know the darkness is
To him as sunniest day;
I'll cast the anchor Patience out,
And wish—but wait for day.

Fierce drives the storm, but winds and waves
Within his hand are held,
And trusting in Omnipotence,
My fears are sweetly quelled.
If wrecked, I'm in his faithful grasp,
I'll trust him though he slay;
So letting go the anchor Faith,
I'll wish—but wait for day.

Sullen as the moments drear, roar
I rest upon the Lord;
I anchor on his "eternal years"
And feast upon his word;
His promises, so rich and great,
Are my support and stay;
I'll drop the anchor Hope ahead,
And wish—but wait for day.

O wisdom infinite! O light
And love supreme, divine!
How can I feel one fluttering doubt,
In hands so dear as thine?
I'll lean on thee, my Best Beloved.
My heart on thy heart laid;
And resting past the anchor Love,
I'll wish—but wait for day.

A Review of Mr. Hughes' (Reform) Lecture on the Intermediate State, or State of the Dead—Delivered in Presbyterian Hall, Nevada, Mo., Oct. 6, 1878.

"It is believed by some that man is not conscious between death and the resurrection,' I do not believe that."

"I will divide my theme thus:

1. Shall we know each other?
2. The spirit.
3. Hades.

In answer to the first division, I affirm God has implanted a desire in every individual to know each other in the other world, therefore it must be so, as it is his will. And in the Scripture Luke xvi. 19 we read "a certain rich man" addressed Abraham after he is dead and buried. It is said 'this is a parable,' but I say it is not a parable, for Jesus always prefaces by saying, It is a parable,"

Mr. Hughes raised the question, What is death? A separation. Thus shall the body return to the earth as it was, and the spirit unto God who gave it." Now, sir, has Mr. Hughes purposely overlooked the testimony of Matthew and Mark? "All these things spake Jesus unto the multitude in parables; and without a parable spake he not unto them." See Matt. xiii. 13. the reason assigned read from 10th to 16th especially 34th verse compare with Mark iv. 11, 12. Who was Jesus addressing in Luke xvi. 14 he says "the Pharisees—heard all these things and they derided him." We have two witnesses testifying it is "a parable," and how insignificant the assertion of Mr. Hughes must appear to every Bible reader he may deceive others though. Hence, the same conclusion is that "the case of the rich man and Lazarus spoken by Jesus" is a parable to those "covetous" Pharisees, and for the reason which is assigned by Jesus privately to his disciples. And it being a parable, it is not "a fact" as Mr. Hughes states it, in plain contradiction of Matthew and Mark's testimony, as above referred to.

I have proven by indubitable testimony that it is a parable—and can never logically be brought forth to prove that dead, and buried men converse in the grave. It is not taught anywhere in the Scriptures, but we do find that "the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything," and that perfectly harmonizes with all inspiration. Mr. Hughes' assertion to the contrary notwithstanding.

Hughes defines "death a separation;" but Webster and our own observation is that, it is "that state—in which there is total and permanent cessation of all the vital functions" and the word of God harmonizes with that definition of the death of man and animals.

Mr. Hughes defines "the spirit in the body the inner man" and reads it. Cor v. 2. Phil. i. 21-25. "What was Paul's desire? It was this, that his inner man might be released from the clog of clay the outer man and as a disembodied spirit depart and be with Christ and with all the others gone before him."

But Paul says, "to put off the old man (outer) and to put on the new man which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness. And though the outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." Now what is Paul's "inner man" he delights in the law of God after? Rom. vii. 22. "I see another law in my members (outer man) warring against the law of my mind (renewed) inner man), and bringing me (Paul) into captivity." So then with the mind (inner man) I (Paul) serve the law of God, but with the flesh (outer man) the law of sin." And he defines the outer man to be "the works of the flesh" and the inner man the fruit of the spirit." See Gal. v. 19-24. And these two men are possessed by Paul hence he cannot "logically" be either his inner or outer man.

But he patiently and prayerfully watches the conflict, for if the inner man puts off the outer he will exclaim "I have kept the faith." and if the outer is victorious "I am a castaway."

Spirit Mr. Hughes declares is "the inner man of Paul's, yet Paul never said so. Webster defined it primarily wind, air in motion, hence breath." Solomon testifies that "man goeth to his long home—then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit (breath) shall return unto God who gave it." Eccl. xii. 5-7. What is "the dust" in the 7th verse? It is the "man" in the 5th; compare with Gen. ii. 7. "God formed man of 'the dust' of the ground" See Gen. iii. 19. till thou 'return' unto the ground; for out of it wast thou (man) taken for dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt 'return.'" No "separation" in that sentence, not one hint at. Yet what is alluded to by Solomon in this "and the spirit shall return to God who gave it."

Let us analyze that let "the spirit" is a gift from God. 2. Man receives that spirit from God "in his nostrils" See Gen. ii. 7. and God is the one that gives it. And this gift is a free gift to all of God's creatures see Gen. vii. 15. 21. 22. yet at the death of those creatures the spirit returns unto God who gave it. Hence the Scriptures makes no discrimination of this spirit of God whether in a righteous or wicked, good or evil, old or young, it—the spirit—being an universal gift.

Hence all the deaths spoken of in the scriptures speak of man giving up the ghost (spirit or breath) see Abraham, Jesus, and Stephen, Ananmias and Sapphira and others.

Mr. Hughes defines Hades (Greek) Sheol (Hebrew) grave, as having "two apartments," one very hot, the other "Abraham's bosom." I do not doubt he believes it yet is it true? "The oracles" no where say so. Abraham was buried by "his sons Isaac and Ishmael—in the cave of Machpelah—before Mamre." "David slept with his fathers (not in Abraham's bosom) and was buried in the city of David." Jesus "was buried" "in a sepulchre that was hewn in stone, wherein never man was before laid."

And Job's terrible language "Why died I not—for now should I have lain still and been quiet, I should have slept then, had I been at rest, with kings and counsellors of the earth." "Samuel was buried in his house at Ramah." So that the Hebrew (hades) and the Greek (sheol) mean and should be translated the grave.

I find there is no possible chance to harmonize the assertions of a man that "knocked a chip off some one's shoulder" with "the oracles" of Jehovah hence I shall bring my review to a close, I admonish the young man having "zeal without knowledge" to search the Scriptures and in so doing he will find his reviewer correct in all the quotations used against his bare assertions. Then if he has any desire to benefit his fellow man, preach as "the oracles" speak set forth "sound words" and by so doing "save himself" and some of his hearers.

But so long as he teaches the people the fable "that God has given his spirit to man," and yet the gift is "the real man" instead of the thing "given and that God purposes to punish "the gift" for the things that man the creature "of dust" and "of the earth" does; he teaches what is contrary to common sense "logic" and "the word of God; the lively oracles."

I do not say it is not popular teaching from the pulpit of the nineteenth century, yet I believe I have faithfully proven by the Scriptures that God has never threatened "the gift of God" to man, to punish that "gift" for any transgression man may commit whatever, but invariably punishes man the creature, He made "the gift" to, and never otherwise, and never will to whom he made the gift unless God changes, and that is not believed by

BIBLE HEADER.

The Coming of the Son of Man.

"And then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." Matt. xxiv. 30.

What a shame that learned men should spend their pains and talents in attempts to tie down this language to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman armies!

I take it as an axiom,—a settled verity that demonstrates itself,—that two events which are specifically described as successive,—the one as coming after the other—cannot be the same. But if this axiom had always been observed in the interpretation of this twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, the students of the Scriptures might have saved themselves much inconsistency and confusion, and many a misapprehension of God's word. If we ask most of our popular commentators what is meant by "the tribulation of those days," described in the twenty-ninth and preceding verses, the answer given is that it means the calamities and sufferings of the Jews, induced by the siege and overthrow of their city and state. And if we ask them again what is meant by the mourning of the tribes of the earth after the tribulation of those days, the answer is about the same,—the calamities and sufferings of the tribes of Israel in connection with the fall of their city and state."

If we inquire of them what is meant by the coming of the Son of Man as the lightning in the clouds of heaven, with some twinges of uncertainty they nearly all finally agree that it means the flashing judgments which were brought upon the rebellious people of Israel by the coming of the Roman armies against Jerusalem! The coming of which our Savior speaks was to be out of the east toward the west, and the coming of the Roman armies was out of the west and north, and toward the south and east. But the reply is, No matter for that; we are not to expect all the particulars to hold!

The coming of which the Savior speaks is said to be after the tribulation induced by the invasion of Palestine by the Romans, as well as after that great unparalleled tribulation of which the Jewish troubles were the commencement and first-fruits; but no matter for that, we are told; as though effect could go before its cause, and if priority or succession were nothing in the interpretation of a book such as the word of God! I question, indeed, whether the annals of learning can furnish a parallel to the absurdities which characterize the great mass of our popular disquisitions upon this portion of the inspired record. No wonder that the doctrine of Christ's personal return to our world has lost so much of its weight, certainty, and rightful importance in the minds and hearts of the church, when its great foundation-text is thus sacrificed to a false and superficious erudition!

One of the strangest things in the world is the manner in which some people read the Bible. It would almost seem as if they turned it upside down, and read it backwards. Eyes have they, but they see not." They praise it, and hold it in holy regard, and insist that everybody ought to have it; yet they look into it only as some recondite volume, which is a good text-book for preachers, but which is quite beyond the reach of their understanding. They adore it more for the unknown mysteries which they attribute to it, than from their personal appreciation of what their own eyes have beheld upon its pages. Many seem to view it as a sublime riddle book, full of mystic poetry and unsearchable wisdom, rather than a plain piece of information and advice given by a Father to his inexperienced and exposed children. And many who sit down to write commentaries upon it seem to be continually haunted with the idea that there is something recondite in every word, or that the real mind of the spirit is not to be found in the plain import of the letter, but in some abstruse or mystic analogy which it is their business to dig after. I hold that the bible is a book for everybody; that its language is conformed to the ordinary uses of speech; and that it is to be interpreted in the same commonsense way in which we would interpret the will of a deceased parent or ascertain the meaning of a letter of business. It was not written to tax our ingenuity, or to test man's skill at learned exposition. Its design is to instruct, and in the most familiar way to express to men the mind and will of God.

When Christ speaks of the Son of man, he means the Son of man, and not the Roman armies. When he speaks of his coming in the clouds of heaven, he means coming in clouds of heaven, and not the sailing of war ships on the Mediterranean, or the march of soldiers over the fields of earth. When he says after the Jewish tribulations are ended, he means after those tribulations, and not before they began, or while they were yet in their incipiency. And when he says that all the tribes of the earth shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, expositors might as well attempt to demonstrate to me that day is night, or that white is black, as to attempt to make me believe he means the march of an army of boot'ab heathen soldiers.

Christ knew what he wished to say, and how to say what he meant; and I feel bound to understand him to mean just what he says: And what he here predicts concerning his coming in the clouds at the close of the tribulation no more refers to the coming of the Roman armies into Palestine than to the flight of Mohammet, or the next eclipse of the moon. He is describing the scenes of the judgment period, and nothing else.—Dr. Seiss, in Last Times.

Baptism in the Name of Jesus.

In answer to the article on this all important subject in the Resurrection of May 15th, by John Mark, I would just say first, without regard to avoiding or correcting an error that if we are willing that God shall be true though every man a liar, and have no selfish motives to subserve; it matters not whether we have taken a wrong step or are about to take one, we should be ever ready, before and after action, to be governed by the truth. But I don't wonder at the author of the above mentioned article, saying it is better to avoid an error than to correct one, for he has been confronted with the truth face to face on the subject under consideration, until he has been compelled to concede, using his own words, "at the commission given by our Lord, as recorded in the 28th chapter of Matthew, even of" such a mode, baptism, as he enjoins upon the church of the apostles planting, that the command given by Peter on the day of Pentecost, was our property," and that, after witnessing the ordinance of faith performed, in that only name given under heaven whereby man may be saved, acknowledged publicly, that it was done in the way appointed. It has been plainly shown that in every place where water baptism was commanded by the inspired apostles to be done, it was done in the name of Jesus Christ, in the definite article, meaning, in the singular or single name of Jesus Christ, and that the formula, into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, is nowhere found in any of the received translations. Because he has done and practiced on others an error, which by his own confession is hard to correct, let it suffice on this point to say, that when we take a step contrary to the word of God, and come to see by examining together out of the Scriptures of truth, that it is wrong, instead of its being hard, it should be the happiest moment of our lives. As humble children of God, we should understand that it is neither ourselves nor any other man who corrects, but God our Heavenly Father. We can then truly say, Not "unto us, but unto thy name be all the praise."

Now, John Mark says that to baptize in the name of Jesus Christ, means by the authority, or power, or, in other words, when three thousand heart-stricken Jews asked on the day of Pentecost what to do according to Jno. Mark's position Peter did not tell them what they asked of him; he just referred them to the power or authority of Christ as an answer to their inquiry. Why as to the power or authority of Peter's mission, there could be no doubt on the part of those zealous souls; the great matter with them was what to do, that they might receive the remission of their sins. Now where is the unprejudiced mind who cannot see, that if it was the will of God, that they be baptized into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, that he would then, and there, have directed his chosen apostle by his unerring Spirit to command them to do so, but according to Jno Mark's argument Peter just told who authorized him to tell them what they must do, but no, verily the Most High God did not use duplicity with his creatures, and never will, I believe. And any one is bound to admit, on a prayerful, and Scriptural consideration of the subject, that what Peter said in answer to the question "what shall we do?"—expressed precisely what was done, as the question was one of obedience, and not one of authority. The question was not—Men and brethren who authorized you to teach us—the very fact of those poor Galilean fishermen, being enabled to make such a demonstration, as they did, on that memorable occasion, such as speaking to every man in his own tongue the wonderful works of God, was sufficient proof of their authority to teach them: therefore when convinced that there was something to do, they wanted to know what it was: and Peter said "repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins; and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." The context governing these considerations with the whole tenor of Scripture, bearing us out on the subject. I proceed to notice another objection in the article before me.

The writer says, "although it is not declared, that Peter, used the words into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, it is not to be inferred that he did not do so, for we have several examples, where baptism took place, and no mention of the name of the Lord is recorded, as in Acts viii. 12, 16, &c." Now that kind of sophistry or assertion would do for the pope, whose subjects dare not contradict his majesty, but in the school of Christ, where students (touch the Lord,) have free access to the same blessed volume to read for themselves, and imitate the noble Bereans, searching it to see, if what is taught them is so or not, the truth alone must guide us. Dear reader, then let us see. Jno. Mark says no mention of the Lord is recorded, (will he undertake to carry out that assertion? If he won't, then instead of it proving too much as he says, it proves nothing. Let us hear from him) he will admit that to understand what we read the context must always be considered. Then let us read it, for if there was not another Scripture bearing on the subject on record, this one ought to forever settle the point at issue. "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized both men and women. Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John, who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: for as yet, he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus." Here is no mention of the name of the Lord's on that, too, beyond doubt to every candid mind to the exclusion of every other name, in the act of "baptism" to the law and the testimony—if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them. "They were only baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus," says the word. Philip being a witness approved of God, right by dividing the word of truth, understanding it as was he will of the Father, according to the testimony of the Spirit, though his fellow apostles, that he could do whatsoever he did in word or deed all in the name of the Lord Jesus: in placing himself in the position of an apostle as ministers [illegible] do, in pretending to carry out the commission given to the eleven apostles, as recorded in the 28th chapter of Matthew: but, being an humble evangelist, acting under the apostle Peter's charge, as recorded in Acts ii. 38: "Be ye followers of me," says Paul, "as I am of Christ." Peter and John being inspired apostles, understanding, too, their charge, which was to baptize in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, which no uninspired one could, or ever can do, prayed for those obedient Samaritans, and laid their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. Now, right here is the great secret brought to light which has, and is, puzzling the minds of hundreds, yea, thousands of some of whom, no doubt, are sincere and honest searchers after truth. Now, I ask, to whom did they pray? Why to the father? In what name? The Son? What was the result? They received the Holy Ghost, or, as is intimated, it fell upon them: for as yet, he was fallen upon none of them, only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. Right here the name of the Father, and of the Son, was taken on, in the effusion or falling on of the Holy Ghost: as the name of Jesus, is or was taken on, by the one or in water, which was baptism in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, as well as water baptism, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins. In this way those holy men of God went everywhere, preaching the word, that word which gave peace by Jesus Christ; the Lord working with them, and confirming the word, with signs following. For it was a great thing for three humble and poor Galilean fishermen to stand up in the presence or face of the rulers of this world, and proclaim that there was no other name given under heaven, or among men, whereby we must be saved. But when they heard an humble Philip, or some other faithful soldier of Jesus, preaching the things of the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ (mark well that the name was preached) and saw them baptizing men and women only in that one name (for that is the true meaning of the word) they witnessed the inspired apostles, asking the Father, in the name of the Son, for the Holy Ghost, and imposing their hands on them, and then immediately heard those common, illiterate men and women, speak with new tongues, and lay hands on the sick, and they recover; (for such was the effect of the baptism, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost) they were compelled to cry out, in the language of the damsel, in the case of Lydia, that "these men, are the servants of the Most High God, which show unto us the way of salvation."

From these premises then, before us, we can and do rejoice that the imputation, by Jno. Mark, in the close of his article, that we reject the faithful words of the Lord Jesus, in not using his formula, is without the slightest foundation from any source whatever, and must recoil on his own head, from the fact that the Master has said, "with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." Nay, verily, we with all the powers of the soul content to the wholesome words of the Lord, in the position before us, by rightly dividing the word of truth, and thereby avoid wresting the sure word of truth to our own destruction, as he has to do, to make, as he thinks, Matt. xxviii. 18, harmonize with Acts ii. 38. Reject the precious words of Jesus! No, never! Instead, we prove by the foregoing argument, that the apostles did more by carrying out the commission, as recorded in the 28th chapter of Matthew, (if possible) to establish the plan of salvation than the resurrection of our Lord from the dead; for the reader will remember that the soldiers were sent and swore, that while they slept, the disciples came by night and stole him away, which saying was common with the people, which strengthened their indisposition to believe. But, as before stated, when they saw those who did believe, bearing testimony to the truth, by having that name which is above every name, named upon them, in baptism; and then heard with their ears, and witnessed with their eyes the mighty demonstration of the Most High God, in answer to the prayers and imposition of the hands of the apostles, while acting under or carrying out the faithful words of the Lord Jesus, as recorded in the 28th chapter and 19th verse of Matthew, as clearly shown in this article: they were compelled to hold their peace, and every mouth, as it were, be stopped, and all the world become guilty before God, and were convinced of a truth, in the language of the Jewish brethren, "that God had, through this man, granted repentance unto life, and remission of sins in his name by a resurrection from the dead." So brethren and dear reader, in conclusion, we must look you ... Christ as the test: To try both your state and your scheme, you cannot be right in the rest unless we think rightly on this

I asked what I should think,
Through God my text this rule are not vain,
I say he's my meat and my drink,
My life, and my strength, and my theme.

My shepherd, my husband, my friend,
My Savior from sin and from thrall;
My hope from beginning to end,
My portion, my Lord, and my all.

The Lord's Coming.

An intelligent lady, and wife of a Universalist minister, said to Mrs. Wines that she regarded the coming of the Lord as figurative. We who look at it in the light of a blessed hope can not conceive how any one of even moderate intelligence can so read and construe God's word as to make it teach such an idea. If the Scriptures go to one teach a certain, in proper person of the Lord Jesus, the first, then it gives no information in reference to anything in the future, and we are left in total darkness on the great question of man's destiny. If the language employed does not convey the idea of a literal coming, then the English tongue is destitute of forms to express such a thought. Then were the words of the master: "I will come again and receive you unto myself," addressed to his sorrowing disciples, but solemn mockery instead of hope and consolation. Those simple minded men had never dreamed of the art of spiritualizing plain language. If Jesus did not mean what he said, then the white-robed angels must have conspired with him to cheat with a lie, and tantalize with false expectation, those Galileans, on Olivet, when the pain of separation was so keenly felt under the actual fact. They loved their Lord with a strength proportioned to his goodness and his spotless character. The sad hour has come: Jesus is ascending. They gaze after him as if that earnest gaze would bring him back, or hold him in sight. Angels announce: "This same Jesus who is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Dear reader, if you have heretofore taken this language to denote a figurative coming, reconsider it. Here is assurance made doubly sure. "This same Jesus." Look at the words: "Shall so come." This is enough to unsettle your old theory. Hear more. "In like manner." This leaves you without the shadow of reason to plead in excuse for your want of faith in the literal coming of Jesus.

JOHN L. WISER.

Thoughts of Death.

How much talk we hear about death, and how little it amounts to. It is not death but life we should think about, for to die is only fulfilling the law of God, for he has said dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return. If we are prepared for a future spiritual life, when death overtakes us, we can say come, welcome death, I will gladly go with thee, and rest my weary soul from all sorrow and care. Just think of it for a moment!

Death! Death! This is indeed a solemn thought, but why should any one live such a terror of death, when they know, by the word of God, that there is such a glorious hereafter for the righteous, and the faithful, or the children of Abraham? Oh that every one would think more about life, and not let death and hell scare them into the religion which was gotten up by men, but let each one have a mind of his own, that they may not only think but know for themselves that there is but one hope, one faith, one baptism, and without these there is no eternal life. We must have the same faith of our father Abraham, for the Bible says if we are Christ's we are Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise. Gal. iii. 29. And this promise is after death for we must become immortal before we can possess immortality, for this mortal must put on immortality. He has put before us life and death, that we might choose one or the other, so if we choose death then we should look upon death with a dread, for beyond the death of this mortal body there is a second death but if we choose life then death will have no sting, and we shall say oh grave where is thy victory! For victory over death is through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The Sabbath Day.

And while the children of Israel were in the wilderness, they found a man that gathered sticks upon the Sabbath Day; and they that found him gathering sticks brought him unto Moses and Aaron, and unto all the congregation, and they put him in ward because it was not declared what should be done to him. And the Lord said unto Moses, the man shall surely be put to death, and all the congregation shall stone him with stones without the camp. And all the congregation brought him without the camp, and stoned him with stones, and he died, as the Lord commanded Moses. Num. xv. 32, 33, 34, 35, 36. That was the penalty of the law, and if the law is binding, the penalty is stoning to death. But we are not under the law. John says, the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. Paul says the law was our school master to bring us unto Christ; and my prayer is, that the words of truth may illume our pathway through life, and that we may be admitted into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION stands for the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the existing work of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with Jesus Christ as King of Kings, and the true world-salvation as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the re-unification of Israel; literal resurrection of the dead; the personal reign of the Righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Salvation by Christ.

By many of its readers it is frequently thought that the RESTITUTION contains too much controversy, and that its contributors are rather too belligerent for the paper to perform its work in the world as efficiently as otherwise it might. But this is a question with many advocates on the opposite side. We are in favor of free speech, free press and free thought upon all questions worthy of agitation, with courtesy toward opponents. We are led to believe that it is by fair, manly and courteous investigation that we arrive at new truths upon all subjects, and that it is by investigation that we are enabled permanently to settle down upon the se truths, having turned every stone and learned of its value.

This we offer as an apology for calling attention to an article published Oct 18th, signed "A Critic."

In Critic's article he says to S. A. C., "There is one doctrine, which I think you will agree with me in saying is a fundamental one in the Christian religion,—salvation by faith alone. He that touches this touches the apple of mine eye. Whatever else I may abandon, I must jealously protect this. I have cast away, from time to time, long-cherished notions or opinions because I found they could not be sustained by the Word, but when this goes Christianity goes with it, and I am an infidel."

Now we think whatever may be said of S. A. C.'s article here criticised by Critic, that of Critics for the more faulty, and needs to be critied.

Then first, we beg of you, my brother, not to be too rash. You may yet surrender the apple of your eye and still not go into infidelity. We have met with persons who for the time being preferred infidelity to a surrender of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, or to the surrender of the doctrine of an eternal conscious state of misery for the wicked, or going to heaven at death, and yet gave them all up, without a surrender of Christianity. So we hope it will be with the apple of your eye.

But I kindly ask you where do you find such language as salvation by faith alone? I am convinced you do not find it in the Bible. The expression in so many words, or thought, are neither there. Do you not get it from the M. E. Discipline? Then why cherish an uninspired expression, and doctrine, as the apple of your eye, and declare that you will go into infidelity if you have to give it up.

It is true that justification by faith is a Bible doctrine, as taught Acts xiii. 39; Rom. iii. 28, 30; v. 1; Gal. ii. 16, but such a doctrine as justification—"salvation by faith alone"—to the exclusion of everything else is never once hinted at by an inspired writer. But to the contrary we are taught that we are justified in addition to faith,

1. By grace. Rom. iii. 24.
2. By Christ. Gal. ii. 7.
3. By Christ's blood. Rom v. 9.
4. By works. James ii. 21, 24, 25.

We are taught that, not by faith alone but in addition to faith we are saved.

1. By grace. Eph. ii. 5, 8.
2. By hope. Rom. viii. 24.
3. By Christ's name. Acts iv. 12.
4. By baptism. 1 Peter iii. 21.

And also, not by faith alone, but in addition to faith we are taught that it is by Christ's blood,

1. That we are redeemed. Eph. i. 7; Rev. v. 9-10; 1 Peter i. 18-20.
2. That we are purged. Heb. ix. 1-4.
3. That we are cleansed. 1 John i. 7.
4. That we are washed Rev. i. 5.

How in the light of the above Scriptures you can embrace a doctrine so narrow as to exclude—ignore—the grace of God, hope, Christ, Christ's name, Christ's blood, baptism and good works, as "salvationby faith alone" does I cannot well comprehend.

I have greatly admired your judgment upon other subjects, but against this I must enter this my protest. Does not Peter say to the Jews "Save yourselves from this untoward generation"? Does not Paul say to the Galatians, "Work out your own salvation"? Does not Solomon say that "The whole duty of man is to fear God and keep his commandments"? Does not Jesus say "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven"? Is it not for administrative countable acts that admittance into the kingdom is to be gained? Matt. xxv. 35-40. Will not "salvation by faith alone" set aside these declarations?

I do not, my dear brother, desire to to draw the contrast too strong, but recommend that you compare this to you precious doctrine with James ii. 14-26; especially verses 17, 20, 24, 26.

In conclusion, I ask, is your doctrine of "salvation by faith alone," any better and any more Scriptural than that of the case of Count de Chambord, which you quoted for the benefit of our worthy and aged brother, S. A. C.? To my mind they both fall together, being without divine support.

Fraternally, G. M. MYERS.

Conservatism vs. Liberalism.

It is certainly a fact that there is a growing tendency on the part of some of our brethren to a spirit of liberalism, that if not checked, will do serious injury to the pure principles of "the faith once delivered to the saints." There seems to prevail a dissatisfaction with God-given and time-honored customs; a chafing under anything like restraint; in fact, a great effort to remove the ancient landmarks. This feeling has been manifesting itself in a variety of ways; prominent among the "departures" we will notice, first, the "Few Question" as it has been styled; in other words, the prophecies concerning the final gathering of the scattered tribes of Israel. Some became dissatisfied with the idea of these prophecies being unfulfilled, the question was pretty thoroughly ventilated, the result being a withdrawing from us on the part of some. Since which there has existed two separate classes; soon after this somebody thought the name given to God's people was not sufficiently expressive to properly distinguish us from other religious bodies, therefore, we ought to give ourselves some other official title. It is painfully prominent in the memory of some; how this effort struck terror into the hearts of those who feared the movement would result in blotting out the heaven-born title of God's people. But thank God we passed the fearful rocks that threatened destruction to our noble craft.

Pleasantly we sailed along until some fertile brain conceived the gigantic enterprise of the "Christian Association of America." I would humbly ask why allow petty, state, or even national limits to circumscribe the bounds of this "order of lofty pretensions" one item amongst which is "to preach the Gospel in all the world"? As America does not embrace all "the world," and as we have recognized believers in the "eastern hemisphere," please allow a suggestion of a title that will enable them to co-operate with us in the great work; this for instance, "Christian Association of the World." The work is truly a great one and the title should correspond. I do not feel called upon to urge objections to the movement as the recent articles from our able defender of the faith, Bro. A. Maynard, will be sufficient to deter all lovers of truth and order from any further efforts in that direction. I want to be charitably inclined, but can hope the cause of the human recently so fascinating gently along, perhaps wondering that you will persist in denying yourself the many pleasures of the taste made sweet.

I propose to think first as danger, threatens the cause, brave and noble men leap to the front with words of cheer and encouragement. For the few faithful souls who will be rather than surrender one jot or tittle from the line of truth. Once when the federal union was imperiled by threats of disunionists, a man of invincible courage dared to utter in the face of the danger a sentiment that thrilled with terror the opposition, "The union it must, and shall be preserved," and do you tell me the moral heroes have perished from the land? No! thank God at least two have spoken. Their words have no uncertain sound; a voice of warning comes from the east, its earnest, pathetic tones touched my heart, and the article is its faint response. Before its notes had ceased to thrill us with joy a message is borne from the city of sad misfortunes laden with kind, gentle, though stern words from brother, whose sword is unsheathed to fight for truth. Could I grasp the hands of Brethren Magruder and Wilson, my full heart would say, God bless you, cease not to warn us of the danger, you may be sacrificed for the truth, but such sacrifices will be acceptable to God, your words have infused new life in some whose courage was almost gone.

At the battle of Sempach, in Switzerland, in the fourteenth century, the Swiss and Austrians, the latter outnumbering the former four to one, were arranged in battle array. As the Austrian forces formed a solid wall bristling with spears, it seemed impossible to force a passage through this living wall, at this critical moment, a hero, Arnold Winkelried, boldly advanced upon the uplifted spears of the enemy, saying, "I'll open a breach for you, comrades, protect my wife and child," and like a tiger sprang upon the spears of the enemy, eleven such points entered his body; he swayed a moment like a tree in the wind, then fell to the earth, carrying the spears with him, thus forming a breach into which the Swiss plunged and completely routing the whole Austrian army, gained a complete victory. Now the breach has been opened, who is now ready to follow in the struggle? Who is willing to make the sacrifice? Brethren, what I have written has been from honest conviction of duty; can is my only apology, unless I have been too severe.

Yours for the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

J. F. WAGONER.

Hope.

"We are saved by hope," says the Apostle; and there is a sense in which it is true of us all—we are saved by hope before we are saved by faith. The hope of mercy is in itself a thing in which the good Lord "taketh pleasure." The hope of Christ is a staff in the hand of the weary, before the arm of Christ is stretched out on which he may be privileged to lean. Hope is a marvelous inspiration, which every heart confesses in some season of extremest peril. It can put nerve into the hungry, and fleetness into the feet of exhaustion. Let the sun and motherly palm grove be dimly descried, though ever so remotely, and the caravan will move on—spite of the fatigue of the travels, and the simoom's blasting to wheeze, by the stingy roadside, the desert-waters flow. Let there glimmer one star through the murky waste of night, and though the spurs be shattered and the bridle be riven, and the hurricane howls for its prey, the brave sailor will be hailed to the helm, and ere already, through the tempest's breaking, calm waters and sapphire sky. Let there be but the faintest intimation that all is not utterly hopeless, "when the grave and skilled physician by the trembling patient stands," and anxious love will redouble its watchings, and feel as if new feet had been given to the leaden hours; and the blood, which had begun to curdle, as if in sympathy with the dying, will flutter itself loose again into thankful and regular flow. Oh, who is there now ever hopeless his lot or forlorn his surroundings, who is beyond the influence of this choicest of earth's comforters—this faithful friend which survives the wreck of riches, and the wreck of reputation, and the wreck of health, and even the loss of dear and cherished friends? My brethren, I would fain rouse you all to the ever clear of this your entombed privileges those living sepulchres which are between cumscribe and God.—Rev. W. M. Punshon, D. D.

Eighteen Hundred Years After Death.

A correspondent of Appleton's Journal, writing of excavations of Pompeii, says:

Among the most interesting of the objects found recently are two skeletons, one of an elderly man, the other of a woman. They were found in the Via Stabia among the ashes of the last eruption, evidently overtaken in their flight and buried among the cinders. According to the usual method employed to preserve the external appearance of objects, liquid plaster was poured into the cavity, which, serving as a mould, a fac simile of the forms was obtained; and it is perfectly preserved, the statue-like bodies were placed in glass cases in the Pompeii museum. While appreciating all the horrors of such a death, and the suffering endured, as shown by the position of the limbs, one cannot but imagine what would have been the astonishment of that man and woman had some prophet informed them that eighteen hundred years after their death, their form, and even as much of their garments as were not consumed in the eruption, would be placed in a museum for inspection by a multitude of sight seers, some from lands the existence of which they had never dreamt of.

The poor woman was lying on her face, and even the form of her hair, put up behind, is seen. One arm is sliding her forehead, and she is supported by her other. Her stony limbs are well formed, and traces of a garment are seen passing in folds around her.

The man, although placed upon his back on the exhibition, when found was turned on his side. One arm rests on his hip; the other is uplifted. The face is somewhat distorted, but is massive and closely shaven. Even the form of the fastening of the sandals or and the buckle, and of the long buttons, higher up on the leg to hold them is clearly seen. The limbs are partly drawn up. The skeleton of a tolerably large dog, also recently found, is in the museum of Pompeii, his whole form preserved in plaster, in the same manner as those just mentioned. He is lying on his back, writhing in suffering, biting his hind leg. The rings in his collar are plainly seen.

Adopted by the Church of God in Jamestown, Mich., Oct. 20, 1876, at a Meeting called for that Purpose.

WHEREAS, All Scriptures given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works, that the holy Scriptures are able to make us wise unto salvation.

Therefore we whose names are hereunto annexed, members of the Church of God in Jamestown, do solemnly agree to take the word of God as revealed in the Bible for our only and infallible guide in faith and practice,

There were eighteen names enrolled—being the entire congregation.

There was not one but expressed a firm determination to live up to the covenant and continue strong in the faith.

They then appointed a meeting for four weeks from that time Nov. 20, 1876, at 11 o'clock, for the purpose of enrolling the names of all of like precious faith who wish to become members of the Church of God in Jamestown, and to elect officers necessary to complete a thorough organization.

The brethren solicit the attendance of all who can consistently come, and especially the brethren in Jamestown, Wyoming, Byron and Gaines.

Do not forget the day, but be all attend.

By order of the church.

PAUL RICHARDSON.

Get to the root of things. The gold mines of Scriptures are not in the top soil; you must open a shaft; the precious diamonds of experience are not picked up in the roadway; their secret places are for down. Get down into the vitality, the darkness of the word,—God,—and seek to possess with it all the inward work of the indwelling Spirit.

Does Evolution Eliminate God?

Dr. McCosh, President of Princeton College, has written a long communication to the New York World combating the position of those scientific men who maintain that the idea of a personal Creator is not necessary in accounting for the development of the earth and its occupants. We are inclined to think that the class of men referred to is mostly imaginary. The champions of the theory of evolution do not in general hold this position, and Professor Huxley, in his recent lectures in New York, explicitly declared that he dealt only with the order and succession of development in nature and not with its final cause. Even so a study of nature refutes the hypothesis that the world was created in its present condition, by a fiat of the Almighty, and shows that it has been built up, by a process of evolution which may be traced back through long ages, and because speculation carries this process back until it resolves all the universe into a mass of vapor which contained the potency of every form of life, it does not by any means follow that a creative being is an unnecessary conception. The theory of evolution, so far from eliminating the Creator from his universe, makes his constant presence appear all the more necessary.

It is just as difficult to conceive that matter in its most primitive nebulous form should exist and be endowed with forces that set it going upon a process of evolution through which the successive stages of development were attained, including the appearance of constantly improving forms of life, without an intelligent designer and director, as to conceive that the world should have sprung into being all at once without a Creator. The work of creation has been going on for untold ages, and is, perhaps, not yet completed. From the beginning there have been evidences of design and of method which exclude the idea of chance, or the mere operation of force upon matter. Take the evolution theory in all its breadth and depth, and it seems to us that it involves the necessity of a constant intelligent pressure to supply that unknown and unknowable element without which we cannot account for anything. We may show the order of development and prove that there have been no convulsions of creative energy, but that does not account for the wonderful processes which we are studying. We may say that they come from the steady operation of natural forces upon matter, but yet the origin of these forces upon that matter and the direction of their operation to the production of results which we trace are unaccounted for. We must, after all, fall back upon a Creator, and we marvel more and more at his infinite wisdom and the perfection of his plan of creation, the more we study his handiwork. Old and crude conceptions of his methods may be displayed; but belief in his existence is just as necessary to understanding of evolution as to a comprehension of Milton's theory of the creation.—Jewish Chronicle.

Scriptural Classification.

Noah was a righteous man, a preacher of righteousness. He and his family were saved from drowning. His probation went across the waters into the new world or dispensation, and his families also. The world of the ungodly perished in the waters. Their probation ended when the door of the ark closed.

Lot was a righteous man and was saved with his family from being burned up. The ungodly Sodomites were burned up with fire and brimstone.

Abraham, the friend of God, stood afar off, in a place of safety, acting as intercessor for Lot and his family.

In the 25th chapter of Matthew we have the righteous, the cursed or wicked, and my brethren. The sheep, the beloved of my Father himself a kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world.

In the last chapter of Revelation, the unjust, the filthy, the righteous, and the holy, the character of each is continued. "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still, and he which is filthy let him be filthy still; and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still; and he that is holy, let him be holy still.

THE RESTITUTION

PLYMOUTH, IND., ... NOV. 8th, 1876

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞ The Brethrens meeting house at Argos is to be opened for the worship of God, on the third Sunday in this month. The house is plain and substantial, and has been built by those who desire to worship God in spirit, and in truth. We are to attend and "preach the Word."

☞ In last week's issue we wrote a little squib about fanaticism, and referred to a case in point without alluding to any names. We have received a letter in reply, which denounces us in the most virulent and bitter terms. During twenty-four years of earnest work for Christ we never before received such a missile from friend or foe. The writer says it was an "intentional stab," and that whoever wrote it, "hates his brother" and is "a murderer." Now, just think of that! We had no more intention of wounding the feelings of any one, than we have of dying, and if we have done so, we are a thousand times sorry for it. But the paragraph called no names, made no allusions unkindly toward the brother, and was never intended to injure in any form.

Read This and Then Act.

Two years have nearly passed since we moved to this place. Our object in coming was to promote the truth. Success has to some extent crowned our efforts. The RESTITUTION was purchased for $2,500 which included books and tracts. A company was organized for the purpose of paying up the debt and meeting the expenses of the office. Only $3000 of the stock has been sold, leaving a balance of $2000 unitaken. The subscription list has been increased nearly seven hundred and as a general thing our work meets with approval. There are those who find it in their hearts to grumble. This must be expected. No perfection can exist this side of the Kingdom age. Mortals are fallible in faith and practice, and need the mercy and forgiveness of God in order to get to the perfect life and the crown of glory.

But little has been done outside of the state of Indiana. The brethren in this state took the paper when it was sinking, according to the statement of its former proprietor, $1200 per year, and have placed it nearly upon a paying basis. Those outside of the state with some noble exceptions have stood by to see the salvation of God, and have excused themselves on the ground that it belonged to the state of Indiana. Religion does not belong to any one locality, neither do we understand that the work of supporting the truth belongs entirely to this state. There have been a few outside who have sent in a substantial token of relief and manifested an interest in the work. But the great bulk of our brethren have "looked on" and wondered how the thing would get along. Some have felt sorehearted and others sorcheaded. Some would like to see the RESTITUTION die while others would shed tears over its grave. It is the only paper where a free expression of views has been allowed. A great many things have been published which were in open conflict with our views and contrary to the word of God. So it appeared to us, but men should have a breathing place. Because we have been lenient some have thought that our stakes had been moved and that we were "too liberal" etc. Our aim has been and shall be to teach the truth of God without fear or favor, and we shall extend the same privelge to others. We have ever been considered too liberal by some and not liberal enough by others. To avoid extremes has been our motto. The great themes of millenial blessedness, the restoration of God's ancient people, the all-sufficiency of the Gospel of Christ, and a religion which rests upon the promises of God, have ever been and are now, near our hearts. While laboring to maintain the Gospel we have never compromised its saving power. Some have judged harshly not knowing the facts. Brethren have been severe, but perhaps we needed it all. We feel willing to assume the blame and give our Father all praise for his wonderful love toward men.

The future is yet before us. There are those who know our work, and they know us, and they have been willing to hold up our hands. We have contributed of our means, time and money to help forward the Gospel of the Kingdom. At times the clouds have been dark and foreboding, but light has shown across our way and God has remembered his people. All that is needed now is for the brethren to unite and lend a helping hand. "As workmen together with Him," much good can be done. There are those who have never made a sacrifice or presented an offering. No better time will ever present itself than now. We need to dispose of the balance of our stock in order to press out our work effectually and triumphantly. Who will respond to this our first call for help? Many can and are willing to help. Brethren move at once in this matter. God will bless you for it: the work needs your help now. The means are in your hands and you alone will be responsible for their use. We have sacrificed as much as we are able to and can do no more. Others must help. The signs portend the great change in earth's drama. Let us be active in the work of Him who has loved us. May mercy, peace and love be with you all.

THE EDITOR.

Put on the Brakes.

Heretofore we have extended the utmost courtesy toward all who have special hobbies to ride. Their articles, in many cases, have been printed without comment or protest. The whistle now says, "down brakes." It is time to shut the gate. We cannot allow so much ill at is cold, formal and mildewing, to appear in our columns. The Gospel is too pure and ennobling to be mixed up with so many isms and hobbies. We expect this course will cause some to part company with us, but their friendship is a plague, if not death. Men with extreme notions who glory in crochets and wild fancies are perfectly happy when they are allowed to ride their hobbies at full gallop. They love to be odd. "New views," "extremes," "to be unlike everybody else," "critics," "able to walk alone," "my plan" and other forms of words of like import, suit their case. Such men are a "peculiar people, zealous of"—crochets.

Now, do stop and rest awhile. Do think. Trees bear the same kind of fruit each year. The earth continues to yield the same kind of products, and yet they are ever fresh and new. Some things are made worse by grafting. It is ever so with the Word of God. But remember that you must not damn everybody who lived last year because they have never tasted of the fruits of this year. Christ never told his disciples to get up into some secret chamber and preach damnation to a few elect saints. "Go into ALL THE WORLD and preach the GOOD NEWS TO EVERY CREATURE." Let the words of hope ring through the valleys and over the hill tops. Send words of love to the fallen sons of earth. Christ came to save, not destroy. He came to heal not to wound. Would that men could find it in their hearts to stand up for the truth in the love of truth, and let the cold, deathly isms alone. Preach the word—the Gospel. Let love be shed abroad in your hearts.

A Plain Contradiction.

It has been the boast of Seventh Day Adventists that they were in harmony with each other, and that "confusion of faces" belonged to their opponents. We desire to present a fact for the candid reader's notice. It is clear to us, and has been for sometime, that the Seventh Day folks were changing their expositions. Indeed, they must or inevitably fall before the ark. Our opinion is, that even this will not save them. J. H. Waggoner was, at one time, considered a leading exponent of the law question among the Sabbatarians. His work on "The Law of God" was endorsed and sold as the most able work upon that subject. We notice that his book is now omitted from the list in the Sabbath Herald. Why is this?

In a recent number of the Review, Uriah Smith, the editor, takes the position plainly, that the ten commandments are not the old covenant. Here is what he says:

"That the old covenant has been abolished by being superseded by the new, Paul plainly states; of this there is no question. And we affirm further that nothing has been abolished but the old covenant. Whatever has been abolished was included in that covenant, and whatever was not included in that covenant still remains, unaffected by the change from old to new. If the ten commandments constituted the old covenant, then they are forever gone; and no man need contend for their perpetuity or labor for their revival. But if they did not constitute the old covenant, then they have not been abolished, and no man need breathe a doubt in regard to their perpetuity and immutability. This therefore, becomes a test question. It determines as definitely as any one subject can, the whole question of the perpetuity or abolition of the moral law."

Now, we will present an extract from J. H. Waggoner's work on the law of God, to show that the ten commandments were the old covenant. On pages 84 and 90, he says: "But on the third day thereafter the Lord appeared on Mt. Sinai and gave with his own voice the ten commandments (Exod. xx. 22; Deut. iv. 12, 13, 36; v. 22-26); therefore to obey his voice was to keep the ten commandments, as the following Scripts.... will show: 1 Chron. xvi. 15-18; Deut. iv. 12, 13; ix. 9-11; Exod. xxxi. 18; xxxiv. 28. THESE COMMANDMENTS ARE ALL THAT WERE COMPREHENDED IN THE EXPRESSIONS, "OBEY MY VOICE" AND "KEEP MY COVENANT," as we have seen that these constituted the covenant which he spake with his voice and WROTE ON TWO TABLES OF STONE; and it is said in Deut. v. 22: "He added no more." See also Jer. xxxi. 32, 33.

From the above it will be seen that Smith is against Waggoner. Now, which one will the Seventh Day people believe? They are in open conflict upon the question. If words mean anything at all, the ten commandments were the old covenant, and Paul teaches that it has given place to the new. Now let another speak.

Rather Cool.

Some of our brethren who feel interested in the promotion of truth have the impression that the Adventists, as a body, are anxious to endorse any consistent movement for a union of all who are looking for the "consolation of Israel." It is thought by some that we are too liberal, and that we go too far in extending Christian courtesy toward those who may differ from us upon certain points. This may be, but we have ever felt willing to extend the same courtesy toward those who may differ from us, that we ask them to extend to us. We do not think that liberality should be all on one side.

We insert the following remarks from the A. C. Times, which present the animus of those who are opposed to "mercy after the Lord comes." The idea that men can be fraternized with who exhibit such a spirit is simply absurd. There are many Adventists who really believe the Gospel to be the power of God unto salvation and do not subscribe to the idea that the Spirit of God operates independently of the Word. Such men are "prisoners of hope," but it is nearly useless to think of union with those whose spirit is rancor instead of love, and who glory in being sanctified and sinless while in the mortal state. No one can be saved without a belief in the Gospel as God's power. We cannot entertain much hope for those who openly reject the sufficiency of the Gospel as the moral power of God in moulding men intellectually and religiously for eternal life. But here are the REMARKS.

Brother Lawrence has doubtless had an experience of associating with those of the age-to-come class who were extremists in the views of that people. We are personally acquainted with many who hold the doctrine of probation after Jesus comes, who are as spiritual minded at least as the average of Adventists, and these generally associate with the Adventists, but we are well aware that almost the entire body of organized and unorganized "Brethren of One Faith," commonly called age-to-come believers, do ignore the apostolic experience of the Holy Spirit as belonging to the church of the present day. This we regard as an error, and an awful one, militating against the very life and vitality of the professed church. The doctrine of "restitution" as believed by all Adventists, but faith in a future probation tends to sap the very life of those believing it. The proof of this is seen in the spiritual death that has almost universally come upon those churches making it prominent. The fruit tells what the tree is.

Don't Scold.

The following is worthy of all commendation. Some people seem to think that their scolding is a great blessing. They send out words of mildew and frost, of fire and death, and apparently rejoice in the "gift of tongues." There are many who do not confine their scolding within the narrow limits of home, but their words go forth as a flame burning up the happiness and peace of society. "Study to be quiet" was a most wholesome admonition from the apostle:

For the sake of your children, don't do it. It is a great misfortune to have children reared in the presence of a scold. The effect of the everlasting complaining and fault-finding of such persons is to make the young who hear it unamiable, malicious, and callous-hearted; and they often take pleasure in doing the very things for which they receive such tongue lashings. As they are always getting the blame of wrong-doing, whether they deserve it or not, they think they might as well do wrong as right. They lose all ambition to strive for the favorable opinion of the fault-finder, since they see they always strive in vain. Thus a scold is not only a nuisance, but a destroyer of the morals of children.

The First Book in Jerusalem.

It sounds strangely to hear about a printing office and books in the city of Jerusalem. After centuries of desolation and waste the old city of ancient renown is rising once more as a place of commerce and literature. Those who look upon the past desolation as final must change their views. Over twenty-five thousand people are now denizens of that renowned metropolis. The following item will be of interest to those who would remember Zion and take pleasure in her prosperity:

A gentleman of Boston has received from Jerusalem a copy of the first book ever published there. It is dedicated to the Rothschild family, and gives a full account of the progress of modern civilization in the ancient capital of the Holy Land. The business prospects of the city are encouraging. Real estate and houses are in great demand, owing to the many recent arrivals there.

"Who Are Christians?" Reviewed.

In the RESTITUTION of October 18th we ventured an article headed "Too Liberal," which, it is quite apparent, Bro. Willcox saw before it was printed, and as a partial antidote wrote an article, which immediately preceded it in the same number entitled "Who are Christians?" Upon reading it my heart was pained to find one who occupies the position of a teacher of God's Word, so entirely astray on what I regard as fundamental truths. In the outset he asks the important question, who are Christians? and immediately answers it by declaring that no man knoweth, or can tell. In view of this the question presents itself, does Bro. Willcox know whether or not he is a Christian? If so, how does he know? He must have some standard by which to settle the question with himself. Again, if a sinner should approach him and say, "I earnestly desire to become a child of God, a Christian; will you show me the way?" could he do it? If he could he must have some standard whereby he can determine the difference between a sinner and a Christian. And if he cannot point out to a sinner the way whereby he may change his relationship, and become a Christian, then he has no business to proclaim himself an evangelist, pastor or teacher of God's Word.

In support of his erroneous statement he affirms that "God alone has access to men's hearts and minds. He alone can tell what they contain, and He alone shall sit as Judge, and condemn or acquit." This is true in one sense, but not in another. So far as it relates to the hidden motives of the heart the secret springs which give rise to men's actions in many cases, it is true. These we cannot judge. God alone can search them out. But so far as the actions and professions of men are concerned and their relationship to God's revealed truth, we may freely judge. In fact, Paul distinctly says to the brethren at Corinth, "If ye have judgments of things pertaining to this life, set them to judge who are least esteemed in the church. I speak to your shame. Is it so, that there is not a wise man among you? No, not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren?" 1 Cor. vi. 4, 5. If Bro. W. had been a member of that church he would probably have interposed an objection, and said, "I make bold to say that it is wholly beyond the province of men to judge their fellows." It is manifest to any one that Paul was in error if Bro. Willcox's position be true, or Bro. W. must confess that the commandment to "Judge not" must be confined to the hidden things of the heart.

That brethren have power to judge brethren even to the extent of separating from them is a parent from Paul's commandment to the church of the Thessalonians. He said, "If any man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed." 2 Thess. iii. 14. Pray tell me how they could note the man and withdraw from his company unless they tested his conduct by the rule Paul had given him, and judging him derelict in duty cut him off until reformation ensued. Jesus gives a rule of judgment in these words: "Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment."

I need not dwell upon this point, however, as it is proven beyond question that "Judge not" is limited in its application.

Bro. W. speaks of "those who are determined to set up their standard as the rule by which all men are to be acquitted or condemned," and says "that such men have the misfortune to be born several centuries too late in the history of the world; they only bring upon themselves the pity and contempt of mankind." If Bro. Willcox means by this that there is no standard by which men will be acquitted or condemned then we object. But if he merely aims his shaft at the creeds of men we say Amen. The Bible presents a standard by which all will be tested. It is the acceptance or rejection of the Gospel. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned," says Jesus. Here is a test—a standard that is Divine. It is not man-made. Can Bro. W. rally around it and thus draw a line of demarcation between believers and unbelievers, Christians and sinners? If his objects that no man can draw the line because of his inability to define the Gospel then we have reached a point that is truly curious. A host of men (Bro. W. included) engaged in preaching the Gospel of salvation, and not one of them able to tell a sinner what it is. As to the "pity and contempt of mankind," what have we to do with that if we are in the line of Christian duty? Are we to have the fear of men before our eyes? If not then God's standard may be urged fearlessly, let what will come.

Anticipating the result of accepting his position Bro. W. asks, "what then, are we to fellowship everybody?" to which he replies, "We are called on neither to fellowship nor disfellowship anyone .... To fellowship is to endorse; to disfellowship is to judge." And yet, in direct violation of his own rule he immediately tells us we are to "fellowship the good and the true," and have "no fellowship with the works of darkness." To "fellowship the good and the true" will surely be to judge what is good and true, and "to have no fellowship with the works of darkness" will be to judge what are works of darkness. Yet he insists upon it we are not to judge anyone.

But leaving this incongruity what is the practical conclusion of Bro. W.'s position that we are neither to fellowship nor disfellowship anyone? Is it not that anybody, of any faith, or any practice may intrude himself upon the church and partake of the sacred emblems of our Lord's body and blood? and he may do it with impunity, no man objecting, because he has no power to judge? A Mahometan, Catholic, Methodist or Presbyterian, with no avowed belief in sky kingdom, immortal souls, shrieking devils in hell, and all the other traditions of heathenism, who never has been baptized, but opposes the ordinance as being unnecessary, such a one may regularly commune at the table of our Lord as a true disciple, a Christian, and no one may dare to even suggest to him that he is not what he believes himself to be, for that would be judging him. Away with such nonsense. It does seem to me as if some men were so afraid of doing wrong that they dare not do right. If we may not judge in such cases, and act upon our judgment, by withholding the bread and wine from known unbelievers, or those whom we know never obeyed the truth, then we may not dare to say that a murderer or thief is not a Christian. Bro. W.'s position on this point is utterly untenable, and his reasoning is sophisticel. It will not bear the test of either reason or Scripture.

The last point I shall notice is contained in these words: "The truth of God is progressive, and in a great measure dispensational, and to us, and to each of us, is committed the great truth of the kingdom and the life which His providence has brought out so prominently in our days, as I believe to furnish an antidote to the increasing errors, which grow out of the dedactine of the immortality of the soul.

The meaning I am forced to gather from this is, that the doctrines of the kingdom of God, and life only through Christ are great truths, but are not any part of the Gospel of Salvation. In other words a man may be ignorant of these truths, and yet be safed. If this is not the meaning intended then we can see no point in the remarks at all. As truth is progressional and dispensational, therefore in the early history of the church these truths of the kingdom and life might have been hid from view comparatively, but as the sky kingdom and immortal soul views became widely spread, God saw fit to push to the front the Bible truth of God's kingdom on earth and Life through His Son to serve as an antidote to error.

This is a belittling of the doctrines we preach. It is more. It is tearing out of the Gospel of Salvation the most vital truths it contains, and casting them forth as mere antidotes to error, which if not received will hurt no one, as they can be saved in ignorance of them.

Brethren, if our union with Adventists is to be purchased at such a price as this I for one say, let it never be made. The only union I can conceive of as possible in harmony with the Word is for them to believe and obey the Gospel. This they have never done, or else we have never preached the Gospel. I insist upon it that the Gospel of Adventism is the Gospel of Methodism, and other popular isms, and is not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is no use attempting a union unless, as I said before, we are prepared to lower the standard of truth—saving truth I mean, and trail the Gospel flag in the dust of sectarian unbelief. I for one am not prepared to do this. For over twenty years I have sounded a certain note and cannot now blow an uncertain one.

It is a cause of not only surprise but alarm to see our conferences in different localities, appointing committees to visit Adventists with a view of reaching a basis of union. Do we go there to show them their error, and ask them to believe and obey the truth? No. We go there virtually confessing to them that we have been in error and that we now seek a reconciliation and ask admission into their church. They do not come to us, but we go to them. Hence we are the supplicant party. Think of it, brethren, after combatting sectarianism so long, after meeting the devil's lies face to face, and overthrowing them, after proclaiming the Gospel of the kingdom, and life only through our Lord Jesus Christ as, essential truths, we are now asked to lay down our arms, own we were mistaken, join hands with those who oppose God's truth, and acknowledge them as brethren. What shall we live to see next? Assuredly we are living in perilous times.

I sincerely hope that our brethren will halt before they take another step in the direction indicated. The signs are thickening on every hand which tell us of our Lord's soon coming. This is not the hour to look back. This is not the time to drop our Gospel colors. If ever there was a time when we should press forward, and fight valiantly for God's precious truth, it is now. I entreat you, beloved, not to compromise now. Soon, very soon, He who promised the crown to the victor will be here to present it. Let us be faithful unto death, and the crown of life will surely be given us.

THOMAS WILSON.

What They Want in a Sermon.

As they come with divers notions, so they hear in divers manners. One comes like the Pharisee, watching if anything be said that may be wrested to be spoken against. Another sneaks of eloquence, and he gapes for a phrase to talk against. Another is dissatisfied and never pricks up his ears till the preacher comes to gird against somebody when he spites, and when the sermon is done, he remembers nothing which was said for his benefit, but that which was spoken imaginary against others. Another comes to gaze about the place of worship; he has an evil eye, which is still looking upon that from which Job did avert his eyes. Another comes to muse; as soon as he is seated, he falls into a study; sometimes his mind runs on the stock market, sometimes on a journey, sometimes of his expected dinner, and the sermon is done before the man thinks where he is.

On the Mountain Top.

No matter how much social religion we may have, no one who does not spend hours alone with God need expect to grow in holiness. When we are to be used, there will be means employed to perfect us. Jacob after having wrestled alone with the Lord, became a prince, and his character was changed and settled. God called Moses to meet Him on the top of the mountain alone; it was a private interview. It is always the top of the mountain, no matter where we are, if we are alone with God. We can never be strong in the Lord and the power of his might, unless we lie down alone before Him.—Selected.

An English paper has an article on the Jewish New Year, the following portion of which we copy:

We must heartily wish this marvelous people "a happy new year." May all their righteous aims, plans, and aspirations of all their families and their churches, have the blessing of the Almighty God. To the prayer, we can faithfully attest, all our churches will say, Amen and amen! There is in every community, we trust, of the world an increasing feeling of good will toward the Jewish people. We never see a representative of this race, but we think of the vast indebtedness we may all justly feel and own, under God, to this people. The nine tenths of all the best lessons of moral and religious life we hear every Sunday, and that are sung and said among three hundred millions of professed Christians, came from this stock. Our tenderest and truest words of prayer, and our most touching and beautiful hymns and psalms, are all referable to the same source. Not only the ancient patriarchs, priests, and prophets, but our Savior himself—blessed be his name forever—and Paul, John, James, Peter, and others were all Jews. Strike out of the religious life and literature of Christendom all that is Jewish, and what have we but the Athanasian and Nicene creeds, and some other such like stuff. It would leave us as utterly sterile as if out of an English landscape the beautiful hedgerows and pastures were taken away. The day is fast approaching when all Christendom will feel a lasting reverence and love for this people, and when all the synagogues of the world will also be drawn to the Christ of their own flesh and blood and spirit. No more the despised and rejected of men, their own dear brother, who has risen to the moral and spiritual primacy of the human race, far above all other prophets and sons of God will have their ear and heart.

What we win by prayer, we must wear with praise.

The Morning Cry.

Hark, 'tis the watchman's cry—
"Wake, brethren, wake!
Jesus himself is nigh,
Wake, brethren, wake!
Sleepers, for the sons of night;
Ye are children of the light;
Yours is the glory bright,
Wake, brethren, wake!

Call to each waiting band,
Watch, brethren, watch!
Clear is our Lord's command,
Watch, brethren, watch!
Be as men that wait,
Always at their Master's gate,
Even though he tarry late,
Watch, brethren, watch!

Hear we the Steward's call,
Work, brethren, work!
There's room enough for all,
Work, brethren, work!
The harvest of the land
Constant labor will afford,
He will your work reward,
Work, brethren, work!

Hear we the Shepherd's voice,
Pray, brethren, pray!
Would ye his heart rejoice?
Pray, brethren, pray!
Sin calls for ceaseless fear,
Weakness needs the strong One near,
Long as he struggle here,
Pray, brethren, pray!

Soon now the final cheer,
Praise, brethren, praise!
Christ bids to the feast:
Praise, brethren, praise!
What are the sounds we hear,
So full of the angels' songs,
While in and o'er the note prolongs?

Response to Bro. Wilson.

You are right in supposing that I had read your article before writing my own in the former case; and I now have the privilege of doing so again, being connected with the office in such a manner that no breach of confidence or courtesy occurs in doing so. And I cannot refuse to offer a few words further on behalf of a more liberal, and, as I view it, truly Christian policy in the treatment of those who differ from us somewhat in religious matters; than our past history justifies. Yet I do not care to engage in a lengthy argument with you or any one else at present on this point. For one I am content to see the truth prosper, and will extend a willing, helping hand to the searcher after truth, and think I am more successful in doing so by going in the spirit of brotherly love meeting my fellows, than I would be by shutting myself within the narrow walls of an exactly defined creed, written or unwritten, and forcing all men to the dimensions of my iron bedstead.

There are two extremes to which men oscillate on this subject, both of which I wish to avoid if possible. The first is, that belief has nothing whatever to do with salvation; and the other is, that no man can be saved except by a perfect knowledge of the whole gospel plan. These are both manifest errors, and are both to be found between the two extremes. Our Christadelphian (shall we call them?) brethren, are pretty good illustrations of the last, and the tidal mumbler of the first. I think the truth can be found in the direction indicated in the remark to which you take exception, viz.: "The truth of God is progressive, and as a great measure dispensational." What I mean by this is, that it has pleased God to gradually unfold his truth to a world lying in total ignorance of it, and that he never requires more than he has given. To this fact we may add other considerations, such as the undeniable one, that no two men possess the same ability to apprehend truth. Some intellectual powers are vast. They only need to direct their attention to a subject, and it unfolds before their minds in all its beauty and perfection, while others labor long and hard to apprehend the simplest idea. Now between these two extremes where shall we take our stand? Shall we proceed to follow the lead of the sects, and localize our faith?—construct our bedstead? And if we do, shall we include all the truth which the mind of a John Thomas evolved after a patient search of 50 years, or shall we content ourselves with a few simple fundamental ideas? I do not doubt you will reply, the last. Very well; shall we proceed to insist that the same set of ideas, without the addition or loss of one, must be apprehended by all without the admixture of a particle of error? Or shall we admit that the amount of knowledge of the gospel plan varies with the age of dispensation, and with the capacity and circumstances of the individual? Now, plainly, I contend for the last. If you admit it, you cannot demur to the conclusion that when a man professes faith in Christ, and is trying to walk in him, we are not allowed by our common Master to sit in judgment upon him; for we know not the amount of knowledge which God requires of him, hence we cannot tell whether he is accepted of God or not. But if you deny the principle, we must insist on your plainly writing your creed so that we all may know just how much and what we must believe to be saved. I know just what I must believe in order to salvation. I must make the best of my circumstances and learn all I can and believe all I learn. I think, also, that I know what to teach the unlearned enquirer. I shall teach him those truths which as a sinner he most needs, according to my best judgment of his case, and if he is brou ht to repentance and unconditional surrender to God by it, I shall consider him fit for baptism; but if he still proves incorrigible, I shall procede in his instruction till I succeed or give him up as a bad case. Just the amount of knowledge he needs I cannot beforehand determine: some require more and some less; but the truth or truths which bring him to repentance are just the truths which he needs; and when he believes them and obeys them he has believed and obeyed the gospel, and I hail him brother.

Now what is his duty? Evidently to learn. He is a disciple, i. e., a learner. He is to prosecute his studies with a profound confidence in God and his word. Now suppose he does not arrive at the height of my knowledge during his natural life? Does he cease to be a brother? I freely grant that he who wilfully rejects truth which he apprehends, is thereby condemned. But who can tell, save God alone, who does this? We may see indications which seem to argue that they are wilfull but here is the very point in which we are forbidden to judge. Your criticism of my article was too hasty to be just to yourself. If you will advert to it again you will find this language: "Any attempt, therefore, on the part of man to say who are or who are not Christians among the millions who profess the name, etc." Of course we are permitted to decide that a bold, blasphemer is not a christian. We may fellowship the good and the true, we may disfellowship the works of darkness; and yet not disobey the command not to judge; neither am I inconsistent in so affirming, as I only use the language in reference to those who profess the Christian name, and who are manifestly striving to walk in his footsteps. The same principle applies to the Lord's table. Your conclusions are extravagant and are not justified by my language. An ungodly man has no right,—an Infidel has no right to partake. But if you were passing the emblems and he were to do so, would you snatch them from his hand? It is to be supposed that in civilized countries none who are unfit will desire to join in the celebration, and those who do desire it are entitled to it, for all any mortal can say to the contrary. If it is heresy to extend the invitation on all such occasions to all who consider they have the right and would esteem it a privilege to partake without putting them through the 30 articles, or sitting in judgment on them; then I freely confess that I am a heretic of the first water for so I preach, so I believe, and so I practice; and shall continue to do so till some one shall revise the words of Paul so that they shall read, "Let a man examine his neighbor and so let him permit him to eat."

Now a word as to the union with Adventists which has caused this discussion. The union is neither a surrender of truth nor an endorsement of error. As a people we are and always were one. Certain leaders among them have cried "mad dog" till many honest souls have stood in mortal fear of the "Age to come," and yet were themselves believing it without knowing it. On our part too great haste, and I regret to add, too little of the spirit of Christ has been manifested. Some of us have run very fast and in our eagerness have reproached those who were slower perhaps of apprehension and dragged in the rear. Mutual recriminations have followed, and what should never have been a split at all, was led into a chasm broad and deep, by what I consider misguided brethren seconded only too largely by designing men. But light has been shining, truth has been dawning, a better feeling has been gradually growing by the unceasing efforts of some of us until the feeling that we are brethren has become so strong that the best advice I can give to those who oppose, is to "stand from under." But I have extended this too long already and will close by giving an extract from John Thomas, as quoted by yourself in your criticism of our Christadelphian brother, which shows how he felt towards his disciple brethren before he became puffed up with knowledge and poisoned by the idea that he was designed by God as a great leader.

"We do not feel that we are called upon to do more than to testify to and for the truth. We have not been appointed a judge in these matters by God or man; therefore whatever we may think of the Christianity of persons called Reformers and Baptists, we feel at liberty only to show them the position they occupy in relation to the truth, and neither to refuse, nor admit them into the fellowship of God. This is beyond our jurisdiction. We believe that God has admitted us into this fellowship, through faith in the Gospel of the Kingdom in the name of Jesus. Having obeyed this Gospel by immersion into the Holy Ones, and continuing to walk in the truth, we have 'fellowship with the Father and His Son Jesus Christ,' and the Apostles of the Lord. If others do this, 'we have fellowship one with another,' not else. We do not regard the breaking of bread at the same table a test of fellowship, but the walking in the light as God is in the light. We leave others, such as Messrs. Campbell, Wallis and King, to cast men out of fellowship; for our own part we pass not sentence, whatever we may think the party may deserve, 'until the Lord come.' We show what the truth is, where it condemns and justifies, and leave the application to particular cases to the individuals themselves. We are not Lords over men's consciences; when these become sufficiently enlightened they will not rest until they do the truth, and then all will work well."

J. F. WILCOX.

A Few Principles and Their Results.

1. God is no respecter of persons; but he does respect character. Human flesh or simply man in the flesh, without either a character or the possibility of one is a cypher. Neither God nor man values it.

It is a man's character for good which renders him precious in the sight of God and good men; it is his character for evil which renders him hateful and odious to God and good men. If he has neither he is a blank, a mere lump of animated flesh.

2. The character which is acceptable to God is formed alone by faith. "Without faith it is impossible to please him."

The sublimest, most spotless virtue is valueless without faith; if we were to suppose such a spotless state possible without confidence in God, which is the essence of faith.

It is faith alone which "purifies the heart," justifies, sanctifies redeems,—hence,

3. It is unbelief alone which renders a man odious to God. If the good character is formed by faith alone the bad character is formed alone by its opposite,—unbelief. It is then unbelief alone which condemns,—hence,

4. He who is without faith is without a good character and he who is without unbelief is without a bad character and he who has neither faith nor unbelief has neither a character for good nor evil. But,

5. "How can they believe on him of of whom they have not heard?" "Faith cometh by hearing." But if so, it is manifest that unbelief cometh also by hearing, for it is impossible to disbelieve a proposition of which one has never heard. Nevertheless,

6. Man in a state of nature is in a state of sin: that is men naturally do whatever their impulses suggest, and their impulses being evil their practices are such also. Yet,

7. "Sin is not imputed" to them when God has not expressly forbidden the practice of the evil, simply because it is natural: they are the victims of an inherited depravity. But,

8. They inherit also death. Death is in their constitution by generation. They are not responsible for it yet they cannot escape it.

9. We may therefore properly define man in a state of nature as a malformed ill-behaved moral blank. Sometimes a savage, sometimes a sage; now a ferocious tiger, now a gentle lamb; anon a snarly dog, then a filthy swine; through it all ill only for the extinction which awaits him at death. And,

10. Death extinguishes this glimmering taper. The light is not removed to glimmer in "another sphere," it is quenched in darkness. This malformed ill-behaved animal dies because he is an animal; dies as an animal. There is no superior immortal savage which deftly escapes the edge of the sword which severs in twain the mortal and inferior savage; death clutches him in its relentless grasp and he is "quenched as tow." He vanishes more effectually than a vapor or a smoke, he disappears as a dream and cannot be found. He had no character to be preserved in the memory of God, and be it remembered, God respects not the person but the character also. e. "The flesh profiteth nothing"

Were he of the family of faith he would have carried down into the death state something worthy of rescue and eternal perpetuation. Had he rejected the offer of life through the Life Giver he would have purchased for himself the ignominy of a public exposure and execution. But he has done neither.

He walked the earth for a time; a Grand Reality, we may call him, at least sometimes, but a Grand Failure, at all times. He has evolved nothing permanent out of his life, neither good nor evil. All has been evanescent because all has been of the flesh. He was for a time animated flesh and that alone, but "His breath goeth forth he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish." Now where is he? You cannot grasp him in your hand, you clutch at vacancy, you cannot hold his memory in reverence, nor in abhorrence for he was morally a blank. Character comes of faith or its lack. At best he was but a possibility; and do you drop a tear for a possibility?

Remember that "God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham." What innumerable possibilities lie in God's power. Shall we weep them or what God might do but says his hand? Weep for the hidden untimely birth, when the family sword is lifted? Weep for the blasted fruit, when the storehouses burst with plenty? Weep for the hours that come and went ere time began? Weep for all the worlds that might be but are not, when the heavens are radiant with glory!

Will God produce a nothing? Will he return to the beginning and fashioning an imperfect man out of the dust antipodply him by myriads and start him in an unequal race for life?

He created but a single pair at first from the dust of the ground and gave command to multiply. They too were moral blanks, but not malformed by the generation degeneracy of centuries. Physically "very good" their equipoise was perfect, their choice deliberate, and yet they fell. Will God create anew myriads of malformed failures, as really non-existent as though they had never been; creatures which he cannot pronounce "very good," but which justice shall be acknowledged to be very bad; and start them in a race for life? And why? Because by the action of the generation function they once lived, but coming of a degenerate stock were malformed and were by the law of their being extinguished justice demands that they shall be reproduced and try the problem of life under more favorable circumstances. Has the generation function of the race ceased that the Cre tor must resort once more to forming man from the dust of the ground? And has the type become so degenerate that he can no longer create them "very good" but must fill the earth with abortions? Here are to be myriads of Adam's and Eve's. They have a memory perhaps that they once lived but for all the purposes of character they now live for the first time; life is an untried field; its former possibilities yielded them nothing, all is new; how will justice? how will mercy? how will wisdom? start this multitude of new born creatures, millions of them infants, on the path of life? Remember we have not now to deal with the inexorable law of generation which condemns the child to shiver if the parent was naked; by which the child's teeth were set on edge when the fathers had eaten sour grapes; it is simply a question of the Divine sovereignty: what nation shall the Creator give the unexercised to bring? He is not hampered by the necessity of reproducing a being with a former character, so that the recreated man shall be a resurrection man, so that Abraham shall have the same power of thought and feeling, the same memory, the same love, hope, faith and obedience. He is free to give the new man such an organization as this sovereignty determines.

As yet his character is unformed, he is a moral blank, as was the only other man formed from the dust, and as must every other man be until tested by law, dead or alive. Now what shall their nature be? what sort of a disposition shall they have, what shall be their physical construction? How much brain shall they have and of what proportion? How was a Digger Indian but half raised above the brute, shall his brain be increased? If not, Almighty wisdom may preach the Gospel to him in vain. How is a South Sea Islander, savage as a wild beast, shall he be tamed? How is a licentious Greek or Roman Courtesan, shall she be cleansed? May Almighty love not abate just a jot of the natural ferocity or stupidity or uncleanness of these new Adams and Eves so that they may stand a trifle better chance to accept the mildness of Gospel when it shall be preached to them? or must they accept the grave responsibility of hearing a message which, if rejected, or slighted, brings with it hidden and awful terrors, under circumstances so unequal and conditions so unfair? Is recreated at all from the dust into which they have crumbled does not wisdom, mercy, justice, cry out that they shall be "very good?" But if "very good," or good at all, it will not be the board of savages which beat each other into chaff on the battle fields of the former life.

It will be a brand new race, hence ——Will the conceit has disappeared and needs nothing further.

Like Jesus.

Do we really wish to be like Jesus? We should be horrified at the answer "No." but can we truly respond "Yes." Christ's spirit was one of prayer. Do we desire to spend the whole night in prayer? Christ's spirit was one of love. Do we wish to love everybody as Jesus loved us? Christ's spirit was one of generosity. Do we want to make such sacrifices as Jesus made when he gave up heaven for us? Christ came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. Do we longto have appointed unto us a life of hard work for others—to be acquainted with grief, so that those who neglect and defame us may have a brighter lot, and those who cast out our name as evil may gain glory and honor and immortality? Let us beware of mocking God. We cannot deceive him with prayer that is insincere.

Sand and ashes can be fashioned into a sparkling mirror, but what furnace heat they must endure!—Christian Advocate.

Cestelar's voice was sure to be heard during the discussion in the Spanish Cortes last week on the question of retaining the religious freedom clause in the new constitution. "The state," he said, "undertakes to support the Roman Catholic religion and its ministers. Well, I give that creed its due honor; I own its beauty, and its force and its antiquity. And you say, 'This is true religion.' Sirs, are you so gross as to say, 'This is the truth,' because it is imposed by human law and force of arms? Nay, you will surely say, 'This is true because, and only because, it recommends itself to your heart and conscience as the true one;' and if so why do you want a human law to force you to follow that which your conscience tells you is true? Are you afraid of a rival? Sirs, you do an honor to Protestantism if you think it so true as to be able, in a fair race, to contrun Roman Catholicism. But if it be not true, this religion of the state—if it be not true, brother deputies, what then? Magna est veritas, et praevalebit. If the Roman Catholic creed be true it will prevail by force of truth; if Protestantism be true it will prevail, and you cannot crush it. If this liberty of conscience be of God you cannot, if of man you need not, crush it."

Recent diggings for the foundation of new buildings by the Russians, on the Mount of Olives, disclose old mosaic pavements with inscriptions (mosaic) in the various languages, as well as tombs still, strange to say, fortified, at quite a little distance below the surface of the ground. In one of the rooms of the Russian convent or church, there is quite a little cabinet of articles exhumed.

The Servians have always been bitter persecutors of the Jews. The cruelties they are now suffering from the Turks—the gis inexcusable—may be a sort of retribution for their own oppressions. It has been hinted—and perhaps that is just possible—that Disraeli's Jewish blood has had something to do in making him apparent ly indifferent to Turkish atrocities.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Burdon, Congregationalist minister, and W. Kelloway, editor of The Echo, and minister of the Gospel. Price 6d [illegible]. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist as spirits, conscious state without their bodies. Affirmed by W. C. B. 2. That the Scriptures teach that men in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and stupid in persons and character, and that they rest in darkness, all we and the dust. Ably handled formerly, will bound, 656 pages 8vo. Paper cover, 3s; postage 6d.

It is particularly clear in its [illegible] final clergymen [illegible] with the Greek words used by the Inspirers were to [illegible] the doom of the lost. Price 2s; post 2d.

—We [illegible] with lively satisfaction. Undoubtedly the subject which it treats will, such an attractive combination of learning and [illegible] of power and exactness, has laid [illegible] of the ablest many of the most thoughtful Christian men of our day. It appears, in a pamphlet in the first edition [illegible] about fifteen hundred and thirty pages in the fourth, is conclusive proof that the question discussed is one of profound importance.....We must also compliment the publisher on the excellent and handsome dress in which they present the book to the public, and express the hope that the necessary outlay will speedily be such a more than ordinary sale as the large size of a work which now takes a standard place in this peculiarly misunderstood department of Christian theology.—The Rambler.

This work presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection.

—Mr. [illegible] has, in a series of works, devoted much labor and research to this [illegible] cross Scripture and other sources the real nature of the future of [illegible] present here. "My Boast is in the Glorious Cross of Christ."

The following is one of the most remarkable compositions ever known. It evinces an immediately inspiration. We say, "The fruitful theme of My Boast is in the glorious Cross of Christ." The words in capital letters, on the left-hand side, when read from top to bottom, and the words on the right hand side, when read from bottom to top, form the Lord's prayer complete:—

The Power of His Resurrection.

The subject on which I am to speak to you by Dr. Horatius Bonar, of Edinburgh, Scotland, before the Mulberry Street Reformed Dutch Church, New York, June 20th.

"That I may know Him and the power of His resurrection." Phil. 3: 10. This was the summing up of the Apostle's longing; it ought at all times to be the summing up of ours. The Master, ere he left the earth, said, "Father, I will that they whom Thou hast given me may be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory." That was the summing up of his longings for his church; it ought to be the summing up of our longing for ourselves; and it is for this that we gather together to-day—that we may behold his glory.

The knowledge here spoken of is not a heaven's, an eternity's knowledge. It is the knowledge of Christ crucified that justifies us, and it is the knowledge of Christ in the varied stages of his life, his character, and of his work, that we are to increase from day to day. These are the daily studies of the Christian. But it is specially of the power of Christ's resurrection that the apostle here speaks. The power manifested in raising Christ from the dead is always spoken of as a passive wonder-fact, but it is not God by which he performs it. It is that power proceeding from risen Christ, the power deposited for the church in the hands of a risen Christ.

I fear we have too seldom considered this subject of power, either in heaven or upon earth, as connected with the Christ of God. We generally associate power with God Himself, the creator, and forget how in Scripture, almost from first to last, power is associated with the Christ of God. We learn on evidence that it was God the Father, who created all things, does Scripture say so? "He hath created all things by Christ." "Without Him was not anything made that was made." Christ—or, to use the more exact expression, the Word of God—was the Creator. And as you pass on you find the power of the eternal Word, the Son of God, all through Scripture. God had taken special pains to show that power is associated with his only begotten Son.

We find power connected with the whole life of Christ—power connected with his incarnation, connected with his cradle—power connected with his whole life. We sometimes miss this in not noticing that the word translated "virtue" in the Gospels is literally "power." "There went virtue out of Him and healed them all," means there went power out of Him. His cross was the combined manifestation of weakness and power. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." Here is the irresistible, attractive power of the crucified One. In his grave we have power manifested. In his resurrection we have the first great and special manifestation of power; and hence the Apostle thus connects power with the resurrection. As the risen Christ: He is especially the depositary of divine power.

For God's purpose from the beginning was to deposit the power of the Infinite Jehovah in the person of a Man, and that Man the Christ of God. So, when about to leave this earth, He used these words: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." On high it is still the power of the man Christ Jesus; He is seated on the throne, and from that throne He exhibits his power down here among the children of men. His intercession is the exhibition of power as the risen Christ, and the whole of his present government of this world at the Father's right hand is an unfolding of his risen power in connection with the church, with the world, and with the Father's purpose and will. "Sit Thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool."

But it is hereafter that the fullest manifestation of his power is to be seen. When he cometh for his own, we shall then see his resurrection-power exhibited in the resurrection of his church, and the first resurrection. "The Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first," &c. There is the power of the risen Christ, and then shall be fulfilled the words, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; O death! I will be thy plagues; O grave! I will be thy destruction."

Then shall we see the power of the risen Christ revealed in the overthrow of the man of sin, in whom concentrates the power of earth and hell, and of science, of philosophy, and of all human error. He shall destroy the man of sin with the breath of his mouth and with the brightness of his coming. Then shall come to pass what is written, "Death and hell were cast into the lake of fire." Thus shall the power of the risen Christ sweep away all the evil which has overbrowed the earth for 6000 years. Then the voice of the risen Christ is heard, "Behold I make all things new." There shall be a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. And the deliverance of creation from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God, we shall owe to the power of the risen Christ, deposited in Him, first for the redemption of his church, then for the over throw of his enemies, and ultimately for the renewal of this earth, over which Satan, as the great adversary, has had dominion for 6000 years. Then we shall know what the power of his resurrection is, and the power going forth from Him who died, was buried, rose again, and who shall come in his own glory and in his Father's glory, and with all his mighty angels.

It is to this power that we are indebted for everything. We speak of his love, but we must not forget his power—not merely in connection with the future history of the world and the church, but in connection with their present history. Men of science speak of God; do they ever speak of Christ? We speak of men of science as atheists; some of them I mean—those who deny the existence of Him who created all things. We forget that there is another crime to be laid to their charge; they are deniers of the Christ of God. We speak of modern science as opposing God: it opposes Christ. And all the controversies in connection with the Christ of God. We have perhaps narrowed them to the one point of controversy in connection with the existence of God, but they are controversies in connection with the Christ of God, whom God hath made King and Lord, Ruler of all things in heaven and in earth. It is against Him that not only the kings of the earth are fighting, but the philosophers are contending. And it is with regard to those opposers of the Son that the second Psalm was written, and the gracious loving message, "Kiss ye the Son lest He be angry and ye perish from the way when once his wrath is kindled but a little. For the wrath of the Lamb is the most terrible of all."

Our daily life is connected with this power of the risen Christ; our power for service, our spiritual life, our ability to contend against the innumerable foes within and without. It is to this that we flee in the day of temptation and conflict. We are to be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. Have we used this power as we ought, for our own growth in holiness, for the quickening of our divine life? Have we used it in his service?

The time is coming when the universe shall recognize this power. As we read the 24th Psalm I felt myself, verse after verse, applying them to the Christ of God. His voice is that which is heard speaking there; it is the voice of Christ that shivers the cedars, that makes Lebanon bow, that causes the creation travail. It was the same voice that on the earth said, "Come unto Me, all ye that are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." That voice shall be heard again, heard on earth, heard in heaven, heard in hell. And at last this shall be the song which they sing: "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our God and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever. Hallelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

The Bible and Science.

The course of lectures recently delivered in this country by Professor Huxley has been listened to with a marked attention by scientists, theologians and others who claim to be above the average of mankind in education and intelligence. Indeed, such addresses are not and can not come under the head of popular lectures, and hence the circle of listeners is somewhat restricted, many not caring to have their deep-seated prejudices removed and what they term their religious belief shaken.

If the class of scientists of which Professor Huxley is a distinguished member has trains to bring forward as I place before the public in an intelligible manner, we cannot see how religion can suffer. To make such an assertion would be casting grave doubts on religion, and placing it in such a light, that it would need an atmosphere of ignorance and falsehood to sustain it.

The great mistake into which so many fall, is to regard the Bible as a book of philosophy or science—to look upon every accident there recorded as something to be analyzed by the mind, rather than as an appeal to the heart. It would be folly to do so, and whoever errs so egregiously, will draw the bitter end of disappointment at some period or other.

The Bible is a history of past events, as they were traditionally received, and accepted. It contains a code of morality which is unsurpassed, and the mutations of time and the changes of human thought have been unable to impair one iota of the beauties it unfolds before us as a means of elevating our souls and improving our hearts.

It gives the early history of the world, and especially of the Israelites. It breaks through the darkness of gloomy ages, and presents truths which we hold to be self-evident, and it was the great aim of the Mosaic dispensation to make things comprehensible to man, and banish the ignorance which surrounded mankind through the means of priestcraft and other causes.

Judaism has nothing to dread from from the investigations of modern scientists. What is truth must prevail despite our most preconceived ideas, and as to the doctrine of evolution and the placing the age of the world beyond the accepted six thousand years, we have had our own sages in distant times to make similar assertions and to base them on strong and tenable grounds without any dread or dismay filling the Hebrew heart lest the fabric of our faith should fall to pieces.

We know too well, that there many things we have accepted, many ideas we have imbibed, that we are unable to reconcile to our satisfaction, but they nevertheless exercise a mysterious influence over thought and action, which we dare not underrate; but to confound the emotions of the heart with the analyzing powers of the mind would be wronging ourselves and destroying many a means of comfort and happiness which we have long enjoyed and may hope to enjoy without any conflict between religion and science.

The Bible tells us, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. Is not that sufficient for the religious man? It does not require him to fix a time for this beginning—rather is it in the domain of the scientist to do so, but let it be six thousand, or sixty thousand years, it is enough for us to believe that "in the beginning" all that we see above, beneath and around us, were called into existence by him "who spoke and it was; who commanded and it stood fast."

An able writer has remarked that "a fertile source of confusion" arises from the different senses in which the term truth is applied. Truth to the scientist means something capable of demonstration by some one of the canons of induction while the religious man has been bred in the application of the term to facts of an entirely different order,—that is; "to emotions produced by certain beliefs which he cannot justify by arguments and about which no argument is necessary." It is this which has given rise to the term conflict, and instead of our theologians shrugging their shoulders and treating with apparent contempt, the arguments of such men as Professor Huxley, it would be far better for them to accept such things as incontrovertible and follow a religion which can go hand in hand with what may be called the logic of science.

Judaism has long maintained that what was termed the popular religion could not stand the test of unbiased investigation, and it was for refusing to accept as fact what we regarded as based on superstition and error, that called upon our heads all those terrible sufferings which have disgraced the annals of history. But, we have the satisfaction of knowing that a new light is fast dawning upon earth, and which must create in man's intellect a desire for something that is not repugnant to reason and common sense and incapable of standing the test of investigation.

It is thus that the [illegible] agency of the Deity is made apparent, and the day drawing nigh when men of all tongues and climes will acknowledge "the Lord is one and his name one."

Reaping.

The avocations of agricultural life furnish illustrations of the highest spiritual truth. Men sow that they may reap; and in the natural world the sowing is the period of toil and of trouble, while the reaping is the time of joy and reward. But the gladness of the harvest depends upon the character of the seed sown. The man who would sow his field with thorns, would find that, tedious as the sowing might be, the harvest would be far worse.

Our Savior likens the dissemination of his word to the scattering of seed by the sower's hand; and the ultimate results are seen in the great ingathering day, in the harvest which is the end of the age. The man who fills his soil with noxious weeds may vainly hope to gather precious fruits, and he who devotes a life to sinful courses may be insane enough to anticipate a harvest of blessing—but he will never be fortunate enough to realize it. Said the wise man, "He that soweth iniquity shall reap vanity" (Prov. xxii. 8). Said Eliphaz: "They that plow iniquity and sow wickedness reap the same" (Job. iv. 8). Said the prophet Hosea, "They have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind" (Hos. viii. 7). And he exhorts the people to sow to themselves in righteousness, that they may reap in mercy (Hos. x. 12).

The apostle bids us to remember that "he which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully" (2 Cor. ix. 6), and he charges us not to be deceived, and tells us that "God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he reap. And let us not be weary in well-doing; in due season we shall reap if we faint not" (Gal. vi. 7, 9).

We are all sowing day by day, and hour by hour we scatter seeds for good or ill. Words of kindness, acts of love, duties done and crosses borne for Jesus' sake, all these, like good seeds, shall bring forth precious fruit. On the other hand, if we sow the seeds of passion and folly, of sinfulness and vanity, of lust and pride, and the harvest is sure to come. The day of God will dawn; the secrets of the human heart will be made manifest; that which has been done in the darkness will be revealed in the light; that which has been whispered in the ear shall be told upon the house-top; they who have sown in tears the precious seed of God shall reap their harvest in joy; and those who have lived the life of sin and folly shall meet at last the fearful reward of their doings.

"Sown in the darkness or sown in the light,
Sown in our weakness or sown in our might,
Gathered in time or eternity,
Sure, ah! sure will the harvest be."
—The Christian.

Under the Glory.

Do you know the glory of God to be your portion, rejoicing in the hope of it? Do you see the bright light shining in the distance? The things we meet with on the road may be trying: Jacob's head lay on a stone pillow whilst he was enjoying the heavenly vision. The deep sands and sharp stones may make the wilderness road very uncomfortable to walk along, but God uses it for the breaking away of all that will not do for the glory; and by it is teaching me the patience of Christ, and putting that part of God's character before my soul. It is long, this waiting time; but will any who are weary now make a murmur when standing in the glory, at the length of the way they had to pass? We should even glory in tribulation because it works patience. Rom. v 3. Patience is not indifference. A patient man takes all that tries him and bears it in the presence of God.

Reader, the very fact that you have troubles is a proof of God's faithfulness; for you have got one half of his legacy, and you will have the other half. You know that Christ's last will and testament has two portions in it. "In the world ye shall have tribulation"—you have got that. The next clause is, "In me ye shall have peace." You have that too. "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." That is yours also.

Carnal hearts, it [illegible] more sensibly feel the wound than the sin that caused it.

The Living Christ.

The Rev. Alexander Clark contributes the following to his paper, the Methodist Recorder: In all the churches of Antwerp, as in all the cathedrals of the continent, it is the dead Christ who is pictured, carved, and worshiped. The Christ of Romanism is everywhere still hanging on the cross. You will see him at the altars of grand churches, in cloisters, abbeys, nunneries, monasteries—but he is dead. The nails still hold the body to the wood. The Christ of the Roman Catholics can not get loose from the cross. He is yet mocked, yet scourged, yet reviled, yet bleeding; but he is dead! Along the highways of Germany, at the cross roads, at the corners of streets, I saw in every direction, little images of Jesus with his arms stretched out, his feet pinioned, his head bowed—it was the Roman Catholic dead Christ. The Roman soldiers still have possession of him. He still hangs between two thieves. Mary alone has been exalted. Jesus is dead. Whenever we see pictures of Mary, she is alive, she sees, she moves, she loves, she answers prayers, but Jesus Christ is dead, dead! And it is a dead Christ before whom the millions of Europe are bowing down, in a sort of dumb piety, as if the Lord still needed the sponge and vinegar!

But the gospel proclaims Jesus who was dead, alive again! No cross pinions his dear limbs now. No lance pierces his side any more. No bloody sweat is upon his brow; no paleness on his lips, no thirst on his tongue. He had power to lay down his life, and to take it up again! Our Jesus lives. The eye of faith sees a far more beautiful picture than Rubens's "Elevation of the cross"—far more touching and sublime than his "Descent from the Cross!" It is his resurrection from the grave—his ascension into heaven—his intercession at the right hand of the Father. Faith looks up and sees Jesus as he is! why should we be forever looking down to him as he was? If anybody ever had a right to look about for a dead Christ, it was Mary, his mother, and the other Marys who went to his grave. But the first answer to their question was, "He is not here; he is risen as he said. Come, see where the Lord lay." The true religion exalts Jesus, and worships him as the living Redeemer. It needs no crucifix with an image of a dead Christ, no painting of the body white, and still, and cold upon the cross or in the tomb. He is not there. He lives. His arms are not stretched on a cross, but in heavenly benediction. The crown of thorns is withered long and long ago, and now he wears a crown of glory. He is Lord of all. Bless his dear name, he liveth!

The Minimum Christian.

Let us see if the following definition, given by the Presbyterian at Work of the "minimum Christian," will apply to ourselves individually:

The minimum Christian! And who is he? The Christian who is going to heaven at the cheapest rate possible; the Christian who intends to get all the world he can, and not meet the worldling's doom; the Christian who aims to have as little religion as he may without losing it altogether.

The minimum Christian goes to church in the morning, and in the afternoon also, unless it rains, or is too warm, or too cold, or he is too sleepy, or has a headache from eating too much dinner. He listens most respectfully to the preacher, and joins in the prayer and praise. He applies the truth very judiciously,—sometimes to himself, often to his neighbors.

The minimum Christian is very friendly to all good works. He wishes them well; but it is not in his power to do much for them. The Sabbath school he looks upon as an admirable institution, especially for the neglected and the ignorant. It is not convenient, however, for him to take a class. His business engagements are so pressing during the week that he needs Sunday as a day of rest; nor does he think himself qualified to act as a teacher. There are so many persons better prepared for this important duty that he must beg to be excused. He is very friendly to home and foreign missions and colportage, and gives his wife. He thinks there are too many appeals, but he gives, if not enough to save his reputation, pretty near it; at all events he aims to.

The minimum Christian is not clear on a number of points. The opera and dancing, the theatre and card-playing, and large, fashionable parties, give him much trouble. He cannot see the harm in this or that or the other popular amusement. There is nothing in the Bible against it. He does not see but that a man may be a Christian and dance, or go to the opera. He knows several excellent persons who do. Why should not he? He stands as close to the dividing line between the people of God and the world that it is hard to say on which side of it he is actually to be found.

Ah, my brother, are you making this attempt? Beware, lest you find at last that, in trying to get into heaven with a little religion, you miss it altogether; lest, without gaining the whole world, you lose your own soul!

Peculiar Sorrow.

There is no sorrow that is peculiar to any human being. In the myriad experiences of the human family the same scenes of trial, temptation, and affliction are re-acted from year to year. The numbered human hearts, framed and formed in all their deepest sympathies by one creative hand, have in them lines and characteristics of likeness, and the joys and sorrow of any heart may find their counterpart in hundreds of thousands of others. "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man." Bereavement, betrayal, bereavement, affliction, desolation, the breaking of tender ties, and the sundering of loving hearts,—all these are but the common sorrows of a world that is filled with pain, and sighing, and tears.

However much we may deem our own condition exceptional and peculiar or however strange our afflictions may seem to be, when compared with what has occurred in our own narrow circle of observation, yet those same experiences taken up into the broader circle that opens before the Divine mind, may be doubtless paralleled in every point by the experiences of others around us.

But if there were a sorrow or a trial which mortals had never known, yet there is this consolation,—our Master, our leader, our helper, was "touched with the feeling of our infirmities" and was "tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin." He has passed through this weary pathway, and his footprints, marked with blood, are everywhere before us. We may come to him with tender and confiding love and tell to him the story of our grief without reserve. He knoweth the way we take; he watches us through every fiery trial; he sits as a refiner of silver, carefully watching that which is so precious to him, until he shall see his own image reflected in the molten mass. May God grant us grace to bear our peculiar trials, and to overcome in the conflicts that are appointed us, that at last, having suffered with Christ, we may reign with him in peace and joy and blessedness forevermore.

The Power of Christ's Coming.

The certainty and the nearness of the Lord's coming, and the duty of waiting for it are now, blessed be God, much more generally acknowledged and realized. I trust that the hearts of Christians are becoming more and more established in this solemn reality. That it is not a mere careless repetition of words when they say, We believe that thou shalt come to be our Judge; and when they say in the creed, He sitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almighty; from thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead. Doubt not of the fact at all. Be expecting it, and be waiting for it; earnestly desire to be ready and prepared for it. Lord, we believe; help thou our belief. O, may we live more and more in the light of this coming judgment, and accustom ourselves to view everything with constant reference to it. The bringing near of the final judgment, and the realizing of the wrath then to descend on the wicked, and the promised glory then to be bestowed on the righteous, are full of weighty influence on all our duties. The solemnities and infinite magnitude of the judgment, its irreversible issue, and its eternal decision of our future state, as inhabitants of hell or heaven; and the assurance that the Judge now standeth at the door, cannot fail to quicken every one who receives God's testimony in simple faith.

Our Calling.

How important is the truth which we express in the naming of our work in this world our "vocation," or, which is the same, finding utterance in homelier Anglo Saxon, our "calling." What a calming, elevating, ennobling view of the tasks which we find ourselves set in this world to do, this word would give us, if we did but realize it to the full. We did not come to our work by accident; we did not choose it for ourselves; but under much which may wear the appearance of accident and self-choosing, came to it by God's leading and appointment.

What a help is this thought to enable us to appreciate justly the dignity of our work, though it were far humbler work, even in the eyes of men, than that of any of us. What an assistance in calming unsettled thoughts and desires, such a world make us wish to be something else than that which we are! What a source of confidence, when we are tempted to lose heart, and to doubt whether we shall be able to carry through our work with any blessing or profit to ourselves or to others! It is our "vocation," our "calling;" and He who "called" us to it, will fit us for it, and strengthen us in it.—Trench.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God or Heaven upon the earth with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and faith—which is prerequisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Inherent Immortality Untrue.

To the Brethren and Sisters near Paris, Illinois, and Other Places, Where I Have Labored.

Several times lately, I have promised to be with you, when my professional and other engagements have hindered; and now age and long declining health threaten that I shall never be able to do so. But if health and strength will permit, I will do so as soon as convenient.

Under these circumstances, if the columns of our good paper permit, I address you briefly upon the above subject. Not that I would elaborate this subject scripturally. This has been done often, and well done. Besides it would occupy too much space. Nor that I would elaborate it from nature and facts; but only give a few facts and arguments against inherent immortality.

Nor would I do this if it were an idle work only. If man is what he is represented by a majority of the professing world, then is the Gospel of Christ, and especially his sufferings and death, unnecessary. If any part of man had been immortal, then that part could not have sinned, could not have died, and would not have needed a resurrection. It would not have needed a Savior, pardon, salvation, nor any of the means and appliances of the Gospel. If immortal, capable of a happy existence out of the body, then was there no necessity for means being set on foot to save the shell, the house of clay, any more than the body of beasts and other animals. Indeed, the mighty efforts put forth by God to redeem man, the gift of his darling Son, his death, resurrection and ascension to glory, his coming again to raise and immortalize the dead, and to render his living saints deathless:—these are all expenditures of grace and power wholly above the needs of saving senseless shells. Besides, they are phantasies nowheres taught in the Bible. But we are not now discussing this subject from a Biblical point of view. Facts, stubborn facts and arguments are now our only concern. Is man in any of his component parts, immortal? If so, in what part, and how may it be demonstrated? So far as the body is concerned all agreeons to its mortality. The history of the world demonstrates this. It has been utterly swept of its inhabitants by death more than a hundred times. The materials of which man is composed are constantly changing, and cannot, therefore, be immortal. His material elements, organized or unorganized, is neither mortal nor immortal. There may be organization without life, as in Adam's case, and therefore neither mortality nor immortality. There must be life first, before there can be death; and when life reigns, unless immortal life, death must necessarily reign also, although not both at the same instant of time.

There is nothing more in the elements of man to prove his immortality than there is in that of the beast. True, a man is not a horse, nor is a horse a man. Though the same elements exist in man and horse, as is chemically demonstrated, still these elements are so differently arranged, that they produce a difference in form, feature and texture, producing all the difference we see in horse and man; and so with all other animals. So, too, form, feature and texture, make all the differences that we see in individuals of the same race and family. So, too, these differences in form, feature and texture make the male and female. And so, too, did these make a Webster, a Clay, and the lower order of idiots.

The noble Hon has the same chemical components that the hated hyena has; and the differences that obtain between them are all owing to the atomic arrangement of elements and organization. So with the noble horse and the vilest reptile that crawls; and so, too, with the highest and noblest type of manhood, physically, intellectually and morally, and the very lowest form of humanity.

But the soul, what of it? Just what Intellectual or bungling surgeons make of it. Let a score of these come at us with their scalpels, their forceps, and, according to their dexterity or blunderings in dissections—definitions—so will their soul stand out, naturally and beautifully formed, or miserably disfigured. That the soul, primarily considered among all nations and ages, savage and civilized, and in all languages, means an organized being or creature, the highest as well as the lowest type, will at once be conceded by scientists as well as men of common sense, by theologians as well as naturalists. Hence, men are called souls, whether dead or alive, and so, too, are all animals. This is both the language of the Bible and of science, as well as the language and usages of society.

That it has other meanings is not denied. It sometimes represents life, breath, heart, mind, appetite, lust, etc. But, wherever these occur in Scripture, the text and context will make all plain. So, too, in all other writings. The first history of the words man and soul will be found in the oldest book in the world—the Bible. There it is said God made man of the dust, and breathed into him the breath of life, and man became a living soul. And, in that Book, so is as said to be begotten, to die, to be cut through with swords, etc.

True, latter day theologians, speculative philosophers, as well as the crude under strata of society, say that the soul is immortal, an entity, encased somewhere in the mortal body, but of what shape, how organized, what department it occupies, whether propogated or immediately given of God at or anterior to birth, they are as ignorant as the horse.

But why should God make a higher being, an immortal being, a part of himself indeed, and thrust it into a corruptible, sinful, mortal body? to be smutted by it, and then to be judged, condemned or glorified as the case might be? Such theology and philosophy shock all reason and common sense. If immortal and part of God, then when it sins, God sins, and when God condemns it he condemns part of himself! If it were anterior to the body, holy, intellectual, capable of a happy existence out of the body, then surely this looks like unfair dealings with the soul, and convicts God as a great bungler in making dual man!

But it is no fault of God, that this confused, bungling philosophy has obtained. It is not found in the Bible, and nowhere taught in nature. The Bible condemns it. Anatomy, physiology and pathology contradict it. But forsooth, upon the pitiful plea that the Bible speaks of the soul of man, the spirit of man, some will have it that these are entities! Some, therefore, have dual man, and some triune man. The Bible, too, speaks of the eyes of man, the nose of man, the tongue of man, the ears of man, the hands of man, etc. Why not immortalize these, and make a little universe out of him? With his 250 bones, his 500 muscles, with the various organs and tissues of man, all of which may be equally as well immortalized as the soul, and made better entities, what a multifarious being we could make man!

Now man, either dead or alive, is no more man without soul, than man is man without eyes, ears, nose, etc. So neither is he living man, without body, soul and spirit. It takes all these to constitute the living, unit man. Now, if we were honest and unprejudiced, and were willing to investigate, we could tell precisely what the Bible meant by body, soul and spirit, by turning to the text and examining that and the context in every instance. These words are not always used in their primary sense; but finding the text and context where used, and letting the Bible be its own interpreter, we need hardly ever be in doubt. No more do these words always mean the same thing when used by other writers and speakers. One thing, however, is sure: no man can find the phrase "immortal soul" in the Bible. And, reasoning fairly and logically, if the words are not there, neither is the idea; for words are but signs of ideas. So, with these arguments and our present design, we let these suffice upon the soul.

What of the spirit? Primarily it means wind, air or atmosphere. That it has other meanings, we concede. Some of these we shall show before through. "The body without the spirit is dead." That this means breath, all must admit. So, too, a fœtus, full grown, with all the signs and conditions of maturity and integrity, may be still born. Now, unless the conditions of breathing be only temporarily suspended, and may be self-gained, unless artificial means are resorted to and persisted in by physician or nurse, the child will always remain dead. What is needed in its case? Atmospheric air to move the lungs to action—not an immortal spirit from God. It needs just what Adam needed when made a quiescent soul, being, or creature. He needed "the breath of life" to move his lungs to action, and then he became a living soul. Every living animal must have the same "breath of life" or spirit. This principle pervades God's universe, and is in his hands and under his control. Hence, "in him we live, and move, and have our being."

The Greek word pneo, from which pneuma is derived, is "to blow," and hence, to breathe; and, in its primary meaning, is always rendered air, wind, breath. That it, like all other words, has other than primary significations, all know. But that it nowhere in the Bible, or out of it, ever means an immortal entity, unless applied to God, to Christ, to angels, or resurrected saints, I most emphatically affirm. These are all called spirits, and are immortal entities. So false prophets are called spirits, but not immortal. Spirit, too, in other than primary meanings, is mind, life, thoughts, dispositions, etc.

But whoever thought, or dreamed, until the Man of Sin enthroned himself in the church, and claimed power to give private interpretations, that God made an immortal entity, called spirit, and placed it inside another entity, called man? The idea is preposterously absurd. Nowhere in God's universe, aside from man was it ever attempted to be proven that two or three distinct natures and beings are ever merged into one entity! Is man an anomaly? Did God depart from all his known operations in making man? It is as absurd, as ridiculous, and unphilosophical to affirm that mortal and immortal, that the Divine and human may unite in one being, as to say that oil and water will unite. Were it not that man-made theology has for centuries taught all kinds of absurdities, and that philosophers, so-called, have arrogated to themselves to re-iterate these absurdities and incongruities, men of sense would treat with the utmost contempt such theories.

It is said that God is a spirit, that all men and animals have. Is it is God more than one? "To us," says Paul, "there is one God." Is a horse two or more? Is man two or more?

These miserable philosophers and theologians make man the shell of clay, irresponsible; then man the soul and spirit, entities that inhabit the house, immortal. These last they place inside to lead and direct the shell; and then damn the shell, though irresponsible, for being thus led! These are pure, immortal, part of God; and yet, when they get them so far away from God, they make them riot in drunkenness and every evil work! Still God is their Father; they his sons; and yet he must curse and damn them, and they part of himself!

This is hard philosophy on these spirits. And it makes God a great bungler. These once safe and happy spirits sin, are raised and die which means immortal life in misery!!! It is preposterous.

If this were true, no being in God's universe is safe. If these immortals sin and die, so may the immortal angels. Heaven may thus be depopulated and hell filled with once happy immortal beings!

Worse, and more of it. If this were true, there could be no pardon, salvation for any. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission." Immortals have no blood to shed. Dead

THE RESTITUTION

PLYMOUTH, IND., ... NOV. 16th, 1876.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞ We are to attend the dedication of the meeting house, next Sunday, at Argos. It is to be hoped that there will be a general turn out.

☞ Bro. W. J. Orem, of Kansas, is now spending a few days with us. He is in earnest for the Gospel, and is looking for a crown of glory when the King comes. Bro. Orem is on his way home from the East, where he has been preaching the Word.

☞ Mrs. E. G. White has another book of visions in press. Price: One dollar. At the present rate she will have more visions than all the prophets put together, before she winds up When the Spirit is poured out on "all flesh" the world will be crowded with visions. But Mrs. White does not let the other seers come to the front. "All flesh" is mostly confined to Mrs. W. Strange!

Editorial Correspondence.

We are absent from our accustomed post in Plymouth for a little while. On Monday, Oct. 30th we started to visit some old and tried christian friends in New Jersey, and, at the same time, to take a look at the great Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia before it should close. Our way was by the Chicago, Pittsburgh, and Pennsylvania Rus through the Eastern part of Indiana, and onward through the States of Ohio and Pennsylvania. We pass many interesting towns and cities on our way, as well as a great deal of beautiful and interesting country. Perhaps no scenery on the American continent is more sublimely beautiful than that of the Alleghany Mountains on the line of this road. The grand, winding curves of the road around the precipitous heights, that lift their blue peaks cloudward, till some are absolutely lost above the misty mantle, impress the traveller with admiration of that engineering skill that has planned and completed a path of iron over which the metallic courier, exhaling the hot breath of scalding steam, swiftly careers with its long drawn line of stately coaches filled with their precious freight of human beings. We turn the celebrated horse-shoe bend, then, when a barrier that cannot be scaled nor wound around by the iron horse seems to intercept all further progress, we plunge into a tunnel 3670 feet long, and emerge on the opposite side to triumphantly descend the eastern grades along the Juniatta to the Susquehannah, so loved by the red man before the pale face supplanted him in the land where were the bones of his fathers. On the banks of this loved river Ne-do-wa-way sat down on an over-looking height, and sadly surveyed the scenes of his childhood, and the homes of his ancestors, ere he took his final departure for far away western wilds.

We have not time nor space for detailed sketches of towns and localities in either their present flourishing condition, or their earlier history. Perhaps we may as well say at once that arriving in Philadelphia we made a visit to the U. S. mint, and surveyed its numismatica curiosities. In the work of present coinage, the mint is turning out silver pieces at a very rapid rate, in which it is using three tons of silver bullion each day. The number of twenty-five cent pieces daily stamped is 75'000.

The history of coinage is an interesting theme. The Ancient Hebrews took gold and silver only by weight, and stamped money belongs to a later period of history. Two standard weights are also frequently alluded too in the Scriptures—the talent and the shekel. The talent weighed 113 lb., 10 oz., 1 pwt., 10 2-7 gr., Troy weight. The value of this weight was, in gold, $243,100; in silver, $1,520. The shekel weighed 9 pwt., 3 gr. Its worth was, in silver, about 58¼ cents. The shekel of gold was only one half as heavy as that of silver and was worth $4.00. The Shekel finally became the name of a piece of stamped money in the time of the Maccabees.

In the cabinet we met with a genuine Hebrew shekel of Simon Maccabeus B. C. 145. On one side is represented the "pot of Manna," on the other is "Aaron's rod that budded." For thirty of these coins Judas betrayed the Lord. Reckoning silver without any premium this would amount to $16.16.

Here too is a veritable "Widow's mite." This particular piece is supposed to ante-date our era; its intrinsic worth is about one-fifth of a cent, or two mills; its Greek name was Lepton. The widow's gift would equal four mills—less than half a cent. This gift of minimum value has become one of maximum interest to Bible readers.

Here we see a coin of old Philadelphia struck some 2000 years ago. It is a bronze piece about the size of an old fashioned cent. Its weight is about 60 gr. In this old Philadelphia was one of the Apocalyptic churches. Through these regions the Apostles made their missionary journeys, and may have paid their traveling expenses in these and similar coins.

The oldest coins in the cabinet are those of the ancient Greek Republics. There are 150 specimens belonging to this particular department. Those numbered 4, 5, and 6, are supposed to be among the oldest in the world. They bear the impress of the little Greek State Aegina which flourished more than 2,500 years ago.

Here too may be seen the silver stater, in value something more than the shekel, or 60 cents. The didrachma was one-half the stater, and was the amount of capitation [tax assessed in the days of our Saviour; consequently the stater would pay the poll tax of two persons. The fish caught by Peter brought up the required piece, or silver stater. A specimen of this ancient coin, bearing the "image and superscription" of Cæsar, may be seen here. The Roman penny is also here, bearing Cæsar's stamp like the stater. Its value is about 15 cents. The laborers received every man a penny.

It would require a volume to fully describe all the specimens of coins of all the ancient and modern nations on exhibition here. We have called attention to some in order to illustrate Scripture as well as to convey some general information. We have spent two days on the grounds and in the buildings of the great Centennial exposition. We expect to spend one or two more days there. It is a most wonderful display of the riches of the Gentiles. Perhaps never since the foundation of the world was there at any time, such a collection of every thing useful, magnificent, beautiful, and pleasing to the beholder as is aggregated here. We offer a paper of this kind to the readers of the RESTITUTION for variety's sake. Should it be thought advisable we may give another.

S. A. CHAPLIN.

Haddonfield, N. J. Nov. 6, 1876.

Peace.

"Peace I leave with you. My peace I give unto you."

These tender words are in the last discourse of our Lord before his betrayal. His opening paragraph was, "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me." And all through the chapter containing this memorable sermon, breathes the same spirit of love and sympathy. Every sentence contains an admonition or a blessed promise—every verse carries with it a burden of unspeakable tenderness, for the little flock which he is so soon to leave in the wilderness without a shepherd.

The dark cloud that hangs before himself he does not allude to, save in the words, "A little while and ye shall not see me, and again a little while and ye shall see me." It is not his own agony that seems the heaviest—he is willing to bear the clouds and darkness, the suffering and the cross that await him in the near future, but his "little flock."—the "little ones" that God has given him—these are very near to his loving heart, and he sees them scattered, bereft, and forsaken.

It is for them he breathes words of Heavenly consolation. It is for them that his heart aches with its great burden of sympathy and tenderness. He closes with the words, "These things have I spoken unto you that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation, but be of good cheer. I have overcome the world."

Then follows his prayer to the Father—a prayer for himself and "for them which thou hast given me." He had overcome the world—it had henceforth no more temptations for him; hence he says, "I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name, those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one as we are!" The last words of his petition contain the plea "that the love wherewith thou hast loved me, may be in them and I in them." It is love and hope in the beginning.—it is hope and love in the ending. After this he went over the brook, the Cedron, and the scenes of the garden are placed in undying colors upon the canvas of living hearts. Then Calvary comes to the front,—comes with her baptism of blood, and her crown of thorns. But it is over at last, and the disciples have only a grave—only the darkness of loneliness and doubt—only the scoffs of the world and the storm of persecution. But deep in their hearts lie treasured the blessed words of the Master—words of hope and cheer—which are stronger than death, and deeper than the grave. "These things have I spoken unto you, that in me, ye might have peace." Darkness and uncertainly were around them, but his last words, freighted with love and tenderness, shone like a day star amid the gloom. The tempest of persecution beat against them, but in the midst of the blinding storm, his promise was the anchor that held them from the rocks of despair. He had said, "Yet a little while and ye shall see me." Death could not hold him, nor could the grave shut her gates against him who held her key. There was a broken seal, and a broken tomb; there were angel visits, and a living Christ.

Darkness became light, and hope was changed to a glorious reality.

But he prayed not for them alone, "but for them also that shall believe on me through their word, that they all may be one." His loving kindness is borne down through the ages, and embraces every believer in every clime. To each of us he saith, "Peace I leave with you." He left no selfishness or bigotry—he left no petty jealousies or worldly ambitions—he left no strife or bitter words. Our heritage from him is peace and joy and love. It is tenderness and hope. It is sympathy and faith in each other.

Our Lord has gone, not into the grave, but to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return. Still it is the night time of the church. He has gone—and we have only the word of promise to cheer our lonely hearts. His last prayer for us was the petition "that the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them." And surely if this is the love that we hold for each other we can bear with faults and mistakes. We are walking by faith, and not by sight, and none of us can see clearly enough to take the mote from a brother's eye. Darkness is around us—we have only a lamp for our feet, and the star of hope in the distant sky. But he has said, "if I go away, I will come again," and some glad morning our darkness shall flee away, and the Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings. Earth's valleys shall then be filled with his glory, and her mountains crowned with his light.

MRS. H. V. REED.

Wisdom and Goodness of God.

Wherever we turn our eyes we behold the beneficence of the Creator, on whom we are all dependent, and from whom we derive our comforts.

For the gratification of novelty planted in the human mind, He has spread our landscapes with beautiful colors. All nature presents to our view "a picturesque and diversified scenery." Here are the fields adorned with living verdure; there are the hills distilling from their sides the laughing little brook which moistens the plains through which it flows. Here is the lake stretched in smooth expanse; there is the river winding its way along the valley. Here are the mighty forests and there are the flowers, the azure sky and the beautiful morning clouds.

Already we are amazed at the wonders of Nature, yet they would forever have remained a mighty blank had not that one command gone forth, let there be light.

Reader, pause for a moment and consider the wisdom, which is displayed in the harmonious adjustment of the organs of sense to "the scenes of eternal nature."

Before the eye could be of any use to man in beholding the grandeur and sublimity which surrounds him in the earth and heavens, much is requisite.

First, three humours are necessary, the aqueous, vitreous and crystalline, the latter of which is composed of two thousand little scales lying one upon another, each one being made up of threads too small to be seen without the aid of a microscope. But this is not all. There are coats or membranes to be formed; one is the sclerotis having for its external surface a smooth, white covering, and for its internal a ridged brown; another is the cornea, the projecting transparent part of the eye; still another that thin vascular membrane called the choroid. Thus volumes might be written, and when concluded this wonderful piece of mechanism might be compressed into a socket, the size of only one inch in diameter.

A soft pillow for it to recline upon, the eyelid to protect it from danger, muscles to move it to the right and to the left, upwards and downwards, and more nerves, arteries, veins, lymphatics and glands than we have any conception of, were yet requisite to complete this little organ. And even in this state of perfection it would be useless were it not for the optic nerve, through which the impressions of visible objects are conveyed to the brain.

This "fearfully and wonderfully" constructed piece of machinery, also, is required to be in action, and a certain effect produced, before a scene can be contemplated. Millions upon millions of rays must fly off, in every direction, from the objects surrounding, and be compressed in the space of one eighth of an inch in order to enter the eye, every object being painted in its own color, size and shape.

Such is the wisdom of God displayed in the construction of a single organ. For the presentation of this sense, therefore, and the pleasures we derive from it, we have an abundance of reason to admire the goodness of our Father.

"I will sing unto Jehovah as long as I live; I will sing praise to God, while I have my being; I will utter abundantly the memory of His great goodness, and speak of His wonderful works. Many, O Lord, my God, are thy wonderful works, which thou hast done, and thy thoughts to us, they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee; if I should count them, they are more in number than the sand."

Thus it is shown that both Nature and Revelation agree in showing forth the wisdom and goodness of the Almighty Creator, as calculated to excite the highest degree of ardent affection in the minds of the whole intelligent creation. How, then, can we forbear exclaiming with the enraptured poet:—

"Through all eternity to thee
A joyful song I'll raise;
For, oh! eternity's too short
To utter all thy praise."

CYNTHIA MESSIMORE.

The Living Word.

The Word of God is the foundation of the works of God. "He spake and it was done, He commanded and it stood fast." "By the word of God the heavens were made, and the earth and all that is therein." By that same word through which God made all things at first, he shall make them new again. Hence when man, wrecked by sin, is to be restored to righteousness, the work is done by the Word of God. His word is as a fire and hammer which breaks in pieces the flinty rock. His word is quick and powerful; sharper than a two-edged sword. His word is a lamp to our feet and a light to our path. His word is the sword of the Spirit, wherewith we conquer our foes. His word is the incorruptible seed by which we are begotten to immortal life. His word is the sincere milk whereby the babes in Christ may grow. His word is able to make us wise unto salvation, through faith that is in him. By his word the man of God is to be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

Any system of faith or practice which ignores or sets aside the word of God is without root or foundation, without strength or substance. Heaven and earth shall pass, but God's word shall not pass away. He has magnified his word above all his name. Forever his word is settled in heaven; and those who dishonor it, or reject it, or cast it aside, will find that they have made a fatal mistake.

A gentleman said that in nearly one hundred successive religious meetings which he attended, held under the auspices of laymen professedly famed for revival work, not a Bible was opened, not a single passage from its pages read. Doubtless Scriptures were quoted, but a large proportion of the exercises consisted of hymns, addresses, and prayers, and, to say the least, the word of God was too much left out of sight. Such revivals as these are like shaving-fires in sheet-iron stoves; they burn, they blaze, and they die. Men are saved by faith, but faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. Men are saved by hope, but it is through "patience and comfort of the Scriptures" that we have hope. Men are saved by grace, but it is the word of God's grace that shows them the way of salvation. Let those who would labor successfully take heed that they honor the word of God. There are many revivalists who, with all their spread of canvass, lack the solid ballast of the word of God. Their Bibles are far too well preserved, they bear few marks of study; they preach, but they do not "preach the word;" they speak, but not "as the oracles of God;" and the words which they utter to the people are not the words which God has promised to bless. God is pledged to stand by his own word. As the rain descendeth and watereth the earth, and causeth it to bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater, so shall his word be which goeth forth out of his mouth; it shall not return to him void; it shall accomplish its destined work.

It will be a happy day for us when we preach less of self and more of Christ, less of the words which man's wisdom teacheth, and more of the words which the Holy Ghost useth. The converts who are not converted by the word of God, who have not felt that word like a fire and hammer breaking their hearts, and who are not nourished up in the words of faith and sound doctrine, too often go to swell the ranks of the openly apostate, or the worldly members of the church who have a name to live and are dead. Only those live who partake of the life of the living Word of God; only those grow who are fed upon the sincere milk of the Word. Only these are strong in whom the Word of God abideth, and who have overcome the Wicked One. Only these are sanctified who are sanctified by the Word of truth, and who through the washing of water by the Word, are fitted for the presence and the glory of the heavenly Master.—The Christian.

"Critic" Criticised.

I have heard it said that an article in the old Methodist creed or discipline reads something like this: "Salvation by faith alone is a wholesome doctrine and very full of comfort." But I have never seen or heard, in modern times, of a man who was willing to lay hold upon that comfort and ignore works altogether, until "Critic" turned up in The RESTITUTION, and as he is pleased to term this doctrine the "apple of his eye" I will kindly endeavor not to wound him in that organ, as I think he needs, rather, that his vision be strengthened, in order to read aright the words of Holy Writ. The arguments advanced by "Critic" (if they may be styled such) and the manner of interpreting Scripture, are so old and hackneyed that they do not need repeating, and yet it seems strange to me, that any Bible student familiar with what is termed "The One Faith" should so indiscriminately apply texts of Scripture to prove a dogma which is, in my humble estimation, as foolish as it is old. I will not refer to Bro. Chaplin's article, which I have only casually read but would suggest to some of our "truth seekers" that in that article is contained a principle upon which I think can be harmonized many incongruous and inconsistent positions taken by our leading brethren upon some very important subjects. It has ever been a matter of astonishment as well as mystery, to me, to see men who profess the most profound faith and confidence in the written Word, quote and apply it in such a garbled and arbitrary manner when trying to establish some cherished dogma, and "Critic" will kindly bear with me when he reflects that he starts out to defend his darling theory—"the apple of his eye." And how does he apply the meagre portion of Scripture which he barely refers to? Why, by taking for granted certain positions advocated by theologians and creed makers ever since the church has been in the wilderness. And now, it would be equally logical and sensible for me to assert that we must be saved by Works alone, because we are plainly commanded to "work out our salvation with fear and trembling." Now that must be the truth because the Bible says so? But where is the text recorded (except in that old discipline) that we are to be saved by "faith alone?" Surely that doctrine must have been very comforting to those "Satanic Sinners" who were declared to believe and tremble too in Christ's day!

Now, who can fail to see the inconsistency and the recklessness of applying Scripture in this way? And I am not astonished to hear "Critic" exclaim "When this goes (his pet dogma) Christianity goes with it (his Christianity) and I am an infidel." Yes, Bro. Critic, infidels are often made of just such material. If their pet ideas are not sustained or approved by the Word of God, they fly the track and turn infidel and abuse the book, whose claim upon them demands the entire sacrifice of every idol even though it be the "apple of his eye," and which also teaches that salvation can be obtained only through obedience to the Law of Christ, which includes faith and works. But if I must live under a religious heirarchy "aristocracy," let it be one governed by the "works" or principles laid down by Christ in his great moral school. They are fully described under the head of "Fruits of the Spirit," and the characters developed in this school are beautifully portrayed in the "Sermon on the Mount." And these principles were duly acknowledged by God's ancient people, for David in the 15th Psalm most graphically describes the characters who are, not only saved, but "honored," in consequence of developing a character in accordance with a law of works."

But right here I would wish to make one point, which, however, I think our brethren generally admit, but which they fail to establish clearly, in their elucidations of Scripture. Works versus Faith, as so clearly defined by Paul in his masterly reasonings upon the Christian economy, relate entirely to the works, ceremonies, and observances of a dead law or institution as contrasted with a new and living way, or constitution, which was founded upon faith, but which no less, demanded of its votaries, strict obedience to its requirements, which are not a law. Will "Critic" assert that baptism and the communion are non-essentials in the economy of faith? Or, are they not classed among the works of the Christian system? Would it not be more reasonable to put them where they belong in the Christian economy, just as circumcision and the passover stand related to the Jewish or law system? And there is no more evidence of piety or true loyalty of character evinced in observing either of these ceremonies under the Christian dispensation, than there was in the observance of either of the commands of the law cited, under the Jewish order of things, except that perhaps the observance of the latter is attended with far less inconvenience and self-sacrifice to the adherents of, than the former. To argue the more legality of the Christian claim, where not an ounce of self-sacrifice or true humility, or charity, has been developed, is placing the standard of Christian character about as low as bad men desire the legal status of honesty and integrity to be fixed. And this has been the great trouble with the professed church of Christ all the way down, even to the last phase or form of organization, viz.: "The church of the one faith." They labor hard to make good their legal claim and quote largely from Paul to sustain it, but say very little about that charity which their great champion declared, if they lacked—though they possessed all other virtues—they were as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals. And did not this great apostle to the Gentiles, under the "dispensation of faith," declare also that eternal life was to be secured to those, who sought for "glory, honor and immortality," "by patient continuance in well doing?" What did the apostle mean by such language? Have we then nothing to do but to continue to profess our faith? Or, are we to continue in the baptisms, the celebrations and commemorations which introduce the Christian system? And why, I ask, is the idea of an aristocracy of works so odious to "Critic?" If they are the works which follow a true and simple faith, then will the kingdom of Christ be odious to him also, for that is to be an administration of justice and mercy combined, where love will be the inspiring motive of law, and salvation be the result of such a heavenly order of things. THE RESTITUTION

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞We are to attend the dedication of the meeting house, next Sunday, at Argos. It is to be hoped that there will be a general turn out.

☞Bro. W. J. Orem, of Kansas, is now spending a few days with us. He is in earnest for the Gospel, and is looking for a crown of glory when the King comes. Bro. Orem is on his way home from the East, where he has been preaching the Word.

☞Mrs. E. G. White has another book of visions in press. Price: One dollar. At the present rate she will have more visions than all the prophets put together, before she winds up When the Spirit is poured out on "all flesh" the world will be crowded with visions. But Mrs. White does not let the other seers come to the front. "All flesh" is mostly confined to Mrs. W. Strange!

Editorial Correspondence.

We are absent from our accustomed post in Plymouth for a little while. On Monday, Oct. 30th we started to visit some old and tried christian friends in New Jersey, and, at the same time, to take a look at the great Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia before it should close. Our way was by the Chicago, Pittsburgh, and Pennsylvania line through the Eastern part of Indiana, and onward through the States of Ohio and Pennsylvania. We pass many interesting towns and cities on our way, as well as a great deal of beautiful and interesting country. Perhaps no scenery on the American continent is more sublimely beautiful than that of the Alleghany Mountains on the line of this road. The grand, winding curves of the road around the precipitous heights, that lift their blue peaks cloudward, till some are absolutely lost above the misty mantle, impress the traveller with admiration of that engineering skill that has planned and completed a path of iron over which the metallic courser, exhaling the hot breath of scalding steam, swiftly careers with its long drawn line of stately coaches filled with their precious freight of human beings. We turn the celebrated horse-shoe bend, then, when a barrier that cannot be scaled nor wound around by the iron horse seems to intercept all further progress, we plunge into a tunnel 3670 feet long, and emerge on the opposite side to triumphantly descend the eastern grades along the Juniatta to the Susquehannah, so loved by the red man before the pale face supplanted him in the land where were the bones of his fathers. On the banks of this loved river Ne-do-wa-way sat down on an over-looking height, and sadly surveyed the scenes of his childhood, and the homes of his ancestors, ere he took his final departure for far away western wilds.

We have not time nor space for detailed sketches of towns and localities in either their present flourishing condition, or their earlier history. Perhaps we may as well say at once that arriving in Philadelphia we made a visit to the U. S. mint, and surveyed its numismatical curiosities. In the work of present coinage, the mint is turning out silver pieces at a very rapid rate, in which it is using three tons of silver bullion each day. The number of twenty-five cent pieces daily stamped is 78,000.

The history of coinage is an interesting theme. The Ancient Hebrews took gold and silver only by weight, and stamped money belongs to a later period of history. Two standard weights are also frequently alluded too in the Scriptures—the talent and the shekel. The talent weighed 118 lb., 10 oz., 1 pwt., 10 2-7 gr., Troy weight. The value of this weight was, in gold, $243,100; in silver, $1,620. The shekel weighed 9 pwt., 3 gr. Its worth was, in silver, about 52⅔ cents. The shekel of gold was only one half as heavy as that of silver and was worth $4.00. The Shekel finally became the name of a piece of stamped money in the time of the Maccabees.

In the cabinet we met with a genuine Hebrew shekel of Simon Maccabeus B. C. 145. On one side is represented the "pot of Manna," on the other is "Aaron's rod that budded." For thirty of these coins Judas betrayed the Lord. Reckoning silver without any premium this would amount to $15.75.

Here too is a veritable "Widow's mite." This particular piece is supposed to ante-date our era; its intrinsic worth is about one-fifth of a cent, or two mills; its Greek name was Lepton. The widow's gift would equal four mills—less than half a cent. This gift of minimum value has become one of maximum interest to Bible readers.

Here we see a coin of old Philadelphia struck some 2000 years ago. It is a bronze piece about the size of an old fashioned cent. Its weight is about 66 gr. In this old Philadelphia was one of the Apocalyptic churches. Through these regions the Apostles made their missionary journeys, and may have paid their traveling expenses in these and similar coins.

The oldest coins in the cabinet are those of the ancient Greek Republics. There are 150 specimens belonging to this particular department. Those numbered 4, 5, and 6, are supposed to be among the oldest in the world. They bear the impress of the little Greek State Aeginn which flourished more than 2,500 years ago.

Here too may be seen the silver stater, in value something more than the shekel, or 60 cents. The didrachma was one-half the stater, and was the amount of capitation tax assessed in the days of our Saviour; consequently the stater would pay the poll tax of two persons. The fish caught by Peter brought up the required piece, or silver stater. A specimen of this ancient coin, bearing the "image and superscription" of Cæsar, may be seen here. The Roman penny is also here, bearing Cæsar's stamp like the stater. Its value is about 15 cents. The laborers received every man a penny.

It would require a volume to fully describe all the specimens of coins of all the ancient and modern nations on exhibition here. We have called attention to some in order to illustrate Scripture as well as to convey some general information. We have spent two days on the grounds and in the buildings of the great Centennial exposition. We expect to spend one or two more days there. It is a most wonderful display of the riches of the Gentiles. Perhaps never since the foundation of the world was there at any time, such a collection of every thing useful, magnificent, beautiful, and pleasing to the beholder as is aggregated here. We offer a paper of this kind to the readers of the RESTITUTION for variety's sake. Should it be thought advisable we may give another.

S. A. CHAPLIN.

Huddonfield, N. J. Nov. 1, 1876.

Peace.

"Peace I leave with you. My peace I give unto you."

These tender words are in the last discourse of our Lord before his betrayal. His opening paragraph was, "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me." And all through the chapter containing this memorable sermon, breathes the same spirit of love and sympathy. Every sentence contains an admonition or a blessed promise—every verse carries with it a burden of unspeakable tenderness, for the little flock which he is so soon to leave in the wilderness without a shepherd.

The dark cloud that hangs before himself he does not allude to, save in the words, "A little while and ye shall not see me, and again a little while and ye shall see me." It is nothing agony that seems the heaviest—he is willing to bear the clouds and darkness, the suffering and the cross that await him in the near future, but his "little flock,"—the "little ones" that God has given him—these are very near to his loving heart, and he sees them scattered, bereft, and forsaken.

It is for them he breathes words of Heavenly consolation. It is for them that his heart aches with its great burden of sympathy and tenderness. He closes with the words, "These things have I spoken unto you that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation, but be of good cheer. I have overcome the world."

Then follows his prayer to the Father—a prayer for himself and "for them which thou hast given me." He had overcome the world—it had henceforth no more temptations for him; hence he says, "I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name, those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one as we are." The last words of his petition contain the plea "that the love wherewith thou hast loved me, may be in them and I in them." It is love and hope in the beginning,—it is hope and love in the ending. After this he went over the brook, the Cedron, and the scenes of the garden are placed in undying col. upon the canvas of living hearts. Then Calvary comes to the front,—comes with her baptism of blood, and her crown of thorns. But it is over at last, and the disciples have only a grave—only the darkness of loneliness and doubt—only the scoffs of the world and the storm of persecution. But deep in their hearts lie treasured the blessed words of the Master—words of hope and cheer—which are stronger than death, and deeper than the grave. "These things have I spoken unto you, that in me, ye might have peace." Darkness and uncertainty were around them, but his last words, freighted with love and tenderness, shone like a day star amid the gloom. The tempest of persecution beat against them, but in the midst of the blinding storm, his promise was the anchor that held them from the rocks of despair. He had said, "Yet a little while and ye shall see me." Death could not hold him, nor could the grave shut her gates against him who held her key. There was a broken seal, and a broken tomb; there were angel visits, and a living Christ.

Darkness became light, and hope was changed to a glorious reality.

But he prayed not for them alone, "but for them also that shall believe on me through their word, that they all may be one." His loving kindness is borne down through the ages, and embraces every believer in every clime. To each of us he saith, "Peace I leave with you." He left no selfishness or bigotry—he left no petty jealousies or worldly ambitions—he left no strife or bitter words. Our heritage from him is peace and joy and love. It is tenderness and hope. It is sympathy and faith in each other.

Our Lord has gone, not into the grave, but to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return. Still it is the night time of the church. He has gone—and we have only the word of promise to cheer our lonely hearts. His last prayer for us was the petition "that the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them." And surely if this is the love that we hold for each other we can bear with faults and mistakes. We are walking by faith, and not by sight, and none of us can see clearly enough to take the mote from a brother's eye. Darkness is around us—we have only a lamp for our feet, and the star of hope in the distant sky. But he has said, "If I go away, I will come again," and some glad morning our darkness shall flee away, and the Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings. Earth's valleys shall then be filled with his glory, and her mountains crowned with his light.

MRS. H. V. REED.

Wisdom and Goodness of God.

Wherever we turn our eyes we behold the beneficence of the Creator, on whom we are all dependent, and from whom we derive our comforts.

For the gratification of novelty planted in the human mind, He has spread our landscapes with beautiful colors. All nature presents to our view "a picturesque and diversified scenery." Here are the fields adorned with living verdure; there are the hills distilling from their sides the laughing little brook which moistens the plains through which it flows. Here is the lake stretched in smooth expanse; there is the river winding its way along the valley. Here are the mighty forests and there are the flowers, the azure sky and the beautiful morning clouds.

Already we are amazed at the wonders of Nature, yet they would forever have remained a mighty blank had not that one command gone forth, let there be light.

Reader, pause for a moment and consider the wisdom, which is displayed in the harmonious adjustment of the organs of sense to "the scenes of eternal nature."

Before the eye could be of any use to man in beholding the grandeur and sublimity which surrounds him in the earth and heavens, much is requisite.

First, three humours are necessary, the aqueous, vitreous and crystalline, the latter of which is composed of two thousand little scales lying one upon another, each one being made up of threads too small to be seen without the aid of a microscope. But this is not all. There are coats or membranes to be formed; one is the sclerotic having for its external surface a smooth, white covering, and for its internal a ridged brown; another is the cornea, the projecting transparent part of the eye; still another that thin vascular membrane called the choroid. Thus volumes might be written, and when concluded this wonderful piece of mechanism might be compressed into a socket, the size of only one inch in diameter.

A soft pillow for it to recline upon, the eyelid to protect it from danger, muscles to move it to the right and to the left, upwards and downwards, and more nerves, arteries, veins, lymphatics and glands than we have any conception of, were yet requisite to complete this little organ. And even in this state of perfection it would be useless were it not for the optic nerve, through which the impressions of visible objects are conveyed to the brain.

This "fearfully and wonderfully" constructed piece of machinery, also is required to be in action, and a certain effect produced, before a scene can be contemplated. Millions upon millions of rays must fly off, in every direction, from the objects surrounding, and be compressed in the space of one eighth of an inch in order to enter the eye, every object being painted in its own color, size and shape.

Such is the wisdom of God displayed in the construction of a single organ. For the presentation of this sense, therefore, and the pleasures we derive from it, we have an abundance of reason to admire the goodness of our Father.

"I will sing unto Jehovah as long as I live; I will sing praise to God, while I have my being; I will utter abundantly the memory of His great goodness, and speak of His wonderful works. Many, O Lord, my God, are thy wonderful works, which thou hast done, and thy thoughts to us, they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee; if I should count them, they are more in number than the sand."

Thus it is shown that both Nature and Revelation agree in showing forth the wisdom and goodness of the Almighty Creator, as calculated to excite the highest degree of ardent affection in the minds of the whole intelligent creation. How, then, can we forbear exclaiming with the enraptured poet:—

"Through all eternity to thee
A joyful song I'll raise;
For, oh! eternity's too short
To utter all thy praise."

CYNTHIA MESSIMORE.

The Living Word.

The Word of God is the foundation of the works of God. "He spake and it was done, He commanded and it stood fast." "By the word of God the heavens were made, and the earth and all that is therein." By that same word through which God made all things at first, he shall make them new again. Hence when man, wrecked by sin, is to be restored to righteousness, the work is done by the Word of God. His word is as a fire and hammer which breaks in pieces the flinty rock. His word is quick and powerful; sharper than a two-edged sword. His word is a lamp to our feet and a light to our path. His word is the sword of the Spirit, wherewith we conquer our foes. His word is the incorruptible seed by which we are begotten to immortal life. His word is the sincere milk whereby the babes in Christ may grow. His word is able to make us wise unto salvation, through faith that is in him. By his word the man of God is to be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

Any system of faith or practice which ignores or sets aside the word of God is without root or foundation, without strength or substance. Heaven and earth shall pass, but God's word shall not pass away. He has magnified his word above all his name. Forever his word is settled in heaven; and those who dishonor it, or reject it, or cast it aside, will find that they have made a fatal mistake.

A gentleman said that in nearly one hundred successive religious meetings which he attended, held under the auspices of laymen professedly famed for revival work, not a Bible was opened, not a single passage from its pages read. Doubtless Scriptures were quoted, but a large proportion of the exercises consisted of hymns, addresses, and prayers, and, to say the least, the word of God was too much left out of sight. Such revivals as these are like shaving-fires in sheet-iron stoves; they burn, they blaze, and they die. Men are saved by faith, but faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. Men are saved by hope, but it is through "patience and comfort of the Scriptures" that we have hope. Men are saved by grace, but it is the word of God's grace that shows them the way of salvation. Let those who would labor successfully take heed that they honor the word of God. There are many revivalists who, with all their spread of canvass, lack the solid ballast of the word of God. Their Bibles are far too well preserved, they bear few marks of study; they preach, but they do not "preach the word;" they speak, but not "as the oracles of God;" and the words which they utter to the people are not the words which God has promised to bless. God is pledged to stand by his own word. As the rain descendeth and watereth the earth, and causeth it to bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater, so shall his word be which goeth forth out of his mouth; it shall not return to him void; it shall accomplish its destined work.

It will be a happy day for us when we preach less of self and more of Christ, less of the words which men's wisdom teacheth, and more of the words which the Holy Ghost useth. The converts who are not converted by the word of God, who have not felt that word like a fire and hammer breaking their hearts, and who are not nourished up in the words of faith and sound doctrine, too often go to swell the ranks of the openly apostate, or the worldly members of the church who have a name to live and are dead. Only those live who partake of the life of the living Word of God; only those grow who are fed upon the sincere milk of the Word. Only these are strong in whom the Word of God abideth, and who have overcome the Wicked One. Only those are sanctified who are sanctified by the Word of truth, and who through the washing of water by the Word, are fitted for the presence and the glory of the heavenly Master.—The Christian.

"Critic" Criticised.

I have heard it said that an article in the old Methodist creed or discipline reads something like this: "Salvation by faith alone is a wholesome doctrine and very full of comfort." But I have never seen or heard, in modern times, of a man who was willing to lay hold upon that comfort and ignore works altogether, until "Critic" turned up in the RESTITUTION, and as he is pleased to term this doctrine the "apple of his eye" I will kindly endeavor not to wound him in that organ, as I think he needs, rather, that his vision be strengthened, in order to read aright the words of Holy Writ. The arguments advanced by "Critic" (if they may be styled such) and the manner of interpreting Scripture, are so old and hackneyed that they do not need repeating, and yet it seems strange to me, that any Bible student familiar with what is termed "The One Faith" should so indiscriminately apply texts of Scripture to prove a dogma which is, in my humble estimation, as foolish as it is old. I will not refer to Bro. Chaplin's article, which I have only casually read but would suggest to some of our "truth seekers" that in that article is contained a principle upon which I think can be harmonized many incongruous and inconsistent positions taken by our leading brethren upon some very important subjects. It has ever been a matter of astonishment as well as mystery, to me, to see men who profess the most profound faith and confidence in the written Word, quote and apply it in such a garbled and arbitrary manner when trying to establish some cherished dogma, and "Critic" will kindly bear with me when he reflects that he starts out to defend his darling theory —"the apple of his eye." And how does he apply the meagre portion of Scripture which he barely refers to? Why, by taking for granted certain positions advocated by theologians and cried makers ever since the church has been in the wilderness. And now, it would be equally logical and sensible for me to assert that we must be saved by Works alone, because we are plainly commanded to "work out our salvation with fear and trembling." Now that must be the truth because the Bible says so? But where is the text recorded (except in that old discipline) that we are to be saved by "faith alone?" Surely that doctrine must have been very comforting to those "Satanic Sinners" who were declared to believe and tremble too in Christ's day!

Now, who can fail to see the inconsistency and the recklessness of applying Scripture in this way? And I am not astonished to hear "Critic" exclaim "When this goes (his pet dogma) Christianity goes with it (his Christianity) and I am an infidel." Yes, Bro. Critic, infidels are often made of just such material. If their pet ideas are not sustained or approved by the Word of God, they fly the track and turn infidel and abuse the book, whose claim upon them demands the entire sacrifice of every idol even though it be the "apple of his eye," and which also teaches that salvation can be obtained only through obedience to the Law of Christ, which includes faith and works. But if I must live under a religious hierarchy "aristocracy," let it be one governed by the "works" or principles laid down by Christ in his great moral school. They are fitly described under the head of "Fruits of the Spirit," and the characters developed in this school are beautifully portrayed in the "Sermon on the Mount." And these principles were duly acknowledged by God's ancient people, for David in the 15th Psalm most graphically, describes the characters who are, not only saved, but "honored," in consequence of developing a character in accordance with a law of works."

But right here I would wish to make one point, which, however, I think our brethren generally admit, but which they fail to establish clearly, in their elucidations of Scripture. Works versus Faith, as so clearly defined by Paul in his masterly reasonings upon the Christian economy, relate entirely to the works, ceremonies, and observances of a dead law or institution as contrasted with a new and living way, or constitution, which was founded upon faith, but which no less, demanded of its votaries, strict obedience to its requirements, which are not a few. Will "Critic" assert that baptism and the communion are non-essentials in the economy of faith? Or, are they not classed among the works of the Christian system? Would it not be more reasonable to put them where they belong in the Christian economy, just as circumcision and the passover stand related to the Jewish or law system? And there is no more evidence of piety or true loyalty of character evinced in observing either of these ceremonies under the Christian dispensation, than there was in the observance of either of the commands of the law cited, under the Jewish order of things, except that perhaps the observance of the latter is attended with far less inconvenience and self-sacrifice to the adherents thereof, than the former. To argue the mere legality of the Christian claim, where not an ounce of self-sacrifice or true humility, or charity, has been developed, is placing the standard of Christian character about as low as bad men desire the legal status of honesty and integrity to be fixed. And this has been the great trouble with the professed church of Christ all the way down, even to the last phase or form of organization, viz.: "The church of the one faith." They labor hard to make good their legal claim and quote largely from Paul to sustain it, but say very little about that charity which their great champion declared, if they lacked—though they possessed all other virtues—they were as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals. And did not this great apostle to the Gentiles, under the "dispensation of faith," declare also that eternal life was to be secured to these, who sought for "glory, honor and immortality," "by patient continuance in well doing?" What did the apostle mean by such language? Have we then nothing to do but to continue to profess our faith? Or, are we to continue in the baptisms, the celebrations and commemorations which introduce the Christian system? And why, I ask, is the idea of an aristocracy of works so odious to "Critic?" If they are the works which follow a true and simple faith, then will the kingdom of Christ be odious to him also, for that is to be an administration of justice and mercy combined, where love will be the inspiring motive of law, and salvation be the result of such a heavenly order of things. Oh, who could not hail such an "aristocracy" as this? And who does not long for the day when peace, love, justice and mercy, and a pure faith, unmixed with error, shall prevail over all the earth, and as a consequence, "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess," and the whole earth shall be "filled with the knowledge and glory of God."

The Footstep on the Stair.

I have very many treasures
That my heart has laid away;
There's a little coral thro's brighter
Than the sunshine of the day;
And a little shoe that's faded
Is among my treasures there—
And I listen, when I see it,
For a footstep on the stair,
For a patter, patter, patter,
Of the footstep on the stair.

Now those little feet are silent,
And the face is hidden low,
Underneath the meadow grasses,
And the daisies' fragrant snow:
And I miss them in the morning,
Pattering feet and face so fair—
But I listen most at bed-time
For the footstep on the stair,
For the patter, patter, patter,
Of the footstep on the stair.

Then she'd come and kneel beside me
In her little gown of white,
And she'd say her short prayers over,
And would kiss me sweet good night.
And I listen in the twilight,
Though I know she is not there;
But I cannot still my yearning
For the footstep on the stair,
For the patter, patter, patter,
Of the footstep on the stair.

The Importance of Sacred Prophecy.

The prophets were chosen of God, and their writings were inspired by him. Speaking as they were moved to speak by the Holy Spirit, they became the mouth-pieces of Deity, and we are solemnly warned by the great apostle not to despise their utterances. The prophecies constitute a very important part of the sacred Scriptures. Omit from the Canon the sublime books of Isaiah, and Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, and Daniel, and John, and what a blank and loss! Were not all the main events that transpired among men when our Lord came on earth in the accomplishment of his mission of love, subjects of prophecy? We know his birth, the place of his birth, the manner of his death, his rising again, and a hundred other things were long before foretold by the Hebrew seers.

Prophecy is history in advance. It is the church's chart on her travels through this wilderness. It points her onward to the eternal home. It is the window through which she gazes into the Holy City. It is also her weapon of defense against the skeptic and the Jew. The lamp of prophecy! how dark in time's path without it! How scanty indeed our knowledge of the grand, mysterious future, unaided by the prophetic word. Are not Christ's coming again with the resurrection, the judgment, and all concomitants and after scenes, matters not only of promise but of prediction? Thus while natures lamp burns dim, and science and philosophy seek in vain to penetrate the veil that hides the future from our yearning vision, prophecy is a "light" in man's dark world—a light that shines until the day dawn. —2 Pet. 1: 19. And just as a lantern lights all our way, so does prophecy illuminate our place showing us where we are in the great chain of human events, telling the church about how far she has journeyed, and enabling her to know something of the length of the remaining path, and the nearness of the end.

It is not to their credit that in so many pulpits and religious papers prophetic expositions find no place, it having become a fashion to despise them. Every thing else in the Bible is talked of and written about save those portions that are prophetic. All other matters engage the pen of the popular writer, all subjects are discussed by the denominational editor, all texts chosen by the preacher save the prophetical. Prophecy's strict fulfillment to the letter is our Gibraltar against rampant infidelity, yet how seldom do christians enter into this fortress of strength. Why should editors, preachers, teachers, neglect the old prophecies? Was not the first discourse by the holy apostle Peter at Pentecost an exposition and application of prophecy? Acts ii. Was not Jesus a prophet indeed? Matt. xxiv. Did he not for our information fore-tell the course of this age even to its end?

The soundest, best men of the church in the past loved the sacred prophecies. Wickliff explained and applied them; Luther and Melancthon studied Daniel and John; John Knox used to preach on the book of Daniel. So intensely earnest would he get, we are told by his biographer, that it seemed as if he would pound his pulpit to pieces and fly out of it. Sir Isaac Newton spent two whole years in close study of the prophicies of Daniel and John. Bishop Newton was a standard sober expositor of the great prophecies. The brightest lights in England and on the Continent have delighted to read and explain them. One of Mr. Moody's best discourses is on Daniel, and includes an exposition of the prophecy in the second chapter. Dr. Stephen H. Tyng, called some years ago to give an address before a learned literary society, gave an exposition of the five universal monarchies of the earth, from the second and seventh chapters of Daniel. Bishop Henshaw did not despise them, but wrote a book on the sacred prophecys. We could name hundreds of others who have had an interest in this mighty theme.

Brethren suppose you try your hand a little at the expository studies, and preach the prophecies. You need not be fanatical, nor dispute over dates, nor presume to know all times and seasons, whether hidden or revealed. But trim your lamp betimes, O preachers of God's Word! "All Scripture is profitable." Prophecy is not a dark lantern. It is a light that shines. [Let it shine. "Light is sown for the righteous." Psa. xcvii: 11. Does it illuminate your path touching the nearing marvels of the august day of the solemn judgment to come?

At present prophecy seems rapidly and wonderfully fulfilling before our eyes. It seems to be almost becoming exhausted. Close students of the Bible and human events see and feel this. Would it not stir the church to greater zeal, larger benevolence, and intenser activity to make more and better use of this God-given light? She is walking in the "dark place," and certainly needs it. It is "night,"—yea more, it is "midnight." Rom. xiii: 12; Matt. xxv: 6. Who knows but there may be a mine of joy, a vein of knowledge, a tower of strength, and a new spur of consecration for the preacher in the direction I am inviting? Could you be made to see that the day of wrath for sinners impends, and the era of jubilee for saints draweth nigh, it might prove a fresh and mighty motive to holy action, and impart to your ministry a greater earnestness than you ever previously exhibited.

I confess I never rise from a perusal of the sublime predictions of Daniel and John without a feeling of awe. It seems as if I had been in contact with eternal verities. The great day looms up in faith's vision, and my spirit thrills with expectation and admiration. We are none of us more than half awake, and surely wisdom invites the use of every lawful method by which our watchfulness may be increased, our pace quickened, our love and zeal made stronger and our courage more unfaltering in the service of the good Master. "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets" (Amos iii: 7), while in every generation he has had his chosen ones who cried in the ears of an evil and unbelieving world, "This is that which was spoken of by the prophet." Acts ii: 16. To be such an one is a high honor. To begin at Moses and all the prophets and expound them, is to be like the great Teacher. Luke xxiv: 27, 44.—The Armory.

Correspondence.

BRO. REED:—Thinking from the report which you gave of me, that some of the readers of the RESTITUTION may have come to the conclusion, that I have ceased to labor for Jesus our Life-Giver and joined the followers of Thomas Paine, I write:

Since my last report of labor in the service of Him whom I engaged to serve 51 years ago the 11th of next December, I have spent some fifteen weeks in Canada, preaching the word to those I have been acquainted with from five to seventeen years; (and most of them I had the honor of immersing into the name of the Anointed one.) The attendance was good, and brethren and sisters comforted, and strengthened to pursue the narrow path, until He whom they love, shall come as the restorer of all things predicted by Israel's holy prophets. Have had the honor of immersing a number into the name of the Anointed One.

Have held a series of meetings in a number of new places; congregations large, and the best of attention given to my message.

Have held three grove meetings. Two of them near Norwich, one at Sweaborg. Congregations were very large, and very good attention was given to my message. Gave out by request, meetings for the fourth Sunday in June and first Sunday in July, 1877, to be held in the same groves. Preaching by myself.

In the former place I have held some seventeen grove meetings; in the latter place, nine. Never has the attendance been better than that of the past season. And it is believed that much good has been accomplished.

I have spent a number of Sundays in this vicinity. Occupying Universalist and Baptist meeting houses, and school houses. Congregations generally large, and the day of final division will decide how much good has been done.

Having received a letter from Brother and Sister Geo. M. Chamberlin, to come to North Windham, Conn., a portion of my old field of labor, where a settled Baptist preacher, preached and immersed them into the name of the Anointed One.

About the first of August, having made the necessary preparation, in company with Mrs. Lyon, we started for the east. Stopped over the Sabbath and Sunday in the city of Auburn, with relatives and the lovers of truth. Had a profitable time in talking upon the things of the kingdom and the name of the Anointed One. Joined a couple in holy wedlock. The bride was a niece of Mrs. L's.

From Auburn we were drawn by the iron horse and stage to South Bridge, Mass., the place of my nativity. Here we spent some ten days, in visiting with my brothers and their families and old school-mates, in conversing upon the history of the past and the glorious future.

Visited my old residence in Woodstock, Coon., also some relatives. Had a pleasant time.

Gave a number of discourses in the free meeting house in North Windham, Conn., to large congregations, who listened to my messages with interest. And it was good to meet with those whom I had associated with, and preach to, when I lived in the east.

I put up with Brother and Sister Chamberlin, who had invited me into their midst, and with whom I found a pilgrims home. I found them in possession of an intelligent faith, and not being satisfied with the Baptist bath which they had received when young and ignorant of the things of the kingdom of God and the name of the Anointed One! We returned on Sunday morning to the clear waters of Mt. Hope river, (a river that I had immersed many in when a settled Baptist preacher,) where I had the honor, in the presence of an interesting company of spectators, of immersing them into the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. And, subsequent to our public meeting in the evening,—at their own quiet home we ate the Lord's Supper together,—and on their way rejoicing I left them journeying for the high lands of glory, whilst I am in search of other members of the woman's seed.

We left South Bridge in company with a brother of mine and his daughter, and other friends, for the city of Brotherly Love, where we spent one week, which will not be forgotten whilst memory lasts. Time well spent! Not, however, at the expense of brethren. For we have never received from them enough to support us since we resigned the pastoral care of the Baptist church in A., Conn. The Centennial was the grandest display of the works of art and nature, that has ever been, or ever will be, prior to the coming of Israel's King.

We put up with Dr. John Berry and family, a Baptist minister, with whom we enjoyed ourselves much. We found him a man of learning, and a gentleman, also a firm believer in the restitution of all things predicted by the prophets of Jehovah and clear on the doctrine of the Atonement.

We had an interesting visit with our beloved Brother, J. L. Boyd and his amiable companion. Bro. B. is a scholar and a gentleman. He has, during his pilgrimage, spent a number of months in the Holy Land. He has written and published much on that subject. And, as he is a thorough Bible scholar, his writings are interesting to all lovers of Israel and Israel's city. In comparing our notes together, I found we had kept together in our progress in Divine knowledge since we last met.

On our way home, I spent one Sunday with Eld. D. T. Ross and his people, at Dalton, Pa., by request. Gave two discourses to large congregations, predicated upon Matt. v. 5; xxv. 46. I gave twenty-eight discourses to them last winter. And as the result, eighteen were immersed.

Since my return I have preached on Sundays. Done two month's hard labor with my hands in order to keep breath and body together.

R. V. LYON.

BRO. REED:—Thinking it right and proper, as well as my duty, to write to the RESTITUTION, informing the brethren and sisters, those who assisted us, that the money sent, reached us safely, for which we are truly thankful and hope that each one will have a rich reward in the kingdom of God. Their sympathy for us in our affliction has caused a tender feeling to spring up in our hearts toward them, that will exist as long as we live. I trust we shall not be a burden to our brethren and sisters much longer. The day is beginning to dawn. Surely the coming of our King is at the door. Oh, let us be ready to hail the glad day. The poor in this world have nothing to bind them to this age, but everything to make them sigh for the coming of Jesus.

It may be of interest to some of the brethren to know that the church at Ripley still lives. We meet every second and fourth Sunday to read the Word, sing praises, and offer prayer. Bro. William Greenwell and Bro. Bowman teaching and exhorting us to love and good works.

My husbands health is improving some.

MARY COOPER.

RIPLEY, Brown Co., Ill., Nov. 6, 1877.

The Caesars of the New Testament.

Julius Cæsar was murdered in the Senate House, at Rome, by Brutus, Cassius and other conspirators, B. C. 44. Brutus and Cassius were defeated and slain at Philippi, by Antony and Octavius, B. C. 42. The Cæsars mentioned in the New Testament are distinguished as follows:

1. Octavius, the grand-nephew of Julius Cæsar, was born during the consulate of Cicero, 63 B. C. He became Emperor of Rome (27 years B. C.), under the name of Augustus Cæsar. He is mentioned in Luke 2, 1, as ordering a taxation, or an enrollment with a view to taxation, to be made of the Jews at Palestine, who were tributary to the Romans. He died A. D. 14.

2. Tiberius Cæsar was born B. C. 42. On the death of Augustus he succeeded him as Emperor, A. D. 14. He died A. D. 37, in the seventy-eighth year of his age, and the twenty-third of his reign. As a hypocritical tyrant he died universally detested, being suffocated with pillows by his attendants when reviving from apparent death. Tiberius Cæsar is referred to in Matt. 22, 17–21; Mark 12, 14–17, and Luke 20, 22–25, and also in connection with the tribute money payable to the Roman government, in Luke 3, 1, and 23, 2, and John 19, 12, 15.

Caligula born A. D. 12, who succeeded Tiberius and who reigned from A. D. 37 to 41, is not mentioned in the New Testament.

3. Claudius (Tiberius) Cæsar followed Caligula, and began his reign as Emperor A. D. 41. He was born nine years B. C., and until proclaimed Emperor he remained in private life, and occupied himself with literature. Among other works he wrote a Roman history, in 33 volumes, embracing the period from that of Julius Cæsar to his own time, and also his own life. He died of poison administered by his second wife, Agrippius (mother of Nero) A. D. 54, at the age of sixty-three. He is mentioned in Acts 11, 28.

4. Nero was the adopted son of Claudius Cæsar, and succeeded him in the government, A. D. 54. He was distinguished for his cruelty, his vices, and his persecution of Christians. In the gratification of an insane caprice he ordered Rome to be burnt, A. D. 64. He committed suicide, A. D. 68. Paul refers to Nero in Acts 25: 8, 21, 22; 26: 32; 27: 24; 28: 19. And bad as was the tyrant, the same apostle, when imprisoned at Rome, sends greeting from the saints of Cæsar household to the saints at Philippi, showing that amid the corruptions of the court the power of the Gospel had prevailed. Phil. 12: 13; 4: 22.

After the death of Nero, Galba, Otho and Vitellius ruled by force, and amid distractions, and for about two years. Vespasian was chosen Emperor in A. D. 70. At his death, A. D. 79, his eldest son Titus, who besieged and took Jerusalem, A. D. 70, succeeded him. At the death of Titus, A. D. 81, Domitian, his brother, became Emperor. His crimes and cruelty led to a conspiracy against him, and he was slain A. D. 96.

Nerva, the successor of Domitian, was one of the most virtuous of the Roman Emperors. He died A. D. 98. Trajan, the adopted son of Nerva, followed him in a successful reign of nearly twenty years, dying in his sixty-fourth year.

Four only of those enumerated are mentioned in the New Testament, viz: Augustus, Tiberius, Claudius and Nero; but as those who are here named cover the century preceding and the century following the Saviour's advent, the records may aid in a more correct apprehension of the reigns of the Roman Emperors, from Julius Cæsar to Trajan.—Messiah's Herald.

News Items.

The Eastern question remains as complicated as ever. It is probably a Gordian knot that will never be untied, but cut by the sword of a modern Alexander. We subjoin but a few items this week but shall watch the progress of events with intense interest. We quote from the Chicago Tribune of to-day, Nov. 15. S. A. C.

The Standard's Vienna dispatch says quarters for 20,000 men are being prepared at Rustchuck, and the fortresses at Silistria, Schumlia, Rustchuck and Varna are to be held by 75,000 reserve men from the Asiatic army corps.

Dervish Pasha has been ordered to send a large force to Constantinople, and steamers have been sent to the Albanian coast to transport them.

The Berlin correspondent of the Standard telegraphs that the Russian Ambassadors at the several courts have been ordered to officially communicate to the foreign Governments the Moscow speech of the Czar, and give special explanation of its meaning.

A Standard special from Constantinople declares the Turks are firmly persuaded that Russia will make inadmissable demands in order to provoke a rupture.

The Turks are vigorously preparing for war. Torpedoes are being placed at the eastern entrance of the Bosphorus, and the forts have been strengthened. The people in Constantinople and elsewhere are forming a national guard.

The Berlin correspondent of the Times reports that in obedience to Russia's demand, Persia has placed some troops on her Turkish frontier.

The New Free Press of Vienna says England possesses the clearest proofs of Russia's ulterior designs. She has communicated these to Count V. Beust, the Austrian Ambassador in London. A complete agreement is established between England and Austria.

Our hope is not hung upon such an untwisted thread as "I imagine so," or "It is likely;" but the strong cable of our fastened anchor is the promise and oath of Him, who is eternal verity. Our salvation is fastened with God's own hand and Christ's own strength to the strong hold of God's unchanging nature and truthfulness.—Rutherford

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT.

Special Notice.

We receive letters daily, sometimes containing money, and sometimes asking us to change an address, but without a single line to indicate where the writer lives. In such cases there is nothing to do but wait for further orders.

Always give post office, county and state plainly, and if your address is to be changed, give present address, also the office to which you wish the paper changed. Nearly all the troubles arises from this carelessness on the part of the writer.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Friday evening before the second Sunday in December, holding over Sabbath, at the school house one mile east of Abraham Pennington's, 3½ miles from Akron, Fulton county, Ind. Brother J. F. Wagoner is expected to be present.

JACOB SHAFER.

There will be a meeting of the brethren of the Church of God at the Lath Branch School House, 12 miles east of Fort Scott, Kansas, on Nevada road, beginning Friday before the first Sunday in December, 1877, at early 9 a.m. and continuing over Lord following Sunday. We hope Brethren Green, Kinney, Hayden, Lovejoy, Hotz, Stringer, Hicklin, Cooper, and all others who can, will come. Those coming on the cars should write me, and I will meet them with a team.

F. R. VERMILION,
Fort Scott, Kansas.

Brother J. T. Pryne's address is now Nevada, Story Co., Iowa.

The first quarterly meeting of the Southeastern A. C. conference will be held at Ladora, Iowa Co., Iowa, on the C., R. I. & P. railroad, commencing on Friday, Dec. 7, 1877, and holding over Sunday. A general invitation is extended to all brethren from abroad. We hope to see every church in this district represented. Brethren coming by rail will enquire for Brother C. Nielson. Elder Myers, Chandler and Pixley, will be in attendance, and we hope to see other preaching brethren on hand to assist in this meeting. Come one, come all, in the spirit of the Master, expecting and praying for a blessing for yourself and those that may come out to hear the blessed truth.

J. H. MILLS, Sec.

Brother J. M. Stephenson will spend the second and third Sundays in November at Tunnel City, and near Sparta, in Brother Smith's neighborhood. Also at Lanark, Ill., the fourth Sunday in November, and the evening before.

Brother Sweet's Tracts.

I am now returned from Scranton, Pa., at which place, by the help of Brother T. Finn, I published my Exposition of the Discourse of the Saviour in Luke xv. and xvi., including the notorious text, the Rich Man and Lazarus. As no one else offered to take stock, we have published the same on the following terms, post-paid, either of him at Scranton, Luzerne Co., Pa., or of me at Albion, Orleans Co., N. Y.:

Single copy	$0 15
Eight copies	1 00
Eighteen copies	2 00
Fifty copies	5 00

I will give one copy of the "Tree of Life" and two copies of "The Primitive Faith," in place of four copies of this pamphlet, and more, if desired, in the same way and at the same rate, the "Tree of Life" including in a bound form my controversy with A. Campbell's book on the annihilation question.

Now, I can only say that I have done this as a duty, and shall trust in God for the results. My son gave me his check for $25—lent it to me—and I was thus enabled to get my manuscript, which has been written about three years, printed at Scranton, Pa. Two years ago, in order to get along smoothly, I borrowed $50, which is not yet paid. But if the Lord will, and I can lawfully obtain the means, I hope to pay it this winter. Now will you help to spread the truth, and in doing so help the editor, and also me, together with the poor unto whom they may read this little volume of 87 pages, averaging 500 words or over to the page, gratis.

Now, brethren, will you send for some? If any one wishing for one, shall, after reading it carefully and without prejudice, in a careful, prayerful and candid manner, say that it is a cheat and not worth its price, I hereby promise to return his money.

Dear brethren and sisters, ask nothing but that you do as you would be done by under like circumstances. If you can not send for more, cannot you send for one? For 50 cents I will send you one of each,—Tree of Life, and Colloquy; Primitive Faith, and The Rich Man and Lazarus. I published the same exposition some 25 years ago, that is in the main. I have read very many of the interpretations since that time, some of which are no expositions of the parable at all, but are failures to that degree as to be unhistorical narration—by nothing personal the things that represent the facts. For instance, Lazarus is said to be Christ in person; Hell, Christ's body; must have been literally full of sores, he literally lay at a rich man's gate, and the rich man must be no figure of anything, but literally a man, and his death, hell, and torment, must have been literal—and so on to the end of the chapter.

Well, all I want is to have candid men read my Exposition in a candid manner and then follow the light. Amen. Send for some.

"But Sweeter Days Shall Come at Last."

My heart was light of care or pain,
What reckèd I for the wintry blast?
And stepping homeward through the rain,
I paused to catch a single strain:
"But sweeter days will come at last!"

So deep a song, so sweet a tone,
Entlew my feet from hurrying past:
The voice fell to a tender moan,
And rose with the refrain alone:
"But sweeter days will come at last!"

I took the song home in my heart,
And gave it room with sweet things passed;
I wondered if the singer's art,
Or if her soul sang in the part,
"But sweeter days will come at last!"

I know not then, I know to-day,
Who stayed me thus in chilling blast:
A life shut from the light of day,
With only faith to sing and say,
"But sweeter days will come at last!"

Once more I walked in chill and rain;
The happy years had flown too fast;
My heart was lowed with loss and pain,
When memory struck that chord again:
"But sweeter days will come at last!"

I paused as erst in twilight gloom,
And said, "What precious need thou love,
Pain sheer of the prison room,
When thus thy song outlives thy tomb;"
"But sweeter days will come at last!"

And in my grief 'tis sweet to know
'Twas grief that climbed to hopes so vast;
And that 'twas sorrow's overflow
That sang of morn to plaints of woe;
"But sweeter days will come at last!"

My heart went out with happier cheer,
And sang, though yet with clouds o'ercast,
If so, some weeper, passing near,
Or some colorless heart might hear:
"But sweeter days will come at last!"

Iniquity Abounding.

It seems to be assumed, in all quarters that the times are out of joint; that sin and folly prevail in high places as well as low; and that the very foundations of social order are in danger of being destroyed. This opinion finds constant expression through the pulpit and the press, in our seats of justice, and in our halls of legislation. With the increase of light and knowledge, which has marked the progress of the century, there has come an equal augmentation of all the forces and appliances of evil. It would seem that while the good are getting better, the bad are getting worse at each successive stage of the world's advancement, and if this be the law of its progress, it is difficult to see, on principles of human calculation, what the end will be. We are left, however, in no uncertainty as to final results; for we know that God is on the throne, and he has assured us, in his word that the good shall at last triumph.

It cannot be denied that there is, in all parts of our land, and in all ranks of society an unusual prevalence of luxury and extravagance, violence and corruption, vice and crime, threatening the very existence of our free institutions. At such a spectacle many of our oldest and wisest men are filled with astonishment and misgivings as to the future. What these things mean, and what they portend, are problems which call for the prayerful and thoughtful consideration of all true patriots and Christians.

To us it seems perfectly plain that the fearful domestic, social and public evils of the times have grown out of a departure from the essential truths of God's word, and the obvious requirements of God's ordinances, on the part of the individual, the family and the nation. There has been a growing disregard for the old established principles of religion and morality, and with it a relaxation of the demands of conscience, a connivance with sin and folly, a yielding toleration of error, a tacit conformity to the maxims of worldly wisdom, and an open or secret indulgence in a thousand practices condemned by the word of God. All this has come in a large measure from the prevailing skepticism, materialism and atheism of the age. A whole generation has sprung up under this teaching and we are beginning already to reap its harvests. Our people have drifted away from all the old landmarks. Under the popular watchword of progress—a good thing abused—they have been trying the experiment of countless innovations. They have gone after other gods, unknown to the fathers of our church and the founders of this republic.

There has been a gradual, but now very wide departure from the great principles of virtue and integrity, of individual character and of public honor, upon which our republican institutions were founded, and by which they were maintained through all our earlier history. It is the fashion now, in certain quarters, to decry the great principles of the German and Swiss Reformers, the French Huguenots and the English Puritans, the Scotch Covenanters and the New England Pilgrims. But it is one of the best established facts in history, and one of the grandest that these are the very principles on which the American church and state were founded; the destructive principle, on which their young life was nourished up to greatness, which have given character to us as a people, and made the nation respected and honored in the eyes of mankind.

For the first fifty years of our history [illegible] departure from the maxims of our fathers. The affairs of the nation were administered on the same principles of economy, frugality, honesty, public spirit, and patriotism, which had distinguished the career of all our early patriots and statesmen, but the last half century, especially the last quarter, with its influx of population, its accumulation of wealth, its lust of power, and its unparalleled splendor, has brought a woful declension of moral character. Many among us have become so paganized and demoralized that they seem to be ashamed of our nation's religious origin and Christian character.

The church itself, in many of its has caught the prevailing spirit of worldliness, and instead of rebuking the sins of the times, has been willing to join in the idolatry of wealth and fashion. We might almost take up the lamentation of the old prophet over the desolations of Jerusalem, and say, "Judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off; for truth is fallen in the street, and equity can not enter."

If such be a true diagnosis of the prevailing malady, then the remedy is plain. It is in the line of reformation and return. If as a people we have been departing from the ordinances of God, and hewing out for ourselves broken cisterns which can hold no water, then our only remedy and our only salvation is in coming back to him who is the fountain of living water—whose inspired word is the true source and standard of righteousness and peace to the individual and the nation. Our safety lies in the setting up of the old landmarks, in the restoration of first principles. When the prophets of God preached reformation in Israel, they called the people, not to a seeking after new inventions, but a return to the old paths.

It is not in new departures from evangelical truth, not in empirical innovations, not in rationalistic speculations, nor in the cold negations of atheism, materialism, and skepticism that our true strength lies. On the contrary, it is in a return and firm adherence to those old established principles of truth, equity, and liberty which have stood the test of ages, sustained the children of God through all generations, and carried the fruits of civilization around the globe,—the principles of the American revolution, of the Protestant reformation, and of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.—Interior.

The Trouble in the East.

The contest in the east of Europe between Turkey and some of her provinces, which has been going on for some time, and the cruelties and outrages committed on both sides, cause many to reflect on the subject.

The query as to the insurrection is, whether it is a war of religion, for independence, or for an increase of territory.

Looking at affairs in the right light, one cannot but come to the conclusion that the desire for more territory and increased political power, is the main, if not the only cause of the war.

Anybody who has looked over the pages of history knows that since the times of Peter the Great of Russia, it has been the policy of that power to drive out the Moslems from Europe in order to be sole master of the Black Sea. It is further the object of that greedy, half barbarous power to unite the Sclavonic element into a compact mass. Not satisfied with having cut to pieces the kingdom of Poland, with stripping Sweden of part of her territory, it has stretched out its paws far into Asia, threatening the English colonies in India. It had also a foothold on American soil. After having made a splendid bargain with the United States, in selling to her Alaska, it turns again to the East of Europe, according to its traditional policy, in order to regain as much, and if possible, more, than it lost in 1856.

To secure that object it pretends to come to the rescue of the oppressed Christian population of the insurrected country which is also inhabited by Mohammedans.

When we take in consideration the fact that there is an established church in Russia—the Czar being the chief in ecclesiastical as well as secular affairs—that the policy pursued by that northern giant is to have one church as well as one state in its domains, that in that vast monarchy where despotism reigns supreme, there nothing like civil and religious liberty is to be found; we can hardly believe that Russian emissaries and Russian troops are sent to assist Servia in its struggle for the sole purpose of relieving the Christians from the yoke of the Crescent.

For years the cry of a persecuted, maltreated race has been heard from one of those provinces. For years we have read continually of the outrages committed on an industrious, intellectual people in that insignificant province of Roumania. And for no other reason than for the difference of creed are those cruelties committed. The Israelites of Roumania can tell a story about the love of the confessors of the church, of love for their fellow citizens, although not living in the middle ages.

Why, if Russia has such humane feelings as it pretends to have, did she not use her influence long ago to stop such inhumane proceedings? If she really is so soft-hearted, why did she not interfere in the name of humanity at the proper time?

Neither was the war begun for the sake of independence. Russia knew well enough that Servia would not be able to wrest herself from Turkish sovereignty. She stirred the fire, but wanted to be called in, when it would be in full blaze, to quench it again. And in that she did not calculate incorrectly. Facts show already that Russia has taken a foothold further east, and when the great powers of Europe will admit her advance she will, crushing every thought of independence, grasp with iron hands all that will come within her reach.

Only when Europe will take example from the glorious republic of the United States of America, and will adopt our motto, Civil and Religious Liberty, will a war of that kind be justified. As it now stands, the war will and must be looked upon, by every right thinking mind, as an affair of greed and cruelty.—Jewish Chronicle.

The Church in Spain.

The distrust of and dislike to the tyranny of the Church are very marked and palpable features in the character and conversation of the Spanish peasant of to-day. True, the little children still run out from street corner and blind alley to kiss the hand of the passing priest, and beseech his blessing; true, the women have in the houses, and pray to, the image of Christ, saint, Virgin, or martyr; but, little by little, the male poor population is being alienated from the Church. They do not like the gradual return to "place and power of the Jesuits; nay, the men detest it, and are not afraid openly to avow their detestation. But the women still, woman-like, cling to the Church authority and the "sympathy of Santa Maria la Nirgen." And here be it said that, although in too many cases men of immoral lives, rendered necessarily immortal by the enforced system of celibacy in the Eastern climate, yet that the priests are not bad or brutal. They constantly live in fornication, but, so far as their slender means allow, they are generous in an impulsive, scatterly, unorganized way to the poor. And they live, in a manner, up to their light—the false, flickering, and will-o'-the-wisp light that has been held before their eyes from their childhood. You enter a second-class carriage, and three priests, in their flowing canonicals, are the occupants. Each one has in his hands his open book of prayer, and is, in whispered or muttered tones, praying—for it is the hour for prayer, and neither the screech of engine nor puff of cigar smoke will divert them from their purpose. To his honor be it said, no priest ever jokes or makes light of the Sacrament of the Host, the culminating mystery and sacrarium of the Church. The vagabond boys make light of this, however; and, as among the Italian peasantry you hear the words of blasphemy, "Frita Hostia," i. e. "Fried Host," so you do in Spain. "Frita hostia, mabilita," is no uncommon form of curse or execration. "Do they not visit the sick and the hospitals?" I inquired a few days since, speaking of the Jesuits, who had newly returned to a town wherein I was staying. "No," said my pleasant informant, "but they visit the señoritas." "And how will they live?" said I. "Oh, don't you fear about them; they will take very good care about the money part of the business. The Roman Church in England does command respect; in Spain it does not to any great extent do so. There are many anecdotes or family love and ties of affection; of the keen sense of justice felt by the Spanish poor; of their great and genial courtesy; of their simple and sincere hospitality. As regards peasant morality, I will only say that, among the decent peasantry, the bearing of illegitimate children is not so common as in England. But the Church has not helped them, alas! to be either moral or educated; and they feel, and are beginning to realize, this fact. Only a few nights since two Spanish peasants were sharing with me my humble supper. The church of the pueblo was opposite to our windows. Suddenly we heard loud shouts in childrens' voices of "Padrino! padrino!" "There's been a christening," said one of my guests, "and a musical one, for which I'll be bound fifty reals have been paid." "Do the poor pay also?" I asked. "Yes," was the answer, "pay they must, or a cura won't christen the child; they must pay at least a dollar." Then, continuing, this peasant said: "Were I a Government Minister, I'd knock every church to-morrow: for una iglesia no hay mas que un grande comercio," i. e., a church is no more than a great house of business. This is true. Everything has been, in the Spanish Church system, a matter of payment. If you can pay well for masses for the soul, for a grand funeral, for a musical christening, all is well; but if not, you are simply "left out in the cold." Witness the funerals of the poor. No priest goes with the body; no rites within the church walls attend it; no lights or gorgeous flower-covered coffins are seen, as in the case of the rich. No. The funeral of the poor is a sorry sight—a sorry sight indeed. The corpse of the poor man is thrown, wound in a shroud, into the coffin of the Town Council, a coffin kept for the use of the poor, and carried by four ruffians to the cemetery; there is no religious ceremony; arrived at the cemetery the poor man's body is shot into a great, yawning, sandy pit; a quantity of quick-lime is heaped above it; the sand is scraped over; the thing is ended. Such is the burial of the poor—of those who, in colloquial language, cannot pay—in Spain. The extortions of the Church upon the poor have been great—very great indeed. But a few months since a poor peasant-woman was unable to pay for the burial of her child, and the cura refused to bury it. The little body lay stiff, cold, and putrifying; at last the civil guards, emissaries of the noble in Spain, broke open the gates of the cemetery and buried the child. This story surely shows that all sacred matters have been made in this country completely matters of money; that the curates do not trust the word of the poor, for this cura evidently believed that the woman had the money wherewith to bury her child; that they rely too much on good works—"you must pay your dollar," as a debt of gratitude to the Church; and that under such a system the poor naturally writhe and are indignant—with good reason. Where, then, it will be asked, is the hope of Spain? The Church is hopelessly corrupt; the Government a mere house of business to make money; the upper-middle classes very corrupt. True. But the hope of Spain lies in the peasant classes and those of the lower-middle class. A more Christian, public spirit is creeping, slowly, but very surely, into the minds of the lower orders. And if you ask whence it comes, and how it comes, I can only say, in answer, that just as "the wind bloweth where it listeth, and [illegible] nor canst thou tell whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth," so neither can you tell whence cometh, or how will result, the growing Christian spirit among the down-trodden Spanish poor.—Temple Bar.

Poor and Needy.

We know not how the passage in Psa. xl. 17, may strike others, but to us there is something exceedingly affecting in it: "I am poor and needy; yet the Lord thinketh upon me." Others may not think upon us in our loneliness and want—may neglect us as of no account—"pass by on the other side," but if the eye and heart of heaven are with us,—if he who has made us tenderly cares for us,—is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, numbers our sighs, and puts our falling tears into his bottle, here is real comfort. And if, indeed, we are God's chosen, redeemed and renewed ones, and our necessities are caused by no fault of our own, and we are humble and submissive,—accept of our lot as best for us, because assigned by infinite wisdom and love; then are we precious in his sight and honorable—are the excellent of the earth, his jewels, he remembers us with the favor he beareth his own people—and he thinks how soon our privations will end, and we rest in his love, and possess the unlimited wealth of heaven. Take this blessed assurance, suffering believer, that the Lord thinketh upon you. If a fond parent, you can not always be thinking of your child, yet the thoughts of your Heavenly Father are never diverted from you and you are the object of his benevolent notice continually. In all your afflictions he is afflicted; and he that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye.

John's Love Compared With Paul's.

Love in John's heart is something like a divine complacency and satisfaction—a calm, unruffled lake, the reflected heavens slumbering on its bosom, and the hills of holiness watching round it. It is much like what one can fancy a seraph's fervid fire. It cannot be still. It rests not, day or night. It cannot be hid. Blaze after blaze bursts forth, brighter and brighter still. John lies basking, so to speak, in the full sunshine of his Savior's love, and so he seems as if he would fain just lie still and enjoy it. This is my rest; here will I dwell, for I have desired it. Paul, like the skylark roused from his lowly bed by the rising sun, spreads forth his willing wing; away he soars to heaven, and, as he soars, he sings far above the world the praises of that Savior who has called him out of darkness into his marvellous light. John's love was like his life; calm, still—either leaning on Jesus' bosom, or seeing visions in the lonely, sea-girt Patmos. Paul's love was like his life, too—either journeying to Damascus, or shipwrecked on his way to Rome, or fighting wild beasts at Ephesus, or daring to carry the Gospel into the very palace of the Cæsars.

Our Friendship.

Certainly it is a strange, sad thing to contemplate, to stand upon the heaped-up colossal treasure of friendship, and find, instead of real, living images, they are like pyramids, full of dust and ashes.

Yet, we all know too well, our best beloved and most prized pictures are full of shadows; that into our fullest, noblest feelings enter imperfections; that upon all our solid joys fall silent dew drops that soften and obliterate the burning flashes that else would rival the sunshine, and to drive us crazy.

Thus in our follies, in all our extravagances, we know that there is a thin, shadowless vapor thrown over, through which we can see the dawn, and know ourselves as others know us.

So it is in anger we feel the proof of supreme selfishness, as in our mightiest, purest harmonies we are conscious of individual discords that savor of human nature, just as in all earthly structures we find ruin.

How sure we are that in all buildings we find poor material; that in warehouses we know there are unsaleable goods; that in all portraits we unconsciously trace lineaments of others; that in all theatres are actors; in all reflections, aberrations; in all philosophies, sense; in all churches, doctrines; in all differences, indifference; in all strength, weakness; in all screaming, impracticability; in all principle, undying truth; in all dead seas, the remembered and the to come; in all stages of society, rottenness; and in all occasional goodness, gleams of the unseen; in all wisdom, the concentrated ignorance of the past; in all nature's voices, the undercurrent and key-note of our own struggling up, or unfolding the sight seeing faculties and holding the lens of observation. In darkness or light.

So in all those sins we find words; in all unobserved efforts, flights of fancy no man can fathom; in all experiences, analogies; in all wild, unrestrained things, beauty; in all popular impressions, disagreeable things; in all religious life, the reflex of self; in all God-seeing people, shame; in all beginnings, the end; in all the murmurs and sighs of trees, the alternate joy and sorrow of life's hidden utterances; while in all prosperity we are sure to ignore our real manhood, just as in all bodies of water we are apt to forget in how small a space one person can swim. In all our appetites we crave the unsatisfying and ornamental, forgetting the changeless restless tide that supplies all our wants through unsuspending channels.

Can we wonder, then, that into the amenities of social life come upheavals and freshets that sweep out the toilet-scented blossoms of friendship, and destroy the mutual insurances that were agreed upon in the cradle-rocked days of expansive outgushing, crushing the susceptible, loving melodies that rang in harmony and rest, burying the unfolding joys that crystalized the rock-hewn landscapes of wintry darkness wherein the lonely desolate-hearted anchorage covering up the breath of love that had daguerreotyped the furniture, withering the passion flowers that had kissed with tenderness and delicacy the nipped and stunted buds of education and surroundings, pulling the berry-red lips of charity, that suffered with a full, clear, definite purpose into the promised, entombing the unpromised, shutting out the hoped-for, reflecting upon the might-be.

Oh! oh! have we got to deal with our hearts as do the landlords of tenant houses, cursing and dislodging the occupants without a moment's notice, and without ceremony? Is there no alternative? Nothing that will obviate these changes? Are we to bury or to hide away forever the dear, dear old faces, pile them away in the grand old storehouse of memory, simply to make room for the new-comers, who supposed to fill their places and do the honors of the past, present and future? No, no! God forbid! not so long as we know we can go to the unused, quiet, curtained chambers of our hearts, and do it in the treasured spirit rocks our own best beloved, tried and trusted friends, watching, guarding, and keeping us from all evil by their counsels and their prayers, acting as their reserve corps, when the whole army of would-be seeming friends have taken their departure. And thus, knowing what we know, we thank God for all that is left and trust him for what is to come.

Great Anti-Turkish Meeting in Rome.

Three thousand Roman citizens representing every rank, profession and trade, and every interest except the Vatican, assembled on Sunday evening, Sept. 3, in the Apollo Theatre, to protest against the mode of warfare practiced by the Turks. The chair was taken by the Commendatore Placidi, supported on either hand by senators, deputies, and men conspicuous by their social position and public spirit. Telegrams approving the object of the meeting were read. They came from all parts of Italy—Turin, Milan, Venice, Bologna, Florence, Ancona, Naples, Messina, Catania, Palermo, etc. Among the senders were the presidents of public bodies of every description. Universities, chambers of commerce, political clubs of all parties and Masonic lodges, the senators Scipio, and Amari, Counts Mamiani and Sclli, and a long list of deputies and distinguished Italians. Loud applause greeted the announcement of a telegram from Garribaldi. Every part of the building, including the boxes reserved for the ladies, was filled. The Roman and provincial journals were represented by special reporters. All the proceedings were conducted with admirable decorum, and good feeling. A Sicilian and a Roman workman expressed the indignation of their respective communities at the fiendish mode of warfare adopted by the Turks, and urged diplomacy to throw off all reserve and acknowledge the righteousness of the Sclavic cause. Among the other speakers the Countess Chiocci rose in a box and asked permission to address the meeting. The chairman reminded the lady of the regulation requiring the speakers to address the audience from the platform. She accordingly came round to the platform and handed a written oration to the secretary of the committee, with the hope that it would be inserted in the published proceedings. The order of the day finally approved, expresses the indignation of the meeting at the Turkish atrocities; affirms the right of the Sclaves to their autonomy; proclaims the hopelessness of restoring order to a country which tramples on the rights of man; declares that the civilized world, having acknowledged the principle of international arbitration, cannot tolerate the Turkish outrages; invites the Italian government to exercise its influence to secure for the Sclavic communities a better future; sends a salute to the illustrious combatants in the cause of a down-trodden people; stigmatizes the cowardice of the so-called adherents of the Gospel in tolerating the armed apostles of the Koran, and proposes to nominate a committee for carrying out the resolutions and collecting subscriptions for the victims of the Turks.—N. Y. Tribune.

Much Now, More Then.

If you are indeed a Christian, you cannot expect too much when Jesus comes. But you may expect too little now.

He has promised many great and glorious things now; and He is quite willing to make good His largest and kindest promises. He waits until you want, until you ask Him, until you are earnest with Him to bestow. The moment the fulfilment of the promise is necessary for you, and will bring glory to His holy and ever-blessed name, that moment will the promise be fulfilled. Expect much from Jesus now. Ask much from Jesus now.

But yet, when clouds gather, when dangers press, when foes collect, when difficulties increase, when causes of sorrow arise, look forward—anticipate the coming of your Redeemer, and rejoice. In all times of tribulation, in all seasons of conflict, and in all circumstances of discouragement, "gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the appearance of Jesus Christ;" for you may expect great things then. He has told us of "earthly things" in His Word, and they have been so great that we have scarcely believed Him; how astonished, how delighted, how inexpressibly joyful shall we be when He brings us to see, to receive, and to enjoy "heavenly things!" Then we shall have great peace, great joy, great glory. Our wealth will be immense, our satisfaction perfect, and our inheritance eternal.

Happy believer, though thy lot be low, thy present resources small, thy conflict severe, thy suffering continued, and thy temptations painful; for Jesus is coming—"Behold, he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him"—and you may "expect great things then." Nor can your expectations possibly be cut off.—British Messenger.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the Immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Who is on the Lord's Side.

"Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; for he is faithful that promised."

Never perhaps has the above earnest appeal been more needful than at the present time. A firmer grasp upon the sure promises of God is the only hope of mortals for salvation. Unwavering faith in the testimonies of God's word is the great rudder that will enable us to steer the course of our vessel through the shoals of unbelief. But what are the facts of the case? Do we hear the clear ringing truths of the Bible urged upon mankind? Do teachers among us stand up and boldly define "the faith once delivered to the saints?" Dare they attempt to draw the line between truth and error? Do they believe there is a definite plan of salvation? Will they tell us that the items of faith necessary to salvation can be named? Alas! any attempt to do this, simply raises the cry of creed! creed!! creed!!! either written or unwritten. Now what is the meaning of this terrible word that has frightened so many? Webster says "It is any system of principles which are believed." Does the Bible contain any system of principles that are to be believed? Does God require us to believe them? Can we believe them if we do not know what they are? If we know them can we tell them to others? Judging from the indefinite way some speak of their faith I should not be surprised to hear them sing

"'Tis a point I long to know,
Oft it causes anxious thought,
Do I love the Lord or no
Am I his or am I not?"

Faith is often spoken of in the Bible as an essential prequisite to pleasing God; it is positively stated that without it, it is impossible to please him. Here the line is certainly drawn and it settles this point. To please God we must believe him. To believe him we must hear what he says; this involves a knowledge gained through hearing His Word. Now the point to settle is this: Is that word sufficiently plain upon the different items of faith for us to understand it? For instance, in giving us a history of man's origin does it tell us how he was made? If it does, is it necessary to believe it? Does it speak of man's destiny? If so, does it tell us what it is? Now every essential item of faith necessary to salvation may, can, and ought to be readily named by any Bible student. The essential principles found in the constitution of any human government may, can, and ought to be familiar to every official of that government. This knowledge does not necessarily embrace the almost infinite variety of detail as pertaining to the facts or principles themselves. It is unquestionably a fact that an individual may begin an enterprise with an intelligent knowledge of the general business of the entererise but ignorant of the details growing out of it. This is true of almost every human enterprise; and upon this great fact we base this statement; that in relation to God's purposes the same principle holds good. An individual may intelligently understand the fact that the kingdom of God will be a literal government established upon earth; and having this knowledge be scripturally baptized and afterward learn much about the same kingdom. Hence when the question is asked "how much faith is necessary to qualify a person for baptism," the answer is, faith in the great fact itself, and not in the details of the fact; nor in the belief of some other kingdom taught by man; but not revealed in the Bible. I would under no circumstances baptize a person who did not believe that God would establish a kingdom upon the earth as taught by the holy prophets, and if such confession is made by a person who has been taught the truth, there will be no necessity for a re-baptism, nor any doubts in the mind, as to the validity of the baptism. It is no uncommon thing to find persons who are dissatisfied with their baptism; and the reason assigned in almost every case is that they did not understand the nature of the kingdom of God; some believing in a sky kingdom, some in a church kingdom, and others in a heart kingdom. My advice to all such is be sure that your baptism is preceded by an intelligent knowledge of the kingdom of God, for through this only is salvation promised.

If the language of Jesus "He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved" is to be considered as having a definite meaning, then my conclusion is just; being based upon correct premises. But if the language "he that believeth" has no direct reference to any particular system of faith, then my conclusion is erroneous, being based upon false premises. But giving this broad latitude to the term "believeth" would entirely nullify such statements as this, "preach the Gospel," not a Gospel, or any Gospel, but "the Gospel." "If any man or an angel from heaven preach any other Gospel than that we have preached, let him be accursed." "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." "Preach the word." "Contend earnestly for the faith." "There is one faith." "Without faith it is impossible to please God." Such expressions can never be harmonized with any or all systems of faith; but they do most clearly and unequivocably teach a unit faith, a clearly defined system of doctrine. The Gospel of the kingdom is simply good news of or about the kingdom; to preach the Gospel then would be to tell the good news about God's kingdom; this is easily done if we know where to find this good news, and if Jesus in expounding the kingdom of God began at Moses and the prophets, it looks reasonable that we could also expound the same Gospel in the same way. To suppose that God would suspend the destiny of man upon a certain issue, and fail to make that issue plain is to impeach the wisdom of God. To claim that some lack the ability to comprehend the plan of salvation, and yet have their destiny decided by it is to impeach the justice of the Almighty. To admit that all affected by the plan of salvation will be equally required to understand and obey it is to confess the justice and impartiality of God. The difference in the mental capacity of those who will be affected by the plan of salvation is not so great as some suppose. The grand difference is between the plain and intelligent manner that God has stated it, and the obscurity that has been thrown around it by ignorant expositors. A hundred persons with different intellectual powers will read a historical fact, and notwithstanding the difference in their mental capacity there will be a uniform conclusion reached. Why? Because one rule of interpretation will be used. A hundred persons of like mental powers will read "and he that believeth" and come to one hundred different conclusions as to what is to be believed, and why? because a hundred arbitrary rules have been applied to this language. In conclusion let me exhort all to heed Paul's injunction "Let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same things."

Yours for the ancient landmarks,

Justification—Is it by Faith?—A Response to Bro. Myers by a Critic.

Nothing is easier than misapprehension of the positions of others and upon such misapprehension to inadvertently do injustice by innocently misrepresenting such position. It is not and cannot be true that faith is the only element that enters into the work of man's salvation. This I most truly grant. Hence the expression "salvation by faith alone" when taken in an absolute sense is false. But I did not use it in such a sense, as a careful analysis of my criticism of Bro. S. A. C. will show.

It was in opposition to the sentiment that men earned the crown by works; as embodied in the following among other expressions in the article criticised:

"An honest, careful attention to the common requirements of the Gospel in its primary principles, may win for us the advantage of the common salvation; but for the transcendent honors connected with the crowns, thrones and sceptres, in the princedoms of the grand Empire of God: the crosses, the labors and struggles of a narrow pathway wet with the tears of penitence, must be uncomplainingly borne."

In response to this sentiment I affirmed and now reaffirm the doctrine of "salvation by faith alone;" and it is manifestly unfair to so quote me as to represent me as excluding all other elements which must necessarily enter into the work.

Are our good works meritorious; so that by them we earn a special salvation not otherwise attainable? I utterly deny that the Holy Scriptures teach such a doctrine and never that we are justified by faith alone, good works being simply the natural outgrowth of faith. Faith is the tree; good works the fruit. Salvation is simply a free gift; to be enjoyed by him who accepts of it. To accept is simply an act of faith and the good works following, including baptism, are the outgrowth of faith and simply a proof of its existence. There is not a particle of merit in them; not an atom of power for any man's salvation, yet he who claims that he has faith without the corresponding works deceives himself. The good works may exist without the faith but the faith without the works—never.

Now to contrast the sentiment with the manifest truths that our salvation is God's free gift, i. e. we are saved by grace; that Christ was the instrument, i. e. we are saved by Christ; that to accomplish it he shed his blood, i. e. we are saved by his blood; that it is necessary to believe in his work, i. e. we are saved by faith; that we yield willing obedience to his commands, i. e. we are saved by works; that all this inspires us to hope for the fulfillment of his promises and therefore we are saved by hope;—to draw a contrast, I say, between these sentiments is to force opposition where none exists, and to present a distorted and unfair view of my position. In the language of controversialists, it is erecting a man of straw for the purpose of demolition.

Now I feel certain that both yourself and our beloved Bro. S. A. C. will and do agree perfectly with me in all this, and I only took occasion to criticise his article fest the unlearned or unstable or perhaps our enemies might take occasion to do us harm, or themselves, by too free an interpretation of his words. I am far from loving controversy for its own sake, and it is only to defend the truth or bring it out more forcibly that I engage in it.

Allow me to illustrate my idea of the work of salvation:

A man is drifting over Niagra Falls in a frail boat;—a father and son witness his peril,—the father says to the son, "Take one end of this rope and swim out to that man and when he comes near you secure it to him and I will save you and him by drawing you ashore." The son consents and risks his life to save his fellow-man. When he comes near, both the father and the son shout to the man "Spring into the water and seize hold of the rope." The man obeys, lays hold of the rope in the hands of the son and both are drawn to land. The father was under no obligation to save the man; "By grace are ye saved;"—the son was under no obligation to save the man; we are saved by Christ;—neither could have he saved the man without means, i. e. a trusty rope; we are saved by the Gospel;—if the man had no confidence in the means employed he could not have been saved; we are saved by faith;—if he had not obeyed as a result of his faith he could not have laid hold of the Gospel rope in the hands of Christ: we are saved by works. Now is there any merit of his abandoning his leaky boat which is bearing him on to destruction and laying hold of the rope in the hands of his benefactor and Savior? Does he earn his salvation by holding tenaciously on? Is not confidence in the means the one important element in his salvation; from his side of the work? Would all his works avail as long as he stuck to his craft? Is his work of leaping into the water and seizing the rope anything more than an abandonment of his own method of salvation at the dictate of faith in the means appointed by another? Would his leaping into the water and holding tenaciously to the rope save him if the father did not draw him to land? Is not our salvation then the free gift of God, by the instrumentality of his Son to all those that believe independent of works but bearing the works as a tree bears its fruit? Hoping we see eye to eye in this important matter, I am as ever your brother in the Gospel hope.

"CRITIC."

Patience.

"For ye have need of patience, that after ye have done the will of God ye might receive the promise."

Truly we have need of patience. Trial is everywhere—the earth is sin-cursed and brings forth her thorns and thistles. The ocean is tempest-tossed and the mariner finds no haven for his bark. The mountains are rent with earthquakes, and the volcanoes of political strife are seething with corruption. The very air is tainted with sin, and poisoned with disease. Temptation surrounds upon every side, and yet the heavens do not reveal the descending King. "But he that endureth to the end shall be saved." Blessed promise! The glory shall come at the end of the pilgrimage—the end of earth's sin and sorrow—the end of our heartaches and weaknesses. But the end seems long in coming, and we have need of patience. Great troubles strike our quivering hearts, and we are dumb before their power, but "tribulation worketh patience." It is our great trials that send us for refuge to the Rock of Ages. When human hopes are shattered as with an earthquake—when the sun of our happiness becomes black as sackcloth—when the stars seem to fall from our heavens, and the mountains and islands of human trust are moved out of their places, the most careless of us will seek for consolation in the bosom of the Father, the only place of relief that the universe affords—the only hope of wicked and suffering humanity—the only refuge from life's storms and tempests—the only harbor from temptation and sin. And we are always welcome there! There is no brain so weary, no life so desolate, that it cannot find peace, and rest, and hope in the great heart of the pitying Father. It is after the tempest that the low breezes touch lovingly on our heads. It is after the clouds and darkness that the rainbow arches the heavens. It is after the sky is shaded with storm-clouds, that the sunshine seems the brightest.

Let us then be "patient in tribulation," be patient under wrong and misapprehension—patient although weary and sad—patient though our best motives may be misunderstood—our kindest intentions distrusted. It is in the little vexations of every day life that we "have need of patience." We meet on every hand with petty trials and troubles—there are little irritations that chafe and fret us—little stones in our pathway—little thorns among our roses—little traces of pain on the faces we love, that are hard to bear because they find us off our guard, and it is in view of these things that we are told, "In patience possess ye your souls." We are pledged to a life of self-denial, if we follow our self-denying Lord. We must not yield to fretfulness or impatience, any more than to ease and luxury.

"Ye have need of patience, that after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise." There is danger, then, after having done the will of God, (as far as the first steps are concerned,) of losing the promise, through a lack of patience. We may fret away our faith in our fellow-men by dwelling on their faults and foibles, and we may fret away our faith in God by constantly worrying over the trials that beset our pathway. If we "possess our souls in patience," we hold the balance of power, because we control ourselves—we can then meet trials with calmness, faults with forbearance, and wrongs and burdens and crosses we can carry with cheerful faces, through "the God of patience," who hath lent us of his grace.

Not the churches of Asia alone are called upon to exercise patience—the whole church in the wilderness—the bride of our absent Lord, is admonished to a patient waiting for the King even while she is "looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God."

"Yet a little while, and he that will come shall come, and will not tarry." The way seems long and the feet grow weary, but they shall yet rest on the shores of peace. The day star is not yet risen, but the morning shall dawn and we must with patience await its coming. Then shall the shadows flee away before the rising Sun of Righteousness. Then shall the wail of suffering humanity be lost in the triumphant songs of victory. Then shall the thorns and thistles of a sin-cursed earth be exchanged for the box and the myrtle, and the flowers of immortality. Then shall the sullen streams of want and woe be cleansed by the waves of the beautiful river, for God shall be all in all, and earth herself shall be his throne instead of his footstool.

How to Read the Bible.

The following brief but pertinent suggestions offered by Rev. W. S. Caldicott to Good Words, are worthy to be remembered:

1. Disabuse your mind of the idea that the Bible is a volume merely. It is that, but it is also a library, or rather a literature. Acquaint yourself, then, with the history, order and authors of its sixty-six books.

2. Set up in the vacant spaces of your mind a few chronological landmarks, such as the dates of the Flood, the Abrahamic call, the Exodus, the coronation of David, the Babylonish Captivity, and the Advent of Christ, to which all other historical events may be referred for their latitude and longitude, so to speak.

3. Totally disregard, except for purposes of convenience, the ordinary division into chapter and verse. To help you to do this, obtain a paragraph Bible from the London Religious Tract Society, where the ordinary divisions are marked only in the margin, and are not allowed to destroy the cohesion or the sense of God's word.

4. Pay particular attention to the marginal readings. These are an integral part of the authorized version, and are of equal authority with the text, often contain the better meaning, and should always be consulted.

5. Be careful how you lay stress upon the words printed in italic type, as they are merely put in to fill up the sense, and are not in the original Hebrew or Greek. Indeed, you may omit them as often as the grammar will allow you to do so.

6. Note all parentheses and quotations, making separate studies of such as may occur in your reading, taking the passage to pieces for this purpose, as a watchmaker does a watch, and afterwards restoring it.

7. For Lord (in small capitals) understand that "Jehovah" occurs in the original writing.

8. Read in order—finishing one Book before beginning another—no fixed number of verses, but one or more paragraphs at a sitting.

9. Make what use you can of the marginal references. These are often merely verbal similarities, and throw no light on the passage; but sometimes they are good. With a Concordance you may construct your own references a slow and laborious work, but one well worth the doing.

10. Weigh what you read, drawing a distinction in the historical portions between the inspiration of the speaker and that of the writer, if they be two persons. This is especially necessary in the Book of Job.

Even those that are one flesh, if they be not withal one in spirit, have but little joy of their union.

The Cradle to the Grave.

The following, which has been quite extensively copied of late, presents in a very striking manner the degrees of mortality among a given number of individuals from birth until the death of the last one:

A generation on the march from the cradle to the grave is an instructive spectacle, and we have it carefully presented to us in the report by Dr. Farrar, an English physician. Let us trace the physical fortune which any million of us may reasonably expect. The number, to begin with, is made up of 511,745 boys and 488,225 girls, a disproportion which, by and by, will be redressed by the undue mortality of the boys, and will be reversed before the close of the very strange and eventful history. More than a quarter of these children will die before they are five years old,—in exact numbers, 141,387 boys, and 121,895 girls. The two sexes are now nearly on a level. The next five years will be much less fatal. In the succeeding five years—from ten to fifteen—the mortality will be still further reduced. Indeed, for both sexes, this is the most healthful period of life. The death rate, however, is lower for boys than for girls. There will be some advance in deaths in the next five years, and still more in the five that follow; 624,045 will certainly enter on their 20th year. Before the next ten years are at an end, two-thirds of the women will have married. The deaths during that period will be 62,052, and of these no fewer than 27,134 will be caused by consumption. Between thirty-five and forty-five, a still larger death toll will be paid, and little more than half the original band—in exact numbers, 502,-016—will enter upon their 46th year. Each succeeding decade, up to seventy-five, will now become more fatal, and the numbers will shrink terribly. At seventy-five only 101,124 will remain to be struck down, and of these 122,-559 will have perished by the 84th year of the march. The 38,565 that remain will soon lay down their burdens; but 2,153 of them will struggle on to be 95, and 223 to be 100 years old. And finally, in the 103th year of the course the last solitary life will flicker out. Such, then, is the average lot of a million men and women.

The Heavens and the Earth to Come.

The condition of the world will be wonderfully improved. The curse put upon the earth on account of man's sin and for man's sake will be removed. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the briar shall come up the myrtle tree. The deserts shall be clad with waving corn; the wilderness shall blossom as the rose, and every land exult in its abundance. The plowman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes, him that soweth seed; and the mountains shall drop sweet wine, and all the hills shall melt. The fruits of the earth will be excellent and comely, nutritious and wholesome, delicious and refreshing. The air will be pure and salubrious and the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick. The light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun; and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold, as the light of seven days. And all the stars shall shine with sevenfold lustre, as brilliants in the crown of night. O, it will be glorious!—Watch Tower.

"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Rev. ii. 7. Here is the resting place from the storms of life. Their trials are past, and they are now with the redeemed throng, no death will reach that band of white robed victors. For says the Prince of Peace, "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." Rev. ii. 11. Oh, how sweet to live forever, and partake of life's immortal fruit and die no more! Then will be the day of triumph, for, says Jesus, "He that overcometh and keepeth my word unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations." Rev. ii. 26-28. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my father on his throne." Rev. iii. "He that overcometh shall be clothed in white raiment, and I will not blot his name out of the book of life." Rev. iii. 5.

May we gain the victory, overcome the world, share the glory, wear the crown, wave the palm, and reign forever with the lamb.

THE RESTITUTION

PLYMOUTH, IND.,....NOV. 29th, 1876

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞We have been unable to do anything the last week, on account of sickness. Are some better now, and hope to rally without severe illness.

☞Winter is now here, and it is a most excellent time to place the truth before the people. This can be done by the circulation of tracts, books, and newspapers. You can send the RESTITUTION to your friends for a small sum, and thereby help forward the work of truth. Every one of our subscribers can take at least one additional copy. Brethren, now is the time to push the work along. Be sure and send us one new name for 1877.

☞Brethren should be prompt in making their remittances for the paper. The year 1877 will soon be here and it is to be hoped that our friends will give us substantial recognition soon. The coming year will be crowded with grand events. The old world is moving on toward the final conflict, and the careful student of prophecy can but feel interested in the grand closing of Gentile times. The world has need of a change. Human governments are unable to control the mighty problem now vexing the world. Above all the turmoil the voice of God will be heard. Happy is he who abides in the sweet assurance of "trust in God." He alone is the Arbiter of nations. Let every one watch the passing events now so rapidly filling up the remaining pages of human history.

☞Will our correspondents be careful to write plainly, on one side of the paper only, and not crowd lines too closely together. We spent nearly all our spare time last week, in copying articles. One article was written well, spelled well, and well punctuated; but the paper was so crowded, by interlining between the ruled marks, that compositors could not follow the writing without making mistakes, or employing double the amount of time necessary. The manner and style of expression, in some instances, is susceptible of considerable improvement. It does not commend the appearance of truth to set forth its claims in language calculated to deform its loveliness, any more than it does ones personal appearance, to be clothed with smutty, ragged vestments. Harsh, withering, expressions better be left to the political stump-speaker, while the truth better be spoken in love. We are on the eve of the Judgment, and if men are wrong, let us endeavor to show them a more excellent way. One hint more; would it not be better to teach truth in kindness from the positive, affirmative side, than to be continually battling error in bitter negations? In love and respect,

Questions for the Editor of the Restitution.

1. Do you as a church (or the Church of God) support the idea of the Seventh-day Sabbath-keeping?

2 Are not many of your members keeping the Seventh day?

3. Is Elder A. F. Dugger a recognized minister and representative of the Church of God?

4. Do you think the Sabbath of the Garden of Eden is the one kept by the Seventh-day keepers, and is it binding in this dispensation?

I have asked a number of questions on this subject, from the fact that I want the truth, the whole truth, and nothing short of it.

Yours, for the soon-coming kingdom,
VIRGIL F. HUNT.

ATCORN, KAN.

REMARKS ON THE ABOVE.

During the last year we have presented many infallible proofs against the theory of Sabbatarianism. Brother Stephenson wrote at length upon the subject, and showed beyond reasonable doubt that the Seventh-day system was local as to time and place. The argument was unanswerable and conclusive. Sabbatarianism is made of catches and dodges. Not one of its advocates can find any Bible proof for it. Christ nowhere commissioned his disciples to preach that men should keep the Seventh day. The apostles never gave any instructions about where, how or why the Gentiles should keep the Seventh day. Neither do we find any example of its observance outside of Jewish churches. The Lord is master of the Sabbath; he performed most of his miracles upon the Seventh day, and never gave the theory any particular prominence.

So far as Brother Dugger is concerned we would state that he is a little uncertain on that subject. Sometimes he keeps the Seventh day, and sometimes he does not. Since we have known him he has been on both sides of the subject. Some time ago he wrote us that he was about to write a tract against the whole theory, and that he could answer every point, etc. The next we heard of him he was again in the fog. This is his second conversion to the wild speculations about the ten commandments being a "perfect law." The probability is that our friend will come out of the fog one of these days. When he finds out Paul never preached the theory, and that all holy days were nailed to the cross, he will get over the notion. See Col. ii., and Lev. xxiii. "The Law of Faith" excludes boasting in the law of works. See Rom. iii. and iv.

The Tempest.

Who has not seen a tempest? It is grand beyond description. But will a tempest do as much good as a gentle rain? The storm of wind, rain and hail may carry with it majesty and sublimity, but it destroys the tender plants, uproots trees, overthrows buildings and destroys life. The gentle rain moistens the earth, gives life to plants and shrubs, and makes the earth glad with new life.

Some men are young thunder storms. They only move when impelled by passion or selfishness. Then everything bends before them. They thunder loud and long. The whole mental sky is black with clouds of gloom and death. These men ride upon the fierce winds of human ambition, and glory in their desolations. To the spectator they appear majestic, but in their track untold thousands are crying for help and home. Sometimes the tempest is confined to a family, or a church, then again it sweeps the whole horizon of human life. Great floods are judgements, but gentle rains are blessings. Happy is he who can rest under the gentle cloud and feel that God loves peace, and will some day water the earth with gentle showers.

Be Ready.

Faith in the literal fulfillment of the covenants of promise is, unquestionably, a matter of the utmost importance. No substitution of human speculations, in place of these divine revelations, regarding God's plan and purpose in relation to earth and man, can be received as the truth by a devoted follower of the Redeemer. Messiah will claim this earth as his inheritance, and he will personally reign on David's throne on Mount Zion, and Jerusalem. The sure word of prophecy will not fail in regard to Judah and Israel. They will yet be returned to their own land, and be honored by a future age, as they have been degraded and despised during their dispersal. The Gospel is the glad tidings concerning the kingdom of God, on this earth, in the future. Eternal life is only through our Lord Jesus Christ; and it can not be realized except through the resurrection from the dead. And our Lord is coming the second time in power and great glory, and coming soon. It is then our solemn duty to preach the truth on these, and all other topics, to the people of our own generation and times. To do this so as to secure the approbation of God and effect the salvation of our fellow beings, is a matter of fearful responsibility. But there is quite another matter that is too much lost sight of, notwithstanding the oft repeated warnings of Scripture. That matter is—our own personal preparation. Let us not fail to be impressed with those admonitions which teach that the awful condemnations of the judgment of the great day are denounced against character. It is sin and crime that precludes from a part in the kingdom of God. Let us but read over a single catalogue, as Gal. v. 19–21; or Eph. v. 3–6, and see whether it is not possible for us as to be personally in danger. It is very possible for us to have correct views of doctrine, and, at the same time, wrong dispositions of heart, and wrong habits of life and conduct. A true Christian will exercise the utmost care, every day, that he may have a clear account, in the soon-coming day of reckoning, with the Judge of all: and that he may be able to stand before him whose eyes are as a flame of fire, and who searches the hearts, and tries the reins. The Son of Man is coming like a thief in the night. The growing prevalence of unrighteousness, the general self-security and indifference toward the word of God, and things of the future, the destructive errors that are abroad, the darkening and benumbing of moral sensibilities, and the unbelief and outrageous wickedness, unparalleled since the days of Noah and Lot, all testify that the Judge is at the door. It therefore appertains to us all to be particularly earnest in our preparation to meet our Lord, that we may be found of him in peace, without a spot, and blameless. Let each one, who values eternal life, with all earnestness and deep conscientiousness, attend to that all-important concern of personal, individual preparation for that day of impartial retribution. To many it is a matter of scorn and derision to have anything said about the coming of Christ or the day of judgment. Many wearing the name of Christ, and professing love to him, treat the matter lightly, and put the day far away. And many join the scoffers, and ridicule the most important message ever delivered to men. Woe to the careless sinner that neglects salvation and denies the Lord Jesus! Woe to all that deal unrighteously, and fill the world with violence! Woe to the corrupt rulers whose hands are full of bribes, and who are in league with evil doers! But woe, woe, to those who are called upon to open their mouths, and give testimony to the truth, yet keep silence for gain and popular applause!

Let each one then see that he keep his own conscience clear and unblameable. Let us see to it that our robes are washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb. Let our characters be blameless and harmless, and we, ourselves, without rebuke. Praise and glory be to God that he is a righteous Judge. If we have sinned, and confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

But though he is a God that will abundantly pardon, it is our duty to repent of all that is wrong, to strengthen ourselves in faith, and to walk in the ways of righteousness and true holiness. If the Lord should yet for a little time delay his second coming, let us not be drawn away with any error of the wicked so as to fall from our own steadfastness. The golden age will dawn on this dark world at length. The Sun of Righteousness will arise, and the gloomy shades of a long black night flee away forever. The Lord has permitted us to live in a wonderful age. The things of this dispensation are about to pass away amid the wars, pestilences, famines, and dreadful calamities of a time of trouble such as never has been since there was a nation. But whatever of a sorrowful nature may come, the day of redemption cometh also. Mysteries of iniquity, and abominations of desolation, will soon be swept from the earth, and give place to the kingdom of God. The last crown of glory will soon find the head of a worthy wearer. The filling out of the good olive tree is nearly complete. Let us watch and pray always that we may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that are coming on the earth, and to stand before the Son of man. The signs bespeak him near. He is coming soon.

Littell's Living Age for 1877.

This standard periodical, now over thirty-three years old, doubtless affords the most comprehensive, and, all things considered, the cheapest mediums of keeping well informed in the best literature of the day. To this fact, more generally recognized every year, may be attributed its continued and increasing success.

The ablest living writers in science, fiction, history, biography, philosophy, poetry, theology, politics, criticism and art, are represented in its pages. A list of some of them will be found in the prospectus published in another column, affording a sufficient evidence of the quality of the magazine, while in quantity of reading it is unapproached by any other periodical.

It is, in short, the only thorough compilation of an indispensable current literature—indispensable because it embraces the work of the foremost writers upon all topics of living interest; and as such, its importance and convenience to every American reader can hardly be over-estimated. It has always ranked as chief among the eclectics; it has absorbed its competitor, Every Saturday; and in the multitude of quarterlies, monthlies and weeklies, it can hardly be dispensed with by any person or family desiring a satisfactory compendium of whatever is of immediate interest or permanent value in the literary world.

For the new year an extra offer is made to all new subscribers, and reduced clubbing rates with other periodicals are also given, by which a subscriber is, at remarkably small cost, put in possession of the cream of both home and foreign literature. Our readers who are selecting their periodicals for the year would do well to examine the prospectus. There can hardly be any other way of obtaining so cheaply or conveniently so much of the best work of the best minds of the time.

We can send THE RESTITUTION and The Living Age to our subscribers who pay for both in advance for one year at $3 50.

The Iron Bedstead.

Are we to have such an institution in our midst? One would suppose from the way some write, a regular heretic smasher is an imperative necessity; and if the iron bedstead has to come, some of us would like to know its exact dimensions, that we may prepare for the stretching and cutting off process.

Is it necessary that every item of faith presented in the Gospel shall be understood and believed prior to baptism in order to its validity?

We want a definite answer upon this point; because, if the answer is in the affirmative, we want the "items" itemized; and if it is in the negative, it is barely possible the iron bedstead may not be needed.

Is it wisdom to discard, as unchristian, everyone who cannot see just as we do upon every point? If so, why did Paul become all things to all, that he might save some? See 1 Cor. ix. 19–23, the careful reading of which might do somebody good, and lead to the conclusion that a bigot smasher might be useful as well as a heretic smasher.

Age-to-Come Believers.

The readers of the RESTITUTION will remember that some time ago we gave a letter from Bro. J. W. Lawver, of Columbus, Kansas, and appended to it a reply. We sent our reply also to the Advent Christian Times, of Chicago, for publication. Bro. Burr, the editor has done us the kindness to publish our reply, but has followed it with remarks which we give below, that render a reply to his remarks also necessary.

BRO. BURR'S REMARKS.

Bro. Lawver has doubtless had an experience of associating with those of the age-to-come class who were extremists in the views of that people. We are personally acquainted with many who hold the doctrine of probation after Jesus comes, who are as spiritual minded at least as the average of Adventists, and these generally associate with the Adventists, but we are well aware that almost the entire body of organized and unorganized "Brethren of One Faith," commonly called age-to-come believers, do ignore the apostolic experience of the Holy Spirit as belonging to the church of the present days. This we regard as an error, and an awful one, militating against the very life and vitality of the professed church. The doctrine of "restitution," is believed by all Adventists, but faith in a future probation tends to sap out the life of those believing it. The proof of this is seen in the spiritual death that has almost universally come upon those churches making it prominent. The fruit tells what the tree is.—ED.

TO BRO. BURR.

MY DEAR BROTHER:—I am very much obliged to you for the publication of my reply to Bro. Lawver, but your appended remarks render a reply necessary, as you enter against us some serious charges. Now to the end that there may not appear any more difference between us than do really exist, I write.

Question:—To what can you refer in speaking of the "apostolic experience of the Holy Spirit?"

1. Do you refer to their miraculous powers, and claim that Adventists now possess the power to heal the sick, the power to open the eyes of the blind, the power to make the lame to walk, or the power to raise the dead, as did the Apostles? I am persuaded that this is not your reference from the fact that there are none in your ranks who possess these powers as did the Apostles.

2. Can it be that you have reference to the work of the spirit of God in conversion? I am persuaded not, for you ought to know, and doubtless do know, that as a people we do not ignore the work of the Spirit of God in conversion. So confident of, and so firm are we on this work, that without one dissenting voice so far as I have ever heard, we believe that there has never been a conversion to christianity since Christ's ascension, but what has been brought about by God's inspiring Spirit.

If your reference then, as I am persuaded, is not to these, is it not relative to the medium through which this work is accomplished. Now, Bro. Burr, the position we occupy on this point is one that is safe, is one that is warranted by Scripture, and is one I know that you will admit to be true; viz:—that in conversion, the Spirit of God operates upon the heart of the sinner through the word of truth. Now, if there is any egregious error in this position which militates against the vitality of those who believe it, will you please, for our benefit, point it out. If you advance beyond this position, and claim that the Spirit of God operates upon the heart of the unconverted, independent of the inspired word, please give us the cases of the kind which so occurred in the days of the Apostles, and we will believe also. Now, if we are wrong on this point, here is a splendid opportunity to set us right. Will you do this and not ask of us to believe in this in the absence of testimony, or fault us for not believing till the testimony you produce. Again you say: "The doctrine of 'restitution' is believed by all Adventists, but faith in a future probation tends to sap out the life of those believing it." "The proof of this is seen in the Spiritual death that has almost universally come upon those churches making it prominent."

Explanation:—We, as a people, do not teach probation in the Age to come for any one who has lived and died as a probationer in any preceding age, but probation to those who escape the scourge visited upon Gog and his army when the Lord returns. Ezek. xxxviii; xxxix., especially verses 11–12, 21–29, with Zech. xiv. 1–4, 9, 10. When the Lord is king over the whole earth, verse 9, which, as you will admit, has never yet taken place, then will there be escaped of the nations, verse 16. And also probation to succeeding generations. Isa. lxv. 17–25; Isa. 9; Ezek. xlvii. 22–23; Dan. vii. 25.

Now, Bro. Burr, will you analyze, single out and tell us wherein the genius of this doctrine of probation in the Age to come, tends to "sap out the life of those believing it." That the love of many of our brethren has waxed cold, we do not deny. But that such is the case because of any peculiarities in the doctrine of probation in the Age to come, we fail to see, and kindly ask you for the evidence. I can point to localities all over the land where there were once lively congregations of Adventists, Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, and I might add, of all other denominations common to our country, where now there are none. Why have they died out? Certainly not because of the doctrine of probation in the Age to come. Then may not some of the causes which wrought upon these to their death, have laid hold upon some of our brethren? I will remark further that lukewarmness, indifference and backsliding are common to all organizations whether civil, secular, or religious. Such was the case even in many of the congregations in the Apostles' days. Then why bring a serious charge against "Age to come" brethren which with equal propriety belongs to your own household of faith. Are you not picking at our mote to the neglegence of your beams? Seriously, is not this charge without foundation? What say you?

Yours fraternally.
G. M. MYERS.

"Behold I Come as a Thief!"

Not at first with a loud noise of flaming heavens and dissolving elements, but with a secret footstep and with a glory and dashing loveliness seen only by the saints who are waiting His approach. Do I realize suitably, that He may knock with His heavenly summons to "come up higher," any nightfall or midnight of the closing year, of the months, autumnal, wintry, or vernal, of these most critical times? Do we realize it? Are we rejoicing and ready? Truly God's righteousness alone can cover and adorn one for so glorious a destiny. And however important the perplexed and menacing condition of the world's affairs as an index of the nigh intervention of Christ may be, yet it is that intervention itself which will probably set forward, with fatal momentum, the struggles and perils and intense excitements and thronging disasters of the closing hour. These prophetic trials and judgments are post-adventual, if we may so say. Jesus, our Redeemer, comes to call out and bear away the premonished and watching Philadelphian band. It may be in a little temporary lull of public agitations, when the prevailing political prophecy is peace, just at that very moment may the heavenly portal open, and let the King come forth. His loving and elective eye has noted and numbered the watchers, and in a twinkling they are gone. This not of all others, is likely to be the very beginning of the world's anarchy and exasperation, an anarchy which seeks respite in the wretched expedient of the ten-kingdom confederation with the beast. Will that confederation precede the intervention of heaven? Probably not, but just the opposite. It is the Advent then that should fill the heart and mind of the Christian. Looking for Christ is, with its inseparable concomitants, the great attitude. It is this on which the fate of earth turns, the fate of Satan's kingdom on the one hand, and of righteousness dominant through the world on the other. Though an eruption of sin precedes an overflow of wickedness, a revelation of Jesus and his saints will confront and put an end to the suddenly developed and rampant iniquity.

And now, brethren, do those who thus wait for Jesus claim one iota of superiority to others? Far, far from it. On the other hand they cease not day and night to remember and confess their unworthiness. Why then will not ten thousand praying and zealous Christians, who have no faith in adventism, or sympathy with it, be equally fit for the blessed change? For the very reason that they do not believe in a soon coming Messiah. Anticipation and waiting is an element not to be left out of the preparation. Search the Scriptures and see if it is not true. Scorn of such a truth as the quick and literal advent will be a barrier against a part in its blessedness. Waking is a way to the Eastitude, in-dred it is! Think what an unbelief cursed that people to whom Jesus came, and by whom he was rejected! O, Church magnetized with the charm of that false "hypothesis" that denies a speedily returning Redeemer, how will thy confusion burn in the day of thy disrupted dream! Thou hast drank Hot Lethe that puts thy Crucified away to the end of still future ages, while he, ready at the instant, watches to see in what window the ruddy light twinkles brightly to welcome Him here. Aye, here, where He lived and loved, labored, grieved, and died! Soon He will revisit that earth for which He offered up himself. Oh, He is coming! Blessed are they that watch.—Selected.

The Sin of Witchcraft.

As we have shown you that the familiar spirits do not come from the dead, now we will try to prove to you what they are. We can not deny their existence without denying the Bible. Nor should we pronounce it a mystery, that our dead, whose very thoughts have perished, should apparently speak to us in this manner. There is an agency competent to do this. But we will see what the Scripture says on this subject.

1. The Scripture informs us that Satan, once a servant of God, long since revolted. John viii. 44; 1 John iii. 8. Eze. ii. 8.

2. That a large number of angels revolted with him. 2 Peter ii. 4; Jude vi.; Rev xii. 7–9.

3. That they await the day of judgment, when they will be burned. Jude 6, Matt. xxv. 41; Rev xx.; Matt. viii. 29; James ii. 19.

Thus this body of angels have been and now are engaged in the most mighty efforts to involve the whole human race in ruin. 1 Peter v. 8, 9; Job i. 2; Luke xxii. 31; Rom. viii. 38, 39; Eph. vi. 12.

5. That hypocrisy, deception, and fraud, have been their chief instruments of warfare. 2 Cor. ii. 14, 15; Gen. iii. Jno. viii. 44; Rev. xii. 9. xx. 3, 8.

6. The Old Testament plainly shows that the work of familiar spirits is false, ruinous, and deceitful.

7. The New Testament shows who deceives, seduces and ruins mankind. It is these fallen angels, with Satan at their head.

We therefore cannot but say that the "familiar spirits" of the Old Testament, and the "fallen angels" of the New Testament, are the same.

The Bible also teaches that in the latter days some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to doctrines of devils. 1. Tim. iv. 1. And that these familiar spirits are the spirits of devils working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the East, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. Rev. xvi. 14.

Some may ask why Satan is so active. It is because he knows his time is short. Rev. xii. 12.

Then, let us take heed to the exhortation. Be sober, be vigilant, because your adversary, the devil, as a roaring lion walketh about seeking whom he may devour. 1 Peter v. 8.

The Majesty of Bible Precepts.

There is no weakness in them. No one of them is emasculated by the modern prefix, "try." The Bible says, "Cleanse your hands ye sinners, and purify your hearts ye double-minded." "Cease to do evil, learn to do well." "Depart from evil, and do good." And thus through the whole book, from Genesis to Revelation, a moral precept is never prefixed with the enfeebling "try," now so universally common.

Just think of the Bible's saying. Try to depart from evil! Try to cleanse your hands, ye sinners! Try to speak the truth one to another! And instead of "Do not kill," "Do not steal," "Do not commit adultery," suppose we had, do try not to kill, do try not to steal, do try not to commit adultery!

It is time to stop recommending experimenting in morals. None of it is from above. It is all from beneath, a device from the devil to break down the force and majesty of the precepts of the Bible. That glorious book never uses the word "try" in any such connection. It knows nothing of experimental morals. "Try" is never properly used except where a failure may be justifiable. A failure in morals never was, and never can be, justified. Baptist Union.

Pride is the first of seven things named which God hates.

Proud people take every service done them as a debt, not as a favor.

Philistines are sure to gain when Israelites quarrel.

Perseverance in God's service wears the crown, though it does not of itself win it.

Proud and foolish men kindle the fires which wise and good men must labor to extinguish.

No Time to Lose.

No time to lose! When we are young
On airy wings the moments fly;
To all things fancy gives a tongue,
And views them with enchanted eye.

No time to lose! Those days have sped
Like dreams of thrilling ecstacy;
Their scenes of transport long have fled;
Their songs have lost their melody.

No time to lose! The years pass by.
They come to be improved no more;
In vain we wish, in vain we sigh,
We cannot squandered time restore.

No time to lose! The golden hours
Are seeds that fruit immortal bear;
Let others cull time's fading flow'rs
And wreaths of earthly fame prepare.

No time to lose! O what is there!
A meteor's glare—an ebbing wave,
A treasure rich—a gilt sublime,
And yet a passage to the grave.

No time to lose! A fearful thought!
Let hope to me no more be known;
With this let every lesson be fraught—
My time belongs to God alone.

SAM'L FRANKENBERGER, M. D.

Correspondence.

Bro. Reed:—

My heart was made to rejoice in reading, in a late RESTITUTION, the Christian greetings of the brethren in Scotland and our own land. They are means of great help to me to press on my way to that great and glorious meeting, when the saints shall come from the east, and west, north and south, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of God. I was much pleased with the headings of the communications. The baptized believers of the Gospel of the kingdom of God. This sounds to me like the old Jerusalem language, "go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature; he that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved," and when they believed Phillip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized both men and women. Now is not this confession of faith that makes us separate, and distinct, from all the sects in the religious world? If so then let us be consistent with our confession, be we many or few; and seek unity, love, and brotherly kindness among ourselves, and if we do this, the name of God will be honored, and the cause of our blessed Master will be advanced. It is a long time since I had the privilege of meeting with any of the brethren in conference, and have had to stand almost alone in the faith. But I hope, through the abundant mercy of our heavenly Father, to have an entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

THOMAS WRIGHT.

Bro. Upton:—

I received your papers, sent to me at Memphis but missed all the others. I have reached this point, and will remain here sometime: and would be glad if you would send me some papers, and some tracts on the Gospel, Kingdom, Destiny of the wicked, &c., a few of each. I did all I could towards recommending your paper, and distributed those you sent me, and will again; and, as I expect to remain here some time, I hope to get you some subscribers. I have intended to write a short account of my trip from Arkansas across the country on foot, but have not had the spirit to move me yet. I preached the kingdom of God under Jesus, and life from the dead through him. I find that not many men have ever thought of Jesus returning to the earth to live. They have a vague sentimental idea of a millennium, but of it's nature they don't seem to trouble themselves. "If I can only get there, its all I want," they say. I had no opposition. I did not find one man to oppose it, almost every one heard me with apparent amazement, but several have promised me to search the scriptures and see if the things were so. I believe I could accomplish something if I had two years to spend on the road, yet I hope to reap some fruit as I return, as I expect to on the same route as I came.

Your friend and brother in the one hope. A. C. EARL.

PIEDMONT, S. C.

Dear Bro. Reed:—What are you going to do with us? We like the RESTITUTION, we love the brethren, and wouldn't want to be put out of the synagogue. We cherish the promises to Abraham as our hope, we look for their literal fulfillment. We hope to reign on the earth with our Master, when he comes, which we believe is very near. On the doctrines of man's entire mortality, Christ, the life giver, the destruction of the impenitent, and the age to come, we are with you heart and hand. But on one point we are not in accord with many.

We believe not only that the Spirit operates through the written word, but that God pours out His Spirit upon men, and that it acts upon their hearts independently of the word. We believe that the faith, which saves is not an acceptance of a form of doctrine, but a grasping of a living Christ as the object of faith. That it is of the heart, and not of the head.

It is something that can grow and expand, and consequently is not bound by a written formula.

But Bro. Wilson cannot fellowship us, and yet we can fellowship him, and have enjoyed very much the words, and the Spirit too, when we have heard him preach the Word. We have never sought to make an issue on these points, but have cherished the RESTITUTION as the only true advocate of the age to come views,—trusting that in time we should all see eye to eye in all things else.

The position of Bro. Wilcox has met our hearty approval, and we had hoped that the Adventist bodies, who are so few in number and weak in influence, could draw nearer together and not be driven wider apart, and at the same time the individual conscience not be sacrificed, nor the truth compromised.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. SEAMAN.

Hobby Ism.

There is no practice among Christian believers more disastrous to the cause of Christ than the ceaseless promulgation of some pelted theory. In our research after truth, perhaps some new thought flashes upon our mind; we grasp it, look upon it. We turn it over and as we examine, it enlarges. We pet it, and it expands. We fondle it and it grows in magnitude until it becomes the great truth of the age; the corner stone of all true religion; the Alpha and the Omega; the beginning and the end of all things hoped for in the future world. When our new-found theory reaches this exalted position in our own mind, we are then prepared to go forth and proclaim it in the ears of those around us with a zeal that knows no bounds. We stop not. Perhaps we meet with opposition, and this only feeds the flames of fanaticism already burning in our heart. We then urge the point still more (if that is possible) upon the minds of others. "You must accept of this proposition or be damned." If not received, we at once withdraw the hand of Christian fellowship. Still we urge the great thought. Still it is neglected, until, at last, in our mad zeal to have the point accepted, and to become notorious ourselves, as the great founder of the new doctrine, which has been latent for ages, and perhaps never before promulgated by man, or commanded by God; but now revealed by us, the hobby horse is mounted and we ride forth with our petted theory blazing upon our banner. On we go, heedless of all the finer feelings of others; regardless of all the brotherly affection which to us was once so strong and tenderly cherished in our hearts; unmindful of the prosperity and good of the church with which perhaps for years we had walked in peace, prosperity and strong brotherly affection. But now all these must be sacrificed to our petted theory.

On we go, branding all who do not accept of it as having eyes and see not, ears and hear not. Condemning them as dishonest. Denouncing them as heretics, thereby driving them from the church where perhaps for years they had walked, serving God acceptably, with reverence and Godly fear. Stumpling upon them the sin against the Holy Ghost, all because they cannot see and accept our great essential truth.

Still on we go, spurred forward by the dreadful thought that woe is me if I do not preach the Gospel, and this thought is the foundation upon which that rests; and on we march, heedless of the wreck and ruin we leave behind, the many heart aches and the tears that fall. Churches are destroyed. The temple which for many years perhaps was the Bethel for the sorrowing heart, to which the children of God could go and mingle their joys and tell of their sorrows, singing loud praises to the great God, and where, from time to time, the truths of God's word were spoken in words that lifted the sad and sorrowing heart upward, and carrying the desponding mind on over the dark storms of this life, to that better land, where no darkness and silence reigns. The scattered flock left to mourn. The world disgusted, and the devil rejoicing.

This is no fancied picture, drawn by the flighty imaginations of the mind, but the sad and sure results of hobby riding. May God grant that we, as brethren, may never be found thus acting. If, in the providence of God, we have attained to a high degree of knowledge in Divine things, and we wish others to see and understand as we believe and teach, go to them in kindness and brotherly love, and present the truth of God's word in a clear and plain manner. Drop the good seed of the kingdom gently upon the heart and mind, and then and there let it rest at least long enough to germinate, before we again appear to reseed the soil or to reap a harvest. Should the "full corn in the ear" not immediately appear, in a moment or as soon as we desire, do not with one wild sweep of our wand, hurl them to perdition. Perhaps, when they have been educated in Divine things up to the point to which you have reached, they too will grasp the same great thoughts and bring forth to the glory of God, fruits, "some 30, some 60 and some an 100 fold," thereby adding many stars to your crown of rejoicing at the great day of God.

Brethren, if we cannot build up, let us strive not to tear down. Let us heal and not wound, remembering that Christ says, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."

Yours in hope,

L. S. BRONSON.

The Mighty Angel of Rev. x Chap.

Is that angel a celestial being?

I think not; and, if not, is it a government or civil power? The ninth chap. is supposed to describe the Ottoman power, which was commissioned to slay the third part of men. And the time given to do that work was an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year. Josiah Litch computed the time and thought it would expire in July, I think, 1839 or '40. On the day he specified, the Allied fleets destroyed the Turkish fleet and dictated terms to the Sultan, and from that day to the present, the war-making power was taken from the Sultan, and the Christian Allied powers have dictated and controlled the Turkish government.

The x chap. opens with the mighty angel with a little book open in his hands putting one foot on the land and the other on the sea, as I understand, taking possession of the earth and sea.

He speaks with a voice as when a lion roareth. If it is a human government there is no other government but England that speaks with a lion's voice, or that is a lion government. She controls Gibralter, and if she takes and controls the Dardanelles, the Mediterranean is in her possession, and Syria, Palestine and Egypt are in her possession. CHARLES BOARDMAN.

NOTE.—The Turkish fleet was destroyed in the battle of Navarino, Oct. 20, 1827, by the combined fleets of Great Britain, France, and Russia. This greatly promoted the success of the Greeks in their struggle for Independence. In 1832, Mehemet Ali, the Viceroy of Egypt, began a contest with the Sultan, who was repeatedly defeated. Mehemet conquered Syria, and a great part of Asia Minor, and Constantinople itself seemed to be at the disposal of the conquitor should he be permitted to proceed. The Allied Powers interfered to stay the progress of the Viceroy and avert the overthrow of the Ottoman empire. In 1839–40, the Egyptian ruler engaged in war with the Sultan a second time, and was successful; when a new intervention dictated the terms of settlement and peace. By these terms of July 15, 1840, and July 14, 1841, the Viceroy lost considerable power. This interference in 1840, was the subject matter of Josiah Litch's calculations. Here the Allied Powers virtually controlled the destinies of Turkey, and her existence has depended on their support since. S. A. C.

"A distressed Father," writing in the Islington Gazette, gives an illustration of the tactics of Romanism. His daughter, who is now 16 years of age, visited at a house in which two Romanists were lodging. One of these introduced her to a Romish priest, who passed her on to some nuns for instruction. The visits were continued without the knowledge of the parents until one day the young lady left her home, with the pretext, "I am going to meet brother who is coming home from business." Instead of doing so, however, she went straightway to the Romish priest who was waiting to baptize her. The father says: "When I mentioned this lying to Father Smith, and also to the young man who has been seeking to lead my child to Rome, they both justified it." "Father Smith said that there were limits to truth, and that if she had told the truth she might have been prevented from coming to be baptized." It is the old casuistry, "The end justifies the means," but those who have heard the vehement denunciation with which Romanists have sometimes repudiated this as a slander, will be able rightly to estimate the value which is to be attached to such utterances.

The Kingdom.

"I came near unto one of them that stood by, and asked him the truth of all this. So he told me and made me know the interpretation of the things." Dan. vii. 16.

"I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit." Then it was that one stood by, or near, the scene of the casting down of the thrones, that talked with Daniel in the night vision. But it was not any of the teachers of the popular churches that he talked with, for they tell quite a different story. They would have told him that the kingdom and dominion to be given to the saints, was above the stars, or that the church was the kingdom, or that the kingdom was in the heart, or that it was set up on the day of Pentecost, or, finally, that it made no difference, and he better not trouble himself about these things, but just be good love Jesus, and he would go to heaven when he should die. But Daniel did not approach one of these for information. The one that he approached told him the truth. "These great beasts, which are four, are four kings, which shall arise out of the earth. But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom." He told him that the fourth beast was the fourth kingdom; that the ten horns were ten kings that should arise out of the nation. But these had not arisen at the time of Pentecost, and those, who tell that the kingdom of God was set up then, do not teach the truth. Not only were the ten to arise out of the one, but another was to arise after them, and still the kingdom not be due the saints; for he was to subdue three kings,—And the kingdom not yet due,—for he was to speak great words, and wear out the saints of the Most High,—and the kingdom not be due yet,—for the judgment was to set, and they, (the other kings) were to take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it to the end. Then the truth is,—the kingdom is not due the saints, till the other kings that rose out of the fourth kingdom, should take the dominion from the little horn, that arose after them. Daniel, to get the truth, did not approach any one of those who deny the reign of Messiah and the saints over the nations; as they could have told him, that the fires of judgment would sweep the wide earth over, and not leave one of Adam's race for the saints to have dominion over. They might have said that the kingdom under the whole heaven would be given the saints, minus the subjects; that the saints would have the territory, the throne, and all the elements of a kingdom, save the subjects.

This one did tell Daniel that the kingdom and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, should be given to the people of the saints of the Most High. Daniel understood what the kingdom and dominion under the whole heavens meant. Read his words to Nebuchadnezzar.

This one told the truth; and the truth will stand. If it does destroy churches. Let the Spirit of truth hold its peace. Will the Spirit of God, of to-day, witness against the Spirit of God that was in the prophets? I think not;—and as I see that the dominion of the little horn has been well nigh wrested from him by the other horns, I feel sure that, in a few days, the kingdom will be due the saints:—and just as these empires held sovereign rule, so will God's Messiah, and those that are his, hold rule over the twelve tribes of Israel and over the nations. It is too late in the day for compromises with those who deny Messiah his inheritance, or the chosen twelve their promised thrones. The reals mystery Babylon in all the talk about a ghost kingdom in the sky. And it is confusion doubly compounded to talk of the kingdom under the whole heaven, and it void of subjects. All churches, opposed to the reign of Messiah, must fall sooner or later. If I do anything toward bringing them down, I shall thus far be a co-worker with God.

To those who believe the whole Gospel, I would say: let us push the battle onward. No armistice—not even for thirty days. The kingdom is due the saints when the dominion of the little horn has all been wrested from him. All who believe the whole Gospel are united in one body, and the whole Gospel is the only safe basis.

On this I am ready to meet all that love our Lord Jesus and his appearing, and are living according to godliness. Amen. J. C. KIMBEY.

Many a child goes astray, not because there is a want of prayer or virtue at home, but simply because home lacks sunshine. A child needs as much as flowers need sunbeams. Children look little beyond the present moment. If a thing pleases, they are apt to seek it; if it displeases, they are apt to avoid it. If home is the place where faces are sour, and words harsh and fault-finding are ever in the ascendant, they will spend as many hours as possible elsewhere.—Sidney Smith.

He Leads His Own!

He leads his own! enough to know
He marks the path and bids me go;
I'll trust him though the way seems long,
And follow on with cheerful song.

He leads his own! not mine the choice,
Content I listen for his voice;
Gladly I hasten to obey,
And journey where he leads the way.

He leads his own! I would not say
That mine should be a pleasant way;
Only to know he leads me on
To perfect rest, and joy unknown.

He leads his own! though deep the ware,
Mighty the Arm reached forth to save.
My heart shall know no doubt or fear,
For Christ the Lord is very near.

He leads his own! when fade to go,
Thro' pastures green where streamlets flow;
And when the gloomy vale they tread,
And clouds hang darkly overhead.

He leads his own! though oftentime
The sun and joy seem left behind;—
Just as of old he led his flock,
And gave them water from the rock.

The Jews in England.

No people on earth are so interesting a study as the Jews. More or less, they are living witnesses of the truth of the Bible generally. Their social economy has ever been remarkable. If they were a Christian sect—the fact that they love the brethren and allow none of their poor to become paupers, would be adduced to testify to the benevolence of Christianity. That a small denomination, like the Society of Friends, imitate them, does not detract from the noble charities of the Jews. It is not simply the English Jews who fall into pecuniary difficulties and poverty that our Israelitish citizens have to assist, but whole shoals of Jews from all parts of the continent, who continually make for our shores as a haven of rest and prosperity. If Jews are oppressed in the East, from Belgrade to Damascus, it is to the English Israelites that the cry of suffering, and the petitions for help are raised.

The protection of poor Jews, from pauperism, by rich Jews, is not a mere matter of recent philanthropy—but a long established rule among them running back to untraceable distance in the East. More than three hundred years ago George Wishart was a Protestant martyr, and on the day before he was burned at the stake, on his defense, he quoted the testimony of a Jew. "Sailing on the Rhine," said Wishart, "I met a Jew with whom I reasoned on his religion. 'Messiah when he cometh will not abrogate the law at my do.' Said the Jew, 'We support our poor, ye allow your needy to perish; we forbid the worship of images; your churches are full of idols; and ye adore a piece of bread, and say it is your God."

But it is in England that the Jews are especially interesting to us, who have two of them by birth over us,—ruling in Her Majesty's government. Before England was England the Jews were residing here and holding an influential position. With the earliest voyages of the Phœnicians, before the Romans knew of Britain, the Jews visited and settled here. During the occupation of Britain by the Romans, Dr. McGarliouth considers that there is a sufficient proof that the Jews largely occupied such towns as Leicester. In Lincoln and Bury St. Edmunds there are now remains of their buildings erected eight hundred or more years ago.

Bury St. Edmunds for many years appealed to all that was antiquarian in me, for a visit there. The desire was most earnest to see its abbey ruins,—its Norman tower, the finest in Europe—its ancient churches connected with the Baron's war on John, resulting in Runnymede assembly, and the signing of Magna Charta—that I determined to gratify my desire, and see so many structures connected with mediæval history. After looking around the Norman tower that stands alone in its grandeur and dignity—after looking at the massive gate tower of the Old Abbey—and tracing its foundations—we stared with surprise at a building—no, not a building, for it was never built, —but moulded of concrete to serve once as a nunnery—now homes for matrons and masters, and wedded life. The appearance of the habitations is that of a huge gravel mound with doors and windows fixed in it. The concrete walls were once six to eight feet thick and doubtless covered with stones, as ashlar work,—like Reading Abbey, that long ago decayed and vanished away. The concrete, too, has so weathered that it has peeled away in varying thicknesses, leaving no straight lines like walls or square edges at the doors and windows, but the rounding off like a weathered rock, or soft pudding stone. To look at the outside gravel mountain, and then through the windows is a vast change. Outside, a crude heap of dirt and pebbles that looks like falling every minute, no more nobility than the side of a gravel pit; inside, the comforts and conveniences of modern wealth, if not luxury.

The whole scene of habited gravel mound—ancient churches—Norman tower—detached gate tower to the abbey—luxuriant verdure, ancient tombstone, wide town square, seemed bewildering amidst its antique grandeur, —and while contemplating it, it came to my mind that there is surely an ancient synagogue here. I went at once into a bookseller's shop, and spent a few shillings—bought a guide to the town, and allowed myself to be persuaded by a courteous and dignified old gentleman to buy some other articles. I said to him that I had an impression that I had read of an ancient synagogue as still standing somewhere in this town. "Oh, yes," said the bookseller, "in the market place, not far from the Bell hotel, if you know it."

I went to the Bell and looked about, but saw nothing like the object I was seeking. I asked for an old synagogue, and the people stared as if I was one of the old Jews returned. I might as well have asked for a pyramid or a mosque, for they did not understand me. I went up to a young man—looking intelligent and active minded —a cabinet maker and furniture dealer,—standing looking for customers for chairs and tables—and said, "There is an old Jew synagogue somewhere very close here, an ancient building; where about is it?" "Synagogue, sir, synagogue! Let me see. Oh, it was moved off three weeks ago." "Nonsense, young man, I am not asking for a wild beast show, but for a solid building fast in the earth, and has been for a thousand years." The man looked perplexed and shook his head, and said he did not know anything of it. I was irritated. "How old may you be?" "Nineteen, sir." "Born near here?" "In this house." "Yet you are ignorant of a building within a stone's throw of your birthplace that is worth going a hundred miles to see."

I told my companion we must give it up for the present, and go to the other side of the town. Crossing the market place angularly, and turning a corner of a narrow street, and looking at the wall for marks of antiquity, I said, "Here it is!. To a blacksmith at work I said, "Is not your shop part of an old Jews' synagogue?" "Yes, sir, but only a small part. The police office and the public house round the corner are the principal part." Round we went, and into the police office, and seeing five crypts of very antique style walked on. A policeman walked up, seeming alarmed. "What do you want here?" "To see an old synagogue." The word was Greek to him. "It is the police office, sir." "I know it is now, but what was it eight hundred years ago?" "Don't know, sir." "Can I see the room over the crypts?" "No, sir." In came the superintendent "What is the matter?" "These gentlemen say that this office was a synagogue." "Don't know anything about it—it was some thing very ancient; the public house is part of it, and you can go and look at that, but you cannot be admitted here." The public house, next door, was out of the way of tee-totalers, so we looked about, discovered an old window-sill covered with ancient carvings—quaint and suggestive—like a dog or wolf eating at a man's head similar to some pre-christian carvings in Ireland. We satisfied ourselves that it was a real bit of the original building, speculated on its meaning and went on our way, thinking of the appearance that town had, when the Jews were so numerous there as to hold the largest building in the place.

Soon after, studying the town guide, I found that I had made myself singular by calling the building a synagogue. It is known "Moyse's Hall" Moses, rather twisted in form and sound. Perhaps through the Greek term of the name, as in the Septuagint.

What an idea it arouses in a thoughtful mind! All the side of a large market-place in an ancient suffolk town, occupied by a Jewish synagogue —and offices or residences dating back before the conquest! Larger buildings than those now occupied by all the dissenting traders in the town. Larger, too, than is required to hold all the church-worshippers besides! Occupied too, by a peculiar people, who for centuries were unknown in England, during the latter part of the middle age, and on in Tudor and Stuart days. Unknown, too, in many places, to our own days. Five and twenty years ago, a very earnest dissenter,—who always refused to pay church rates,—said at last, he must leave the place, he could not bear with the seizure, much larger —and worse, to be misunderstood. "Do you know," said he, "neither a Jew nor a Quaker ever resided in this town, and half the inhabitants have not an idea what sorts of animals they are. No wonder they think me rabid, who will not bow to Baal or pay his priests."

The very early notice of Jews being in Britain and Ireland is somewhat remarkable. There is a tradition among Irish antiquaries that a certain ship's crew of Israelitish emigrants of the tribe of Dan, fleeing from their native country in Tiglath-Pileser's time, followed in the path of Phœnician vessels, and driven from point to point along our western coast, settled, some of them on land between Severn and Wye, and others reached Ireland, and settled there, about 714 B. C. Long afterwards, when Jerusalem was destroyed, and the desolation of the country was most complete, another colony of fugitives from Judea, bringing many relics from the ruined Temple with them, were stranded in their ship near Carrick-Fergus rock about 570 B. C. These second emigrants found the neighboring country already occupied by an independent tribe, including their brethren of the tribe of Dan, with a worship of their own, who was solemnly ordained to power on a Druidical stone, set apart for the purpose, and with Druidical ceremonies; but whom they persuaded to accept the Lia-Fail or Stone of Destiny, said to be Jacob's pillow, which they brought with them in their ship, that sanctified all who were installed to power or authority upon it. This marvellous stone was carried to Scotland by Fergus the 1st, when he emigrated there from Wotey. Fergus the 2d. removed it to Scone. In 1296 our Edward 1st. removed it from Scone to Westminister. Ever since our kings and queens have been crowned and consecrated upon it. Must we believe?

Cinniodh Scuit aser sinsine
Mair breag nin Innsithe?
Far nis faig' ear on Lia-Fail

or, "the family of the free Scotts shall flourish, if the prediction prove not false, wherever the fatal stone is found, and shall take (possession) by the rights of heaven" (Jure divino).

This stone—the Lia Fail certifies to the truth of the old traditions as to the emigration of the Jews to Britain and Ireland near three thousand years ago. That they were of the tribe of Dan is manifested by the Irish term for them Tuatha de Danan, the Divine tribe of Dan,—or the gods of the tribe of Dan. There seems to have been a spear or scepter of equally magical influence, commanding reverence and awe,—with the Stone of Destiny, and of the same origin somewhat. This spear or scepter has not had the same continued honors as the Lia-Fail. It went early into Ossian's hands. He boasts, "I took the spear of Temor" B. vi. Again:—"Father of heroes, Tren mor, dweller of eddying winds! I give thy spear to Ossian; let thine eye rejoice!" B. viii.

Now the Jews were persecuted, and at last wholly expelled from England, —how they returned,—and soon became influential citizens, are subjects for future chapters.—Bible Examiner.

Faith—Its Importance and Grand Achievements.

Without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. Heb. xi. 6.

Faith, or belief, is the assent of the mind to a doctrine or statement made by another. If we have implicit confidence in the person addressing us our faith will be true or false in an equal ratio to the truth or falsehood of the declaration. This being true, our faith should not have for its foundations the statements of fallible mortal man, but the word of God, which is truth. John xvii. 17. There is "one faith" and only one—the faith of the Gospel. Eph. iv. 5. Phil. i. 27. We are commanded to earnestly contend for the faith. Jude v. 3 Not a faith, or any faith, but "the faith," which is a Gospel faith. Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. Rom. x. 17. Faith is the stream of which God's word is the fountain; it is a link in the golden chain which unites man to his Maker. Take away the "one faith," and you effectually blot out the "one hope," for hope is the child of faith. Let us briefly contemplate faith in its importance in shaping our actions in time, and our destiny in eternity.

Among the many commands of Scripture for our discipline through life, there looms up in grandeur and beauty, among the rest, the command, "Have faith in God." Without we heed this command of Jesus, have faith in God, or belief in his existence, it is impossible to please him. No difference what our position in society may be, whether exalted to a throne, or abased in the dust, if we have not faith in God, our life will be a signal failure. Though we should ascend the ladder of fame to the topmost round, or be greeted with the glory of earth, or possess the wealth of the Indies, and be destitute of faith in God, we would be poor, and naked, and blind. This faith is a living faith; for we read, "The just shall live by faith." Believing in the existence of God, and his truth is not sufficient to secure final salvation. Devils who believe and tremble are devils still. Faith without works is dead. Jas. ii. 17-20. We should practice our principles by diligently plying the oars of both faith and works as we pass over the turbulent waters of the sea of life. If we would manifest our love to Jesus, by keeping his commandments, we must "have faith in God." Again, the importance of the "One Faith," which is a precious faith, is evinced in the declaration that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "And this is the will of him that sent me; that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." John vi. 40.

"If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater; for this is the witness of God which he hath testified of his son. He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself; he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John v. 9-12.

"And he said to them: Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth (the thing preached,—the Gospel) and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. Mark xvi. 16.

Eternal life is suspended upon faith and obedience as upon a pivot. It is through the "obedience of faith" that we obtain eternal life in the world to come. Faith is necessary to the forgiveness of sins. "To him give all the prophets witness, that, through his name, whosoever believeth in him shall receive the remission of sins." Acts x. 43. Faith is necessary as a preservation in time to come. "Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." Holding faith and a good conscience we can war a good warfare. The faith we should hold, and earnestly contend for, is a faith that worketh by love.

It is a well-defined faith—the faith of the Gospel. No other faith can be substituted in its stead without incurring God's displeasure and our destruction. Heb. xi, 5. Paul was not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first and also to the Greek. If the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation, belief in fables is not. 1 Tim. iv, 4-7. Neither should we have the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons. A perverted Gospel will not only bring the curse of God upon the defenceless head of its proclaimer, but it will also produce a perverted faith in them that hear, and beget too much confidence in man. Error cannot sanctify; it is through the truth we are sanctified and made free. How important then that we examine ourselves, whether be in the faith. 2 Cor. xiii, 5. In the faith we have boldness and access to the Father. Believing in God, we rejoice. "That the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ; whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoy with joy unspeakable, and full of glory." 1 Pet. i, 7-8. "Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost." Rom. xv, 13. Faith is absolutely necessary in prayer: "All things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." But we must ask according to God's will. Faith is also necessary in order to overcome the world: "and this is the victory that overcometh the world; even our faith." Living faith enables us to surmount all difficulties, and to march triumphantly to victory—even victory over the last enemy—death. We have but to read the eleventh chapter of Hebrews to gain an idea of the grand achievements of faith. These ancient worthies "through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens; women received their dead raised to life again; and others were tortured not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection. And others had trials of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonments. They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute afflicted, tormented; of whom the world was not worth." Heb. xi, 33-38.

These moral heroes were faithful unto death—"they all died in faith, and a crown of life awaits them at the appearing and kingdom of Jesus." Rev. ii, 10. 2 Tim. iv, 8. With such illustrious examples before us, let us strive to emulate them in our "work of faith, and labor of love, and patience of hope," "looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith." Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might—and above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked—put on the whole armor of God. Eph. vi, 10-17. "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called." 1 Tim. vi, 12, 13. That ye may receive the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls. Let us then walk by faith; even in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham. Then should it be our Father's will that we must go under the power of death, ere his son shall descend from heaven, to raise the dead and change the living to a state of immortality—may we like Paul exclaim—"I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. iv, 6-8.

AUSTIN CURTIS.

The Deluge Tablet.

The publication in this country of a book by Mr. George Smith on recent discoveries in Assyria has given new interest to the marvelous story of his discovery and translation of the Chaldean inscriptions, so confirmatory of the Bible account of the flood. The story is well worth telling anew, with such additions as the more recent researches of Mr. Smith enable us to give.

The site of ancient Nineveh is covered with immense mounds, the largest and most interesting of which is called by the Arabs Kuyunjik. It covers nearly one hundred acres, and varies in height from seventy to ninety feet. This mound attracted the attention of Mr. Layard, and, if we mistake not, he was the first of the excavators. From it he dug out those colossal winged bulls and eagle-headed monsters which fairly appall the visitors to the British museum. This mound proved to be a vast platform which bore up many palaces of gigantic proportions. The most beautiful of these was that of Ashur banipal. In the course of Layard's excavations he reached this palace. He found in it a series of rooms which he called "chambers of record." They were small apartments, filled with clay tablets, from one to nine inches in length, covered with fine writing. These tablets were sent to England and deposited in the British museum. This was seventeen years ago. Among the learned men who devoted themselves to the mastery of these unknown writings was Mr. George Smith, pronounced by Sir Henry Rawlinson to be the greatest Assyrian scholar living. Many tablets were deciphered by him which were of great importance as having a direct bearing upon Bible history. In 1872 Mr. Smith came across a fragment which, to his amazement, belonged to a Chaldean account of the deluge. His eager search now was for the other portion. He was in part successful. Missing pieces were found to such an extent that the scholar was ennabled to make out quite a connected narrative of the deluge, as recorded by the writer in stone.

The discovery and the translation formed the subject of a lecture by Mr. Smith before one of the learned societies of London. The interest awakened was intense. The proprietors of the Daily Telegraph, London, offered to advance $5000 to secure fresh researches at Nineveh. An expedition was equipped with Mr. Smith at its head. Many important discoveries were made, but the most interesting of all were of portions of the multilated deluge narrative. The story, as now translated, is almost entire.

As to the age of the record, this can be said: The tablets themselves belong to the time of Ashur-banipal, who lived about 660 B. C. But the tablet-record is only a copy. The original text, as shown by the tablets, belonged to the city of Erech, which is mentioned in Gen. x, 10. The date thus given to the Chaldean record is 2000 B. C. The narrative as translated by Mr. Smith is, perhaps, familiar to all scholars. For the benefit of the less learned readers we give it in an abbreviated form. It begins with a description of the building of a great ship in obedience to the command of the Deity.

The succeeding events are thus stated by Sisithrus (Noah): "All that I possessed of the seed of life I gathered together; the whole I made to enter my ship; all my servants, male and female, the tame animals of the fields, and the wild animals of the plains, and the young men of the army. And Samas (a deity) caused a great flood, and he spake, speaking in the darkness of the night: 'I will cause it to rain from the heavens abundantly; enter within the ship and close the door.' * * * I entered into the ship and shut its door. * * * The fury of the tempest arose in the morning. * * * Destruction marched over the mountains and the plains. * * * The flood of Bin touched the heavens; * * * the brilliant earth was changed to a desert * * * the waters destroyed all life from the earth. * * * I was borne over the sea. Those who had done wickedness, all the human race who had turned to sin, the bodies of these floated like reeds. * * * The ship was borne to the country of Nigir, and the mountain of Nigir, and the mountain of Nigir arrested it. * * * Upon the seventh day I sent forth a dove. And the dove flew away, and sought a place of rest; but it found none, and returned. I let go a swallow, and it flew away. It reached for a place of rest, and found none and returned. I let loose a raven. The raven flew away, and it saw the dead bodies on the water, and it ate them; and it wandered a great way off, and it returned not. I let go animals to the four winds; I poured out a libation; I built an altar on the summit of the mountain."

The general parallel between this record and the Scriptural account is remarkable. What can be said of it? What can men who have laughed themselves hoarse at the Bible account of the deluge say of this new correlative testimony to the actual historical character of the event, and to the truthfulness of the Scriptural narrative of it? Watchman and Reflector.

From Bro. Hardy.

BRO. REED:—While reading a secular paper, my eye fell upon the close. It is not without fault; yet you think it contains enough of the right sentiment to warrant an insertion in our paper, I should be pleased to see it appear. I was attracted to it the more when I noticed the name of Gerald Massey. Doubtless you recall that poem of his, beginning,—

"'Tis coming up the steep of Time,

Of late I am pleased to note less errors in our paper than formerly. Please have the kindness to send me No. 45, as it failed to make its appearance, and I am sending every number to Bro. John A. Polisz, Center View, Charlotte Co., Virginia. I am sincerely hoping that our brethren, everywhere, who are in easy circumstances, will give the RESTITUTION the kind of support it now so much needs. Without it, many of us would feel that a friend, indeed, had died.

May the Father give you grace to bear up under the great burden of your labors, is my wish.

"JERUSALEM THE GOLDEN."

Jerusalem the golden!
I languish for one gleam
Of all the glory hoarded
In distance and in dream!
My thoughts, like palms in exile,
Climb up to look and pray
For a glimpse of that dear country
That lies so far away.

Jerusalem the golden!
Methinks each flower that blows,
And every bird a singing
Some secret of them knows.
I know not what the flowers
Can feel, or singers see,
But all these summer raptures
Are prophecies of thee.

Jerusalem the golden!
When sun sets in the West,
It seems thy gate of glory,
Thou City of the Blest!
And midnight's starry torches,
Through intermediate gloom,
Are waving with their welcome
To thy eternal home.

Jerusalem the golden!
Where lightly they sing,
O'er pain and sorrows olden
Forever triumphing!
Lowly may be thy portal,
And dark may be the door,
The mansion is immortal—
God's palace for his poor.

Jerusalem the golden!
There all our birds that flew,
Our flowers but half unfolded,
Our pearls that turn to dew!
And all the glad life music,
Now heard no longer here,
Shall come again to greet us
As we are drawing near.

Jerusalem the golden!
I toil on day by day;
Heartsore each night with longing
I stretch my hands and pray,
That, 'mid thy leaves of healing
My soul may find her nest,
Where the wicked cease from troubling—
The weary are at rest.
—Gerald Massey.

Idleness Not Happiness.

The most common error of men and women is that of looking for happiness somewhere outside of useful work. It has never yet been found when thus sought, and never will be while the world stands, and the sooner the truth is learned, the better for every one. If you doubt the proposition, go around among your friends and acquaintances and select those who have the most enjoyment through life. Are they idlers and pleasure seekers, or earnest workers? We know what your answer will be. Of the miserable human beings it has been our lot to know, they were the most wretched who had retired from useful employment in order to enjoy themselves.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION declares the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began. It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God upon the earth, with Jesus Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the events to spring out of the judgment, the restoration of Israel, the literal resurrection of the dead, the personal reign of Christ on the earth, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

A Review.

Review of Mr. Hughes' Lecture on the Intermediate State of the Dead, Delivered in Presbyterian Hall, Nevada, Mo., Oct. 3, 1876.

"It is believed by some that man is not conscious between death and the resurrection. I do not believe that."

"I will divide my theme thus: 1st. Shall we know each other? 2d. The spirit. 3d. Hades. In answer to the 1st division, I affirm God has implanted such desire in every individual to know each other in the other world, therefore it must be so, as it is his will. And in the Scripture, Luke xvi. 19, we read 'A certain rich man addressing Abraham after he was dead and buried.' It is said, 'this is a parable,' but I say it is not a parable, for Jesus always professes by saying it is a parable."

Mr. H. "raised the question, what is death? A separation. To us shall the body return to the earth as it was, and the spirit return to God who gave it."

Has Mr. Hughes purposely overlooked the testimony of Matt. and Mark? "All these things spoke Jesus unto the multitude in parables; and without a parable spoke he not unto them." See Matt. xiii. 13. The reason assigned read from 10 to 18; especially 34; compare with Mark iv. 11-12. Who was Jesus addressing in Luke xvi. 14. "The Pharisees heard all these things and they derided him." We have two witnesses testifying it is a parable, and how insignificant the assertion of Mr. Hughes must appear to every Bible reader. He may deceive others though.

Hence the same conclusion is that "the case of the rich man and Lazarus spoken by Jesus," is a parable to those "covetous" Pharisees, and for the reason Jesus assigns privately to his disciples. And it being a parable, it is not a "fact," as Mr. H. states it, in plain contradiction of Matthew and Mark's testimony, as above referred to.

I have proven by indubitable testimony that it can be made, and can never logically be brought forth to prove that dead and buried men converse in the grave. It is not taught anywhere in the Scriptures, but we do find that "the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything," and that perfectly harmonizes with all inspiration, Mr. H's assertion to the contrary notwithstanding. Hughes defines "death a separation." But Webster's and our own observation is that it is "that state * * in which there is total and permanent cessation of all the vital functions," and the word of God harmonizes with that definition of the death of man and animals.

Mr. Hughes defines "the spirit in the body, the inner man," and reads 2 Cor. v: 9. Phil. i. 21-25. "What was Paul's desire? It was this, that his inner man might be relieved from the clog of clay of the outer man, and, as a disembodied spirit, depart and be with Christ, and with all the others gone before him.

But Paul says, "to put off the old man (nature), and to put on the new man, which, after God, is created in * * and though the outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." Now what is Paul's "inner man," "he delights to the law of God after? Rom. vii. 22. "I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity. * * So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God, but with the flesh the law of sin." And he comes to other texts to be "the works of the flesh," and the other man "the fruit of the Spirit." See Gal. v. 19-24. And these two men are possessed by Paul, hence he cannot "logically" be either his inner or outer man. But he patiently and prayerfully watches the conflict, for if the inner man puts off the outer, he will exclaim, "I have kept the faith," and if the outer is victorious, "I am a castaway."

Spirit. Mr Hughes declares, is "the inner man of Paul," yet Paul never said so. Webster says: 1st. First, principle; wind, or in motion, breath." Solomon testifies that "man goeth to his long home * * the dust shall return to the earth as it was, and the spirit (breath) shall return unto God who gave it." Ecc. xii. 5-7. What is "the dust," in the 7th verse? It is the "man" of the 5th. Compare with Gen. ii. 7. "God formed man of the dust of the ground." See Gen. iii. 19. "till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." No separation" in that sentence—but one limited at; yet what is alluded to by Solomon to this, "and the spirit shall return to God who gave it"? Let us analyze that; first, the spirit is a gift from God; second, man receives that spirit from God for his nostrils,—see Gen. ii. 7,—and God is the one that gives it. And this gift is a free gift to all of God's creatures—see Gen. vii. 15, 21, 22; yet at the death of those creatures the spirit returns unto God, who gave it. Hence the scriptures makes no discrimination of this spirit of God, whether in a righteous or wicked, good or evil, it, the spirit, belongs an universal gift.

Hence all the deaths spoken of in the Scriptures speak of man giving up the ghost (spirit or breath). See Abraham, Jacob, Stephen, Ananias and Sapphira and others.

Mr. Hughes defines Hades (Hebrew) Sheol (Greek) grave, as having two apartments, one very hot, the other, "Abraham's bosom." I do not doubt he believes it, yet is it true? "The Oracles" no where say so. Abraham was buried by his sons, Isaac and Ishmael,—in the cave of Machpelah—before Moses." "David slept with his father (not in A.'s bosom), and was buried in the city of David," Jesus was buried "in a sepulchre that was hewn in stone, wherein never man before was laid." And Job's terrible language, "Why died I not * * for now should I have lain still and been quiet, I should have slept then had I been at rest, with kings and counsellors of the earth." "Samuel was buried in his house at Ramah" So that the Hebrew (Sheol) and the Greek (Hades) mean and should be translated the grave.

I find there is no possible chance to harmonize the assertions of man with "the Oracles" of Jehovah, hence I shall bring my review to a close. In admonishing the young man having "zeal without knowledge," for him to search the Scriptures, and in so doing, he will find his reviewer correct in all the quotations used against his assertions. Then if he has any desire to benefit his fellow man, preach as "the Oracles" speak; set forth "sound words," and by so doing, "save himself" and some of his hearers.

But so long as he teaches the people the fable "that God has given life spirit to man, and yet the gift is the real man instead of the man it is given to, and that God purposes to punish "the gift" for the things that come, the creature "of dust" and "of the earth," does, is contrary to common sense, "logic," and "the word of God, the living oracles."

I do not say it is not popular teaching from the pulpit of the 19th century, yet I believe I have faithfully proven by the Scriptures that God has never threatened "the gift of God" to man, or to punish that gift for any transgression man may commit whatever, but invariably punishes man, the creature he made the gift to, and never will unless God changes, and that is not believed by

THE SURPRISE.

Not feeling well on Tuesday evening, October 31, I retired early. In the morning some dozen of the tinkling of the bell and prompted me some relief to wake and look my accustomed seat at the table with my back to the usual entrance to the dining room, and with a bouquet was sipping from my cup, awaiting the coming of the family. Soon husband came and took his seat at the end of the table at my left. As we were now in momentary expectation of the family coming in, the sound of some footsteps that stood us all, my affection, but supposing it a friend of Willie's, did not look around. Just then there was a lull, which caused me to look up and exclaim, "Why?" Instantly I turned my head to the left, and there, almost between me, stood Brother Chaplin, with beaming eyes and laughing face, the first intimation we had of his being within seven hundred miles of us. "O! O! O!" was all I could utter, while I sprang to my feet and clasped his hand, only to drop it the next moment and embrace his wife, whom the next glance had revealed, heightening if possible our surprise, as we had not dreamed of seeing her. But the climax was not reached until after we were seated at the table, in answer to my query how they could get in this morning, and put their things off and I not hear them. Annie told her story: "Oh," said the little elf, "they came last night, and I sat down at supper, and we talked in suppressed tones, and Brother Chaplin drew his boots before going up stairs and told me not to tell you that his wife had come; and I told him I would not tell you either of them were here."

Thus the trap was set and in the morning sprang to artfully upon her game.

THE SERMONS.

Would I could give them as they fell warm from the living lips. As of old, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached to them, so it was with our brother, and the occasion suggested Mr. Paul.

On the first Lord's Day he dwelt upon the Passover and its successor, the Lord's Supper, as memorial institutions of the two greatest events of Revelation, viz: The deliverance of God's ancient people from their cruel Egyptian bondage, and the sufferings, death, resurrection and coming again of our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd and Bishop of our souls. This discourse made us glad that for over thirty years past how we had been honored in the observance of these parting words of our Lord—"This do in remembrance of me."

The next Lord's Day, on the same occasion, our brother preached to us, ready to depart on the morrow. In a running commentary on John vi., he traced the parallel between the typical manna and the true Bread from heaven, of which if a man eat he shall live forever. In this it was clear that the Lord's Supper is something more than a mere remembrancer; it is a setter forth of that vital union between Christ and his church, as shown by these words: "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father: so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me." This living union to Christ was shown to be wrought by the Holy Spirit, as it is written, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." Thus is implanted in the believer "a well of water springing up into everlasting life." No marvel that the observance of the supper is life-giving, when it is the very experience of the believer's life. The view was both melting and inspiring, and caused us to extoll the God of heaven, and to most fervently pray that our brother may be helped in the future as he has been for the last three-and-five years to preach the word.

By this we grow and thrive, and arrive at the perfect stature in Christ Jesus. It is here we find the green pastures and the still waters. It is here the soul is restored and enabled to walk in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake. It is here we learn as we come down to the dark valley and the shadow of death, "Thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." It is here that a table is spread before us in the presence of our enemies, our head is anointed with oil and our cup runneth over. It is here we learn that goodness and mercy shall follow us all the days of our lives, and we will dwell in the house of the Lord forever. O hallelujah to the name of God the Lord!

How we prayed here for once again, and probably for the last time, we have been led from this wondrous table scene by the Lord's servant of another, and had the pleasure of greeting them to the Lord.

This visit, with the handiwork of our beloved sister, in the beautiful Grecian ornament she left suspended over the center table form a most satisfactory crowning to our one hundred Centennial visitors.

Here's a basket of rare floral splendor,
Sent by a friend, full of love and care,
Filled with sweet fragrance,
Gathered from the lowly flower,
God's meadows, vine and meadow,
All creation's jewelry:
Earth's treasured musical notes,
Treasures of the ocean sea,
Heaven's glory,
What is that by the end of me?

Soon where earthly beauty blends not,
No sorrow of human kind;
Safe—safe on the holy,
We shall be within thy walls,
There beside heaven's fair river,
Trees, beneath life's wonder tree,
There, with sweet immortal treasure,
Ever with the Lamb to be.
Home of glory,
That shall be by the end of me?

Yours, in the hope of meeting there,

The Threshold.

The threshold is the open road-way into the palaces of home and the embrace of love. It is the recognized line between the stranger and the acquaintance, between the weary journey and the asylum of rest. It is the holy boundary which, when wandering afar, the heart jumps again to cross, and crossing greet those from whom it has been sundered. On its golden border, eager, jubilant feet are treading, and there waits the clasp of warm hands and the kiss of deep affection. What thrilling recollections throng around the oft-frequented spot! What sad and tearful partings have there been enacted! How souls have rung with anguish as those stayed and those went on their way! We have all seen our beloved stand within the open door and pass through blinding tears at the receding form after which all the wealth of human love went out to intense yearning. We have seen the treasure of our homes borne across the sacred line, lying still and low, answering no sobbing voice, responding to no pressure of the lips. We have seen the young bride step over the threshold, leaning upon the arm of her chosen one, going forth alone with him to the unknown future, and bidding a tearful farewell to every dear scene of the past. We have seen a bounding form leap from the highway to the old, well remembered resting place, and with foot upraised and hand on the latch wait for the bursting flood of congratulation sure to surge out of the open door. Place of partings and greetings, place of welcomes and farewells, place of chastings and readings, place of holiest memories! But no earthly threshold abides permanently for us. We shall all one day cross it never more to return.

Nevertheless there is a threshold that eternally endures. This side are the beckoning angels; swinging over it are the gates of pearl; all about are the firm foundation stones of beauty; all above it the crystal jasper wall; while within and beyond, "where foot of mortal never hath been, wrapt in the radiance of a sinless home," is the palace of the King, and the unchanged life throne and the countless troops of seraphim, the smile of God, and the splendors of eternity. And, gathered from countless graves, there will one day come to cross that golden threshold such a goodly company of saints, such a shining throng, singing such sound-shouting sacred songs, and wrapped in such joy! Friends whom the cruel grave and human recluses hand hath long sundered; warriors of the holy cross, from a weary strife and a hard won victory; little feet that lost their way on the tangled plain of earth; kindred of sweet ways and saintly memories; loves of the elect of heaven;—all these will break the grim silence of the tomb, and at the Master's signal spring forth in tireless splendor to meet on, and pass over, that new Jerusalem threshold, for one long meeting within; so long in years and cycles that no chronicle can count or reckon up the fathomed ages of eternal bliss.

Toward that threshold human pilgrim feet are pressing. Open bright portal immeasurable hanging eyes are fixed. The "lamps of myrrh light" are lighted here and forever. The family gate is open and never shut. There is music and dance for all who attend to the bread of the home. No cherubim with beaming sword of fire stand heavenly to beckon them away. The summons to depart is heard not. Celestial recognitions sound as glad welcome. And again the cry, "Come and welcome!"

Let us depart. What matters it if the pains of separation rend us here? What matter though the dear home threshold disappear, and with it all who walk with us hand-enclosed smiles or tears crossed treasured border? We are born to possess the better. The far-reaching, with embracing promise, "All is yours," (1 Cor. iii. 21.) is such a legacy as only the name of Christ hath in the precious Savior. Faith cries, "Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem." Psa. cxxx. 2. The heart leaps toward its shining doors. Every limb and every joint stretches for its rest. The earth groans, and the winds sigh for eternal relaxations. It is coming—almost come. O blessèd angel soul, press onward toward the heavenly threshold. A few more steps it may be, and that will cross it. Thing of that glad moment! Think of the bright beyond!—D. T. Taylor, in Bible Banner.

Childhood and Character.

The germs of character are most rapidly developed in childhood and youth, especially under maternal care and influence. If this influence be of the right kind, the result will be favorable. If not then the reverse. A serious mistake in domestic training at this time of life is apt to be fatal, or at least so far that the mischief done can never be fully repaired, or the effect counteracted. It may be modified, but it can never be cured. We have somewhere met with the remark that what a child is at seven years of age, such it is likely to be throughout the whole course of its life. So far has the work of development progressed at this early period, so fixed the current of thought as indicated by the power of habit, that it may be layed down as a general fact, that what a child is at the age referred to, such it will continue to be at a more advanced period of life. It may perhaps be wiser or foolisher, better or worse; but, as to all the essential elements of character, it will be a substantially the same. Thus the child of seven will be the man of forty. Hence the responsibility of parents and others who exert a home or a general influence.

For good, or for evil, for weal or for woe, will such an influence must certainly be.

Parents and others having charge of children should not forget that the very process by which they form the character of the child reacts upon themselves in the development and strengthening of their own principles and habits. Hence negligence and indifference are fixing their impress upon the soul; and this perhaps is the reward—perchance the retribution.

Here, as everywhere throughout the government of God, the law of the retribution works with infallible certainty. It is simply sowing and reaping, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap.

From the cradle to the grave this great work of development is going on with a wonderful fixedness of intensity as true as the needle to the pole. Everybody influences everybody else. Every thought, feeling, word, act, aye, and every neglect, is leaving its indelible impress somewhere. All the institutions of society, all the business of life—its trials, its struggles, its pleasures, its occupations—all point in the same uniform direction. That mysterious transcript of a human life which we call character, is every where taking form and shape, and crystallizing to the figure of a ruined, or perfect manhood.

Nothing but character, in this world, is permanent. All else is passing away. But character, like charity is its brightest jewel, is eternal. It is the man himself, and when rightly formed, the very soul of his being renewed in the image of God. In one important sense, at least, it is heaven or hell. It is the source and seat, and center of his happiness or misery, to this world and in the next.

And why? Because it is the man himself. The future saw the seed in the morning, withheld not thy hand in the evening; for thou canst not tell whether shall prosper this or that, and if it is simply a question of sowing and reaping let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not.—The Append.

The Sin of Witchcraft.

"And when they shall say unto you, seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead?

To this I say to the following: If they speak not according to the word it is because there is no light in them. Isa. viii. 19, 20

In modern times, the doctrine of Witchcraft is supported thus:

1. That the soul of man is immortal.

2. That death is the gate to endless joy.

3. That at death they enter upon their reward or punishment.

4. That at death they are endowed with superior intelligence.

5. That they are ministering spirits to the living, having their abode in heaven above earth as they wish.

The modern doctrine is an improvement upon the theology of the days of Saul. But the Bible sweeps away this cunningly devised fable of ancient days, and with it the doctrine that dead men can converse with the living.

Thus the Holy Volume teaches us:

1. That God made man out of the dust of the ground and gave him life with his own breath, Gen. ii. 7.

2. That he warned him that for transgression he should be deprived of life, and turned again unto dust.

3. That man is yet under the sentence of death, and is mortal and corruptible.

4. That those who seek for immortality shall receive it at the resurrection.

5. Death came into the world by sin; it is the last enemy; and that Satan has the power of it; and they will be destroyed together. (2) Gen. ii. 3, (3) Heb. ix. 27; Job iv. 17; Rom. i. 23, (4) Rom. v. 12; 1 Cor. xv. 51-55; 1 Tim. vi. 15, 16. Also

"That in death there is no remembrance of God."

"That in that day their thoughts perish."

"That Sheol or Hades is a place where there is no work nor device nor knowledge."

"That the righteous are not to be with Christ till he comes."

"That the dead are all asleep, and the keys of death and hades are not in the hands of familiar spirits but of our Lord Jesus Christ."

These facts are certainly sufficient to show that the familiar spirits do not come from the dead, and they do not, and cannot, bring up any one from the dead.

WALDO MARSH.

Hints.

Don't complain of the selfishness of the world. Deserve friends and you will have them. The world is teeming with kind hearted people, and you have only to carry a kind sympathetic heart in your own bosom to call out goodness and friendliness from others. It is a mistake to expect to receive from others welcome, hospitality, words of cheer and help over rugged and difficult passes in life, in return for cold selfishness, which cares for nothing in the world but self. Cultivate consideration for the feelings of other people if you would never have your own injured. Those who complain most of ill-usage are the ones who abuse themselves and others the oftenest.

Smiles of God.

We love to share the smiles of our friends. How they cheer and brighten our pathway! They infuse indeed into our hearts a wondrous joy, and seem to inspire us with new life. How much of real sunshine and heartfelt joy do the smiles of those we love beget within us! They cause our whole horizon of life to become more fruitious, as if some new sun had arisen in our skies. Smiles scatter many dark shadows from our pilgrim way and set the bright bow of promise arching over all our heavens.

But the smiles of the Lord are infinitely more cheering and glorious than those of any earthly friend. They transcend by far the smiles of those we most tenderly and dearly love.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞The paper is delayed this week, on account of not getting paper in time. It was ordered in due and should have been here promptly, but by some mistake unknown to the printer, it did not arrive. Delays are sometimes unavoidable, but our subscribers will bear with us when we do the best we can.

☞Our friends have decided to hold their meeting in Plymouth, on Saturday and Sunday before Christmas. This was deemed necessary in view of the fact that the stockholders of the Christian Publication Association must, according to its by-laws, meet on Monday, Dec 25th. We hope to see a goodly number of friends from all parts present. A number of brethren from other states have stated that they will be present.

☞We advertise some papers in order to have them forwarded to us for the year to come. We must have a certain amount of these in order to keep up with the times. We select those that answer our purpose best, so far as news, historical, literary and scientific essays are concerned. All these papers have their excellencies—with, perhaps, some defects. We are always in our studies; neither reading unpublished matter, nor commending its perusal to others.

Jewish Restoration.

The signs are increasingly plain in the East. The day is not far distant when the land so long trodden down by the Gentiles will again become a land of renown. The following item from the last number of the New York Independent bears upon the new question:

We recently mentioned that the migration of Jews to Jerusalem had become very large in the past five years. The Rev. Hyman Corbett writes from the Holy City as follows: "The Jews here greatly outnumber all others and their numbers are constantly increasing. The aged are returning here to die. Near the Garden of Gethsemane there are a vast number of nearly new graves—many as yet not used. In the Jewish quarter of the city are found, perhaps, the saddest looking people on the face of the earth. Their countenances do not indicate a ray of joy or hope. Not all Jews who come here are poor. Quite a town is springing up outside the north and west walls of the city. Some wealthy Jews are building fine houses with gardens to themselves. One rich man from London has built towers for one hundred and fifty families of poor Jews. A number of houses are nearly completed, built by a company."

The Association of America.

It will be remembered that a certain plan of cooperation of churches was suggested by certain brethren at the Indiana state meeting last August. The programme was published in the RESTITUTION and submitted to the criticism of the brethren. It was not intended really for the paper but the matter came up in such a form that its publication was deemed proper by those having charge of the articles. There has been a very free and open expression upon the subject by many of the best scholars, and the general verdict is that the association is not in harmony with the spirit and genius of the Gospel. In view of the almost unanimous voice of our readers we can think that the committee will not refer to the matter further. It may be necessary to make a report formally in order to dispose of it finally, but further than that there will be no necessity of saying it, so it appears to us. It has been thought by some that the articles of association were adopted by the Indiana conference, but this is a mistake. The whole subject was deferred until the meeting in December until which time our brethren would have ample opportunity to discuss the merits and demerits of the enterprise. Suffice it to say that as the feeling is very strongly against such a project it is probable that it will cease to be "a bone of contention." We are not speaking by the authority of the committee or of the conference, but are merely presenting the facts as they appear to us. We do not know how all the members of the committee feel up on the subject, but it is perfectly safe to say that they are willing, so far as we know, to conform to the general opinion of their brethren in matters of this sort.

We do not care to enter into a discussion of the subject further, only hope our friends will labor for the furtherance of truth whether they believe in organization or not. The same cooperative plan should be adopted all admit, but just what that shall be is not explain.

The brethren will probably consider it wise to introduce some plan of cooperation at our meeting but in one desires to bind articles of faith upon the church. The members of the committee are as strongly opposed to "creeds" as their critics and would repel any idea of that sort. They desire to see more harmony of action among those looking for the coming of our King. Hence the plan of cooperation was suggested. But in no way or form does the committee wish to lay burdens upon the neck of the disciples. Our brethren will find an article or two in this number bearing upon this subject. Evidently there are two sides to this question but no one should be mean minded in view of a desire to have more harmony and unity of action among those who believe the Gospel of Christ.

Is Christ Reigning in Heaven?

I would say to our worthy editor that I have but one hobby, and that is the Gospel of the Kingdom. That theme I preach where ever I go. But if all points of difference must be branded as hobbies, and all articles on them discouraged, then I know not on what subject to write. I supposed that the new heavens and earth and probation in the future age would be points on which we, as a people, could agree,—but was sadly mistaken. I now venture to write an article or two on the mission of Christ in heaven. This may be called wild speculation, but I will endeavor to stick close to the language of the Bible; and to follow Paul's advice to his son Timothy, and "preach the word," being "instant in season, out of season, reproving, rebuking and exhorting with all long-suffering and doctrine." 2 Tim. iv. 1, 2.

1. As the antitype of Aaron in the antitypical sanctuary in heaven, he can have no throne, no royalty. The Apostle Paul declares that the tabernacle on earth was an "example," a "pattern," a "figure," and a "shadow" of "the true tabernacle in heaven which the Lord pitched and not man." Heb. viii. 2, 5; chap. ix. 9, 23. Now, in this pattern figure, shadow or type of the heavenly tabernacle in which Christ has been officiating during eighteen hundred years, there was no throne, no king, no royalty. Aaron did not belong to the tribe from which the long line of kings had been selected. Thus, in selecting a royal type of Christ, as a king or ruler, Paul had to look elsewhere for a pattern or type. Thus he went back to a priest who lived contemporaneously with Abraham and who was a kingly priest upon his throne in Jerusalem; and whose priesthood had no place in the pattern, or figure, representing the great antitypical tabernacle in heaven. Neither Melchisedec nor his priesthood are declared to be a pattern, type, or figure, of anything appertaining to the tabernacle in heaven. Melchisedec was a royal priest upon his throne in Jerusalem. In its proper place I will show that Christ will be the antitype of the Melchisedecan priesthood when he shall be a priest upon his throne in Jerusalem on Mount Zion, where his royal sacrifice is located. I repeat, that in the perfect type of things in heaven, no such priesthood was represented in that divine pattern there was no royalty, no throne, no king, no kingdom. Christ's work as the antitype of Aaron is to make an atonement for transgressions under the first covenant. Heb. ix. 15. To this agree the words of Peter. Speaking of Christ's position and work in heaven, he says: "Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel and remission of sins." Acts v. 31. Thus, his work as the antitype of Aaron, is to intercede for the transgressions of Israel under the first covenant; and as a Savior and high priest during this dispensation, to intercede and grant pardon for all who shall comply with the condition under the new covenant. His position and work in heaven is not that of king or ruler, but that of 'Prince and a Savior to give repentance and remission of sins." Thus the functions of his position are exclusively ecclesiastical and not civil or royal. In this respect, in the language of Paul, he is exalted, "Far above all principality and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world (age), but also in that which is to come: and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body." Eph. i. 21, 22, 23. Thus, the most exalted position Christ occupies in heaven is to be the head of his church which is exclusively ecclesiastical, and not at only politic. The highest position he occupies in his relation to the civil polity of the world is that of "Prince of the kings of the earth;" (Rev. i. 5) but when he returns to assume the government of the world, upon his royal head will gleam many crowns the insignia of his right to the empire of this world) while flashing from his crimsoned vesture (rolled in the blood of the pampered royalty of earth) shall be seen the lofty titles—"King of kings and Lord of lords." Rev. xix. 12, 16. What a contrast between the two positions. Now, he is only the heir or prince of the kings of earth, but then he is King of the kings of earth. Now he is only the Lord or head of his church, which is his body; but then he will be the Lord of all the proud lords of earth; and the royal head of the body politic of the world. No one is excusable for mistaking two positions so diverse in all their features. He is now the nobleman who, having gone to his father's throne to be invested with authority to govern this far off province now in revolt, is waiting until his father shall make his foes his footstool by investing him with authority to rule over them; and then return, and exercise this authority in the place and over the people from which he had gone away. Psa. cx. 1; Psa. viii. 5, 6; Heb. ii. 5, 7, 8; Isa. xlix. 12-27. According to the first reference, the Son has no part or lot in the work of reigning or placing his enemies under his feet. The Father does all this work single-handed and alone. The Son sits passively at his Father's right hand until his Father makes his enemies his footstool. This text is so plain that it will admit of but one construction. Referring to his Lord, David said: "The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou at my right hand until I (not he) make thine (not our) enemies thy (not our) footstool." The second text referred to defines the sense in which the Father makes his Son's enemies his footstool, namely, by giving him dominion over them. Thus the Psalmist exclaims, "What is man that thou (the great God) art mindful of him? and the Son of Man that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet." According to the foregoing, the Father reigns alone. He accomplishes the entire work of putting all things under his Son's feet. The same thou who made him a little lower than the angels, puts all things under his feet. The Son had no more hand in putting anything under his feet than he had in creating himself. And lastly, the Father puts all kings under his Son's feet by giving him dominion over the works of his hands. Thus, the Father makes Christ's enemies his footstool by investing him with authority to rule over them; and as we shall see the Son will exercise this authority when he shall return from the far country to rule upon his own throne and over his own kingdom. It is one thing for the Father to make Christ's enemies his footstool, and quite another thing for the Father to place his feet upon that footstool. He makes his Son's enemies his footstool by investing him with authority or giving him dominion over them; and the Son exercises this authority by blessing all loyal kings and judges of earth, and executing all who will not submit to his authority; (Psa. ii. 8-12) or, according to Christ himself, by sharing the glory and honor of his kingdom with his faithful servants during his absence, and slaying his enemies who will not submit to his rule. Luke xix. 15, 17, 19, 27. Paul applies Psa. viii. 4-6, to the Son of God; and (1) he locates the time and place of his reign. Paul says, "For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come whereof we speak." Heb. ii. 5.

1. The pronoun we, includes Paul and David.

2. He quotes from the eighth Psalm, exclusively.

3. The dominion of Christ belongs to the world to come and not the present world. The angels have a title to the dominion of the present world, and will hold it until the ushering in of the world to come. Why affirm that God hath not put the world to come in subjection to angels, if the present world is not in subjection to them? Christ would be a usurper to assume the control of this world,—ekoumenen, this earth and its organized governments. Not only so, but he would convict himself of having borne false testimony before Pilate, when he affirmed that his "kingdom is not of this world" John xviii. 36. If his kingdom belongs to this dispensation, then the charge of the Jews would have been true, that he had usurped the authority of Cæsar, and, therefore, that the charge of treason, according to Roman law, was true. But in as much as his kingdom belonged to a future age or order, beyond the reign of Cæsar, the charge was false. Pilate believed Christ instead of the Jews, and thus proclaimed him innocent of the charge of making himself king instead of Cæsar.

4. The Father puts all things in subjugation to his Son, or under his feet. The Son is perfectly passive until the Father crowns him with glory and honor, or invests with authority to rule the world to come. As the nobleman Christ is now in the far country "to procure for himself royalty." Luke xix. 12, Diaglott. "Having received royalty he returned," (verse 15) and shares the emoluments of his kingdom with his loyal servants, and executes his enemies who will not submit to his authority. Verses 15-18, 27. According to the foregoing parable, Christ does not go into the far country to reign with his Father in heaven, but to be invested with authority to reign upon earth, not during his stay in heaven, but when he shall return to earth. He does not exercise a single function of a king in heaven, or until he returns to earth. Till then he has no kingdom to share with his joint heirs—no authority to execute his enemies. The nobleman in the parable did not go to the palace of Cæsar to reign with him, but to be invested with authority to reign over a foreign province. If we should read in Roman history, that Cæsar had honored a young man of royal birth, by permitting him to sit upon his throne until he had put down a rebellion in the province over which he purposed this nobleman should reign; would it follow that therefore he must have reigned with Cæsar either over that revolted province or anywhere else while upon Cæsar's throne? No nobleman ever went to Rome for any such purpose; but to receive authority to rule the province from which he had gone away. And if he should be permitted to sit upon the sun, our's throne, it would only be an honorary position. Just so with Christ as the Prince royal of the kingdom of God, he has not gone to reign with his Father, but to be invested with authority to rule the twelve tribes of Israel as the central kingdom of the empire of earth; and his king received authority he will return and exercise authority in Jerusalem and over the house of Jacob and the whole world. If the Father compliments his Son with an honorary seat by his side upon his throne, we must not jump to the conclusion that he is reigning with his Father. The passive position of sitting while his Father and equates his enemies, does not convey the idea of a joint reign with his Father, but just the reverse. The idea also of his sitting at his Father's side until the Father makes his foes his footstool, conveys the idea that he will occupy that position no longer. If we have no surer promise of reigning with Christ than that we shall sit upon his throne, truly, indeed, is the tenure of our title. In one of the promises Christ made to the church, (and he in no case repeated the same promise) we read: "And he that overcometh * * will I give power over the nations; and he shall rule them." Rev. ii. 26, 27. We can quote such by scores.

The Solar Mutability.

Is not our sun a power? Is not the moon also a power? Were they not set to rule the day and night from the beginning? The solar orb is the "powerful king of day;" the moon is the "queen of night." The word "rule" in Gen. i. 18 is applied also to earthly potentates, to a governor, and to a king; but it is worthy of note that the very first application of "rule" in sacred Scriptures is to the sun and moon. Moses calls the sun the "greater light," and in one passage (Ex. xxi, 8) this word "rule" is translated "power." The astronomer, Proctor, calls the sun earth's "ruler, light, fire." So it is. Science confirms the grand title given the central solar orb by Moses. Science asserts that the earth originally sprang out of the sun. We do know it is bound to it with more than sicken cords. Its very life depends upon the sun. Darken the sun and the earth is under a pall, while the moon is bankrupt. The solar universe is a vast wheel; the sun is the hub. What is the wheel without the hub? Weaken that, let that be shaky, and the wheel is ready to tumble in pieces. Repair is the only remedy. Surely these grand orbs are the very "powers of the heavens," the rulers of the sidereal expanse, holding sway over earth and every planet.

Take away the sun and our earth would be wrapped in the gloom of death. Extinguish its evanescent, mysterious fires, and the planets would congeal to barren frigidity. Increase those fires, and men would blaspheme God because of the scorching heat. Rev. xvi. 8, 9. Kindle them a hundred fold, and Nature would be in a blaze. Add to the sun's bulk, weight and density, and our earth would plunge toward its burning face with alarming velocity. Diminish its bulk and weight, and the law of centripetal force would be disturbed and ruin follow. It used to be thought that the sun was a fixed star, subject to no change. Science now dissipates the cherished idea of a stable centre. Recent discovery demonstrates the changeability of its surface, the awful struggle within its body, its diminished or increased light, its terribly spotted surface, its varying appearance in color, and its convulsed condition within and without. The human eye has within a few years detected the sudden presence of magnesium, spread all over its surface to an alarming degree. Cyclones are seen whirling in frightful grandeur. Vortices of fire, cavernous and deep, open to the wondering gaze of mortals. Masses of flame, or something resembling it, shoot up from its boiling, seething surface to a height of two hundred thousand miles. Let a solar explosion occur (and they do constantly), and earth feels it in an instant, and thrills with electric fire from pole to pole. The sun magnetizes the earth. It sometimes bewitches it. Disturb the magnetic equilibrium, and all the earth and air is convulsed.

It was only early in the seventeenth century that man first discerned spots on the sun. Whether they existed before, science knows not. To this hour they are a mystery. Within ten years a spot has been witnessed forty times larger than the entire surface of the earth! These excite wonder. How easy for God to shake this mighty orb of his own making! How easy for him to toss, disturb and weaken the forces of the universe so as to cause a general alarm among those who study and watch the starry heavens! That time has come. The entire press of the erudite world has, within a brief period, echoed this general fear. The heart of science falls with foreboding of the coming ill. The safety of the solar system is declared to be in danger. Prof. Proctor has lectured far and wide to thousands on "the death of the world." Scientific bodies gravely discuss the dire aspect of things and cry the coming doom. Our earth, says one, is to be burned up. It is to freeze up, says another. It is to smite because chaotic and blank, cries a third. On the sun's scape goat head is heaped all human woes. Bad weather is charged to the sun. Frenzied mental states are attributed to the sun. Earthquakes and storms are the sun's work. Disease, epidemics and plagues are from the sun. He is more than ninety two millions of miles away and yet is king. Sometimes he rules benignly, sometimes as a despot, then again like a wizard. Science is getting afraid of this king. He is becoming a "king of terrors." In other words, we have reached the last signs and the wise world is in mortal "fear of those things coming on the earth." Luke xxi, 26. In great apprehension of some mighty catastrophe overtaking our planet, with all its boast and bravo and hot slaughter the week, this evil generation are fulfilling our blessed Lord's words.

Within ten years, from books and journals, I have taken articles with the following titles, viz: "If the Earth were to Stand Still," The Earth in Trouble," "Nature Witnessing for God," "The Stars Speak," Wonderful Meteors," "Enormous Spots on the Sun," "Worlds on Fire," "Trouble in the Sun," "A Commotion Among the Stars," "A Magnetic Storm," "The Sun in a Fever," "The Coming Storm," "Storms in the Sun," "Wonders in the Sun," "Is the Climate changing?" "Is the Earth Sick?" "A Final Catastrophe," "Our Central Sun in Trouble," "One of the Rings of Saturn Lost," "The Sun a Mutable Body," &c. &c. &c. And now high scientific authority tells us that a perihelion period of all the larger planets is to culminate in 1880—85, that will move the center a distance of one hundred and fifty thousand miles, and so disturb this mighty controlling force that earth and air will rock with the throes of tremendous commotion, and the world of mankind be smitten with such plagues and pestilence as never before witnessed on earth.

I believe the powers of heaven are being shaken, are being strangely perturbed, are being loosened from their stability. "They shall wax old as doth a garment," Heb. i. 11. How like an old, rent, rotten, weakened, shaky contrivance makes our world-system. How much it needed renovation, restitution, recreation. The day comes on space. "The Coming Earthquake" will certainly come. It is coming. "Seek ye the Lord all ye meek of the earth; it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger."—D. T. T. in Bible Banner.

Paraphrase—1 Cor. vi 1.

We know that after the dissolution of the clay tabernacle a more glorious abode awaits us—our house not made with hands—the spiritual body prepared for all the redeemed.

For in this we groan longing for the coming of the Lord and our glorious change.

But let us earnestly take heed that the change be not to us one from mortality to immortality.

For in our mortal state we groan under the burden of sorrow, sin, and impending death, not indeed longing for dissolution, but for the promised change,—the upspringing from the mortal into the immortal life.

Now God has destined us believers for this very thing, and as an earnest of his intention he has sent to us spirit. Therefore whilst we know that eventually we must be with him, we are willing, yea, rather anxious to forego, even now the many pleasures and blessings which his mercy bestows upon us and by which he makes our mortal life appear so desirable, that the blessed change may pass upon us, that ushers us into the full enjoyment of eternal life and reunites the Savior to his people.

For we anticipate by faith the coming of the Lord, not yet vouchsafed to us.

Whereupon we jealously guard our conduct and so walk now whilst absent from him, that at his coming we may be accepted of him and enter with joy into his kingdom. A. J. H.

Correspondence.

Bro, Reed:—

It has been some time since the brethren have heard from me, and they may think that I am idle, but not so; that is not my nature. Since the recovery of my family I have been at work. My first visit was at Paris, or near that place, where we have a church, I was with them two Sundays; had a good meeting; one sister was immersed into the Christ. I then returned home, found all well. After a few days rest I went to McLean county, Ill., had meeting one night in Hayworth. Met Bro. C. P. Graham there, he took me to his house in De Witt county, held meeting there in the Fairview school house over three Sundays with good effect. The people turned out well, notwithstanding an opposition meeting held at the same time. The Campbellites tried to affect our meeting by holding meeting near where we were. From there I went to Champaigne county and held meeting in the gardner neighborhood over two Sundays. Held meeting at Bro. Russel's house, and had one of the best meetings that I have enjoyed for some time. The two young sisters Russels enlivened our meetings with good music. They both being good singers and good players on the organ, and brother and sister Russel enjoyed the meeting well. Although the weather was bad they gave us the pleasure of the house, and stayed it every night. There were six immersed during the meeting, and one of that number was the son of brother and sister Russel. That makes five of that family I have immersed. There were four young men immersed during my meeting. I returned home again after being gone thirty-two days, found all well; to God be all the praise. Your brother in Christ.

J. S. HATCH.

P. S.—I should have said after my return from Edgar county, Ill., I went to Clinton county, Ind., near Burget's corner, and held meeting. Before I went to De Witt county, Ill. While in Clinton county, I immersed one sister into the Christ. So since my family got well I have immersed right into the Christ. J. S. H.

Thomas Carlyle, in a recent conversation with an American gentleman, took occasion, in a very concise but emphatic way, to express his opinion of Darwin and the men who adopt his views. He said: "A good sort of man is this Darwin, and well-meaning, but with very little intellect. Ah, it's a sad and terrible thing to see such a whole generation of men and women, professing to be cultivated, looking around in a purblind fashion and finding no God in this universe. I suppose it is a reaction from the reign of cant and hollow pretense, professing to believe what in fact they do not believe. And this is what they have got to. All things from frog spawn; the dogsel of dirt the order of the day. The older I grow—and I now stand upon the brink of eternity—the more comes back to me the sentence in the catechism, which I learned when a child, and the fuller and deeper its meaning becomes—'What is the great end of man?' 'To glorify God and to enjoy him forever.' No Gospel of dirt, teaching that men have descended from frogs through monkeys can ever set that aside."—Harper's Weekly.

Morning.

The morning! it is glorious time,
Reviving to the world again
The Eden of its early prime,
Exempt of care to cast their train,
When every lip such is wet with dews,
Their pure joys to it with ransom hues;
Not such, as those of evening are,
But pearls unbreathed from the hair
Of some young bride who leaves the glow
Of her warm cheek upon their snow.
The lark is with lifting heart song
Rising the new-touched clouds among;
The lowest that By God come has told,
What both such hymn to the with earth!

Each day doth the again begin,
And no sulky breaks the heart within.
Deliver sweet from clouds of night,
Brow white shed the inward light.

Man a heart that down and lain,
Impaired with life twelve hours' pain,
And wearing that the last is past,
Wave, as the grave's, a long last rest,
Has risen again at morning's call,
Forgetting, or forevitting all;
Yielding the weary wk.ht of thought
With colors from the day-break brought,
Reading new promise in the sky,
And hearing Hope, the lark, on high.

Organization.

I have noticed with interest the various "says" on this subject. If mine may as well remain unsaid, let it go into the waste basket, and I shall concur in that disposition of it.

It is of the first importance that we so conceive each other's candor and unselfish interest in this matter, that difference of opinion shall cause no breach of friendship. If any urge a peculiar organization from selfish motives, the cases, I am sure, are extremely rare.

Circumstances may too much affect our conclusions.

The only object of organization is efficiency. The organization is not the church; it is the creature of the church, and may at any time be changed by the church. It is an act of the church putting itself in order, that it may do business in a proper manner. It has no right to prescribe conditions of conversion, fellowship or church-membership, because these conditions are fixed by the Lord himself. On these [illegible] we can only refer to the N. T[illegible]tament as exclusive authority.

The organization we are discussing is of two kinds: First, of the local church; second, of some or all of the churches combined. Neither is essential for Christian character or fellowship; both are mere business expedients.

First, That of the local church assumes the existence of the local church prior to organization. Each member is "added" to the church by baptism after believing in Jesus Christ. The act of baptism is a profession of faith and a pledge to lead a godly life according to the Scriptures. A statement and promise to these ends written out and signed will be a snare rather than a help. A list of names thus filled, I think, by Acts ii. 15; ii. 41; iv. 4; vi. 7) taken by some person acting as secretary of the church, will be convenient. The mere fact of baptism entitles a name to a place in the list. It need not be voted in nor out. Such a list may be headed: "A list of the members of the church at ——," or "A list of baptized believers at ——." On this list, or in connection with it, a brief account may be kept of each per on, and his official station, if any, noted. Officers will be elected as needed; as, elders, deacons, preachers, evangelists, helpers, etc., to serve for a definite period, during good behavior, or till a new election; for a definite period—one year, 3 ars or less—will probably be best. The church, like any other body of people acting together, may from time to time adopt such bylaws as may be necessary and not inconsistent with its fundamental principles contained in the New Testament. No rule need be adopted touching upon the most delicate Christian scruples, nor on the freedom of the greatest zeal and ability. There is room enough and time enough; and all will be easy, if charity temper every plan and act.

Every local church is, under Christ, independent in its government; and no combination of churches can acquire the right to dictate its local management; it cannot alienate that right. Yet—

Second. Several churches may unite to do in the Gospel work what they can not so well do acting separately. This has always been done. While such co-operation has in some cases been perverted to ill-u e, it has, on the whole, been as beneficial as to command almost universal approbation.

This union may be of churches by delegates, or of individuals without appointment. The style of union will depend upon the work to be done. It is of cours discretionary. Its capacity for good will be limited only by the wisdom, zeal and ability of its members. Its primary object will be obedience to the commission, "to into all the world,"—"make disciples of all nations." Its plan should be liberal enough to admit the co-operation of all who wish to help in the glorious work. We are on rough seas and in squally times; care should be taken not to Limit too much sail. Liberty and License.

"All things are lawful, but not expedient."

Brother Heel:

Grant me a little space to express the pleasure with which I read your editorial "Put Down the Brakes." This operation is only resorted to when the machine is running too fast, or wisely but too well—in short, going down hill, with accelerated momentum which, unless corrected and controlled in time, will inevitably wreck the train.

Such, I have been fearing, was the catastrophe which threatened our high-prized RESTITUTION, from the rate of speed at which it was moving, but the timely cry, "Put down the brakes!" reassures us, and gives ground to hope, now that we are checked up, that the remainder of the journey will be more safely and wisely accomplished.

Pausing to take breath after escaping from the flood of isms, crotchets and theories in which we have been struggling, let us try to recognize and pursue hereafter the more excellent way of steady progress; instead of a comet-like speed—of prudence and patience, rather than passion and precipitation, of liberty rather than license. Liberty of thought, of speech, and of the press are good, but license of either is unqualifiedly bad. Hence the wise maxims, "Be temperate in all things," "Let your moderation be known to all men."

Some seem to think because it is written, "Prove all things by the spirit," that there is nothing proved or tried—that all things are yet open for debate. This is a mistake. When Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, and when Hymenus and Philetus resisted Paul and declared the resurrection to be already past, neither Moses nor Paul stopped to reason with them or prove the contrary, but gave them over to their reprobate minds. So, if one now offer to prove the Bible a fiction and Tom Paine to be right, sir, shall we waste time with their folly because it is written we must prove all things? No; the distinction is broad between liberty and license—the latter is the abuse of the former and that editor will have his hands over-worked and his head over-taxed, who will give currency in his paper or attempt to refute all the vagaries of a vain or ill-regulated mind, that should be ignored and avoided.

Those obvious truths, kept in view and practically enforced, in the conduct of the paper, will avoid many difficulties and leave more room for our instruction in true righteousness. Thus we may get back to the old paths and go on to perfection, the Lord being our Helper.

Faithfully submitted by your brother in Christ. A. B. MAGRUDER.

Revelations of the Dead Letter Office.

One of the perplexities of a publishing house, is the patient answering of letter writers charging upon us all the supposed blame of not attending to business. That we are always at fault, the following from a Washington correspondent amply illustrates. He says: "One can hardly realize that there is a daily average of 12 000 or 15,000 dead letters, or about 400,000 a month. Allowing one person to a letter, there are 400 000 persons every month who undertake to send letters either without stamps, without addresses, or with cancelled stamps, insufficient postage or illegible or incorrect addresses. Many of them are without either stamp or address, and often with no signature which gives the slightest clue to persons sending them.

There are 40,000 a month received that either lack postage or address, or else have insufficient or cancelled stamps; strange as it may seem, these are sometimes the most valuable letters often containing currency or drafts for large amounts of money. It is estimated that there is about $4,000,000 in drafts and $75,000 in cash received yearly through dead letters.

This is all returned, if possible, to persons sending it; but if a portion of it fails to find a claimant, it is turned over to the postoffice fund. Very little difficulty is experienced in restoring the checks and drafts to the rightful owners, but the money generally comes in small sums, and is usually sent in the most careless, hap-hazard fashion, and the loss of these small sums and the ignorance or carelessness with which they are launched upon a journey represents a deal of suffering and disappointment. Some hard-working man may send $20, the savings of a month's hard labor, to his wife and little ones, whom he has to leave behind him; but alas! he is one of the forty thousand who trust to Providence, without stamp, or address, or else his writing or orthography are beyond mortal ken, and so the poor wife never gets the pittance, which is her all." In the face of such astonishing and startling revelations we cannot too earnestly enjoin our patrons to use great care and thoughtfulness in writing. Time and again have we sent postage to the dead letter office for letters addressed to us, but which had found their way into the mails deficient of their needful appendage. And, doubtless, other letters which never reached us where deficient in some of the particulars above enumerated. A good thing to do is to thoughtfully look at the address and postage of your letter before you drop it into the letter box.—Golden Censer.

The Christian's Longing.

There was a Man of sorrow, and acquainted with grief, who died upon the Roman cross for our relief; and was buried, rose again, and ascended upon high, to plead for poor, fallen man, in the presence of his Father. And he is to come again with many crowns gleaming upon his brow for those that love him.

Oh, how the Christian longs to see him returning again! Oh, yes! he is coming in the glittering, bright clouds of heaven, accompanied by all the holy angels, and with all the untold glories in splendor arrayed. For he is faithful that has promised, also good and true.

Oh, Christian pilgrim, do you not long to see him coming, with all those untold glories for you? Oh, yes! when the Lord shall stand upon the earth and proclaim peace and good will to all men, then we shall receive our crown of glory as well as everlasting joy; and peace will be proclaimed through the ages of eternity. Then all will be in one happy family forever; gather'd around the throne of God. Where there will be no sorrow, pain nor sighing, but all will be peace and joy, and love.

Oh! careless sinner! fly from the wrath that awaits thee, and come to the God of peace and love, where all will be grand, glorious and beautiful forever. J. M. HARLAN.

DIED.

Sister Mary Carter of Texas county, Iowa, aged about 8 years. She broke a dilled August 28, 1876 a years 4 re children to mourn their loss. She had eighteen years' experience in the Abrahamic faith, and she lived so becomes a disciple of Christ. As she died in the full assurance of faith, we have an assurance that we shall meet her in the kingdom. About all her family have embraced this hope, and are living in the enjoyment. May we have them in the kingdom is my prayer.

Words of comfort were spoken by the writer from Eph. ii., 5, to which great attention was given by all present. Hope the result may be good.

Your Brother in Hope,

WM. A. WEIR.

Port Leopold, Missouri, Nov. 12, 1876.

Brother Wm A Hinds aged 39 years and 5 months, at Mt Gilead, Venango county, Pa. After a short illness of one week; principal cause, getting his feet jammed, whereby inflammation set in and a stiffness on the ceiling of the heart, and both jaw ossified.

Brother Hinds was at once faithful to the cause of truth in the city of reform where he lived, and was always ready to help in the cause. But his work is done. He left a wife and three children, besides a brother who is now called to labor for us. May they look to the widow's God, and to the Father of the fatherless. We have a strong hope that brother Hinds will soon come forth to die no more. Services on the occasion by Elder H. F. Burnett, assisted by the writer.

JOHN T. OGDEN.

Died, of flux, after a tedious illness, at the residence of her son-in-law, in Florida, Madison county, Iowa, on Saturday, October 28, 1876, one aged sister, Mary Hornaday, widow of our very esteemed and much lamented brother, Nathan Hornaday, and mother of our greatly beloved and lamented brother Wm. H. Hornaday, at the age of 73 years.

Sister Hornaday was born in Virginia, but came with her father and family to Franklin county, Indiana, at the age of 12 years. She subsequently removed to Hancock county, Indiana, and was married to Nathan Hornaday. She removed with her husband to Marion county, Indiana, in the year 1846, where she lived at the time of his death, since which she removed to Tipton county, Indiana, her home at the time of her death.

She early became a member of the Christian church, and lived a devoted member of the same until she embraced the One Faith, and became an obedient believer in the Gospel of the Kingdom of God. She was one among the first in the state of Indiana to embrace the doctrines of the age to come and the complete mortality of man, and has ever since lived a faithful, earnest Christian life, continually setting before her household and her neighbors an example of charity, of patience, a deep sympathy for and devotion to their salvation. Her words were words of exhortation and of encouragement to steadfastness in the faith, and to noble, earnest and Christian work.

Her great desire with reference to her own future was that they might live in the second, earnest Christian life that they would indeed and in truth be "rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom," and her deepest desire was out to all the brethren and sisters, and embraced the entire human family.

She leaves three daughters and two sons, all married, a number of grandchildren and a large circle of other brethren and friends to mourn her loss. But we weep not as those who have no hope.

Weep not for her! why should we weep?
Her God is faithful—see He says,
As through the sunshine's warmth the mist,
Her life is hid with Christ in God.

WHAT PAYS?

IT PAYS every Manufacturer, Merchant, Mechanic, Inventor, Farmer or Professional man, to keep informed on all the improvements and discoveries of the age.

IT PAYS the head of a family to introduce into his household a newspaper that is instructive, one that fosters a taste for investigation, and promotes thought and encourages discussion among the members.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN

which has been published weekly for the last thirty-one years, is the best paper of the kind now published in the United States, and is read in Manufactories, Machine Shops, Foundries and Mechanical Establishments throughout the country. Every number contains from ten to fifteen original engravings of new inventions, new processes, and the latest discoveries in the Arts and Sciences.

Every number is illustrated and the contents embrace a large amount of useful information, which is valuable to the Industrial Mechanic, and will be found, from week to week, of the highest practical value in the workshop, the office, the study, the household, and the manufactory. Every issue contains the Latest Inventions and Discoveries in the Arts and Sciences.

THE SUN.

1877, NEW YORK. 1877.

The different editions of THE SUN during the next year, will be the same as during the year that has just passed. The daily edition will as now consist of a sheet of four pages, and on unusually large occasions of a sheet of eight pages, or double the usual size. The Sunday edition will be a sheet of 52 pages of the same dimensions and character that are already familiar to the readers of THE SUN.

THE SUN will continue to be the strenuous advocate of reform and retrenchment, not of the noisy Reformers who call themselves such, but of reform in the only practicable sense, honesty and economy in the administration of public affairs. It will continue to be the unrelenting enemy of the people and for the people, of rings and of the Political Bosses, and in the struggles of parties, embittered by military violence, it will endeavor to supply to readers a daily news page full from a million to a half—with the most careful and constantly attainable approximation to accuracy, and will employ for the purpose as many and as large corps of reporters and correspondents as any other journal. Foreign correspondence, especially, will be full, accurate, and fearless, as it will always be, and no expense will be spared in the purchase of those advantages by plundering the first ship or by assisting what the law does not give to others. In all these respects, and in the matter of the public by defending the rights of the people against the encroachments of unjustified power.

The price of the daily SUN will be $5 per month, or $6 50 a year, post paid, or with the Sunday edition, $7 70 a year.

The WEEKLY SUN, eight pages of 56 broad columns, will be sent for one dollar per year, post paid. Two copies for $1 a year, post paid.

The terms to all in this favorable list from the present year to the WEEKLY can be reduced by that subscription to without the necessity of making up clubs. At the same time, if any of our friends choose to aid us in extending our circulation we shall be grateful to them, and every such person who sends us ten or more such subscriptions from one place, will be entitled to one copy of the Weekly Sun free of all other charge. At one dollar a year, postage paid, the cheapness of paper and printing are already equally cost, can leading to a reduction in the price of the paper. We shall not make up the people will own to it. THE WEEKLY SUN is the cheapest newspaper published in the world and we spend nine out of ten of every dollar. Address

Discourses on the State of the Dead, between the Rev. W. C. Dewhurst, Congregational minister, and W. Kelly, editor of Bible Echo, and subscriber of the Journal. Re ised England. The pamphlet of one thousand words. It is of the deed sold in Illinois, reads as state after the discovery. Address all by W. C. H. K. That the Kelly sure took that book in death are wholly unwarranted, has no basis, and cannot be performed any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Fifth, fanciful hands, well bound. 48c; postage 10c. Paper cover, 30c; postage 6c.

Duration and Nature of Future Punishment By Rev. R. Constable, M. A. late Professor of Civil, Revised, Enlarged. As whatever we assert I nothing the punishments of the wicked. It is particularly fine in its philosophical chapters rejecting the meaning of the terms translated by the Inquisition left us to declare the doom of the lost. Fifth edition, revised. 48c; postage 10c.

"It is well this book with likely publication. Undoubtedly the subject which it treats with such an attractive combination of learning and modesty, of power and reverence, has laid hold of the minds of many of the most thoughtful Christian men of our day. It grows, for it was pamphlet in the first edition to handsome volume of three hundred and thirty pages in the fourth, in conclusive proof that the question deserved to be a profound interest. We must also compliment the publishers on the tasteful hand handsome dress in which they present the book to the public, and express the hope that the necessary outlay will speedily be much more than re vered by the large sale of a work which must take a standard place in the valuable misunderstood department of Christian theology.—The Rock Mount.

This work presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection.

"Mr. Constable has, in a series of works, devoted much labor and research to the Bible from Scripture and reason, to the real nature of the future of the dead and the present time in the result of his more exhaustive labors is one special point. His argument is very ably set forth in Bible texts in a book by Bible and which a available style. There is a good deal to be said for the general doctrine presented."—Manchester Examiner.

"It is the character of all his usual there of thought and el-ance of expression. To all sincere lovers of truth, rather than of tradition, we cordially commend the treatise."—The Church Messenger.

Bible Echo, Volume I., May to December, edited by W. Kelly, etc. The only English weekly that advocates the sufficient and exclusive authority of numbers of the Bible Echo, containing important papers and discussions on vital matters, and the best current events in the scriptural characters of immortality. Price $1.75.

Bible Echo, Vol. III., July to September, 1876. This completes the Bible Echo as a weekly newspaper, and also finishes the old series. Price $1.50.

Bible Echo, New Series. Monthly numbers from October, 1876. The yearly subscription for the 12 numbers, including the 3 numbers of last year, is $3 00.

New Facts Upon an Old Subject. For the author of "Exquisite Wildish Upon Everything." Treatise for the plain clean, the settled, the plausible, the unobserved, the most interesting, the most interesting, the most popular, and the most subject. 8.8 pp. Price 30c; postage 10c.

A New Work by Mrs. H. V. Reed.

Earnest Words for Heart Seekers. Nearly 200 pp. Well printed on heavy tinted paper, neatly bound in cloth. Price 60c; postage 10c.

This book is one of the most satisfactory of its kind that could be written; indeed we know of none other in every way so well adapting to those who are the necessity of examining the Bible as a revelation of the will of God. We would be more than glad, as we would be proud to see little page here our name from out of that is the enlarging and intended day, the subscriber. Here is a good work and it is, as known, warmly appreciated by many; but this work as original, so terrible, so cruel this is, so well adapted to bring one where its success is found. Everybody should become a copy."—Ed. Bible Echo.

Jesus in the Tempest.

Fiercely came the tempest sweeping
Down the lake of Galilee,
But the ship where Christ lay sleeping
Might not sink in that wild sea.
Wh n he rose, the tempest ebbing
When he bade the waters rest,
Calm the little ship went sibbing
On the blue lake's quiet breast.

And the white waves, rushing past her,
Roared her keel lay smooth and still;
For the wind winds knew their Master,
And the waves obeyed his will;
Then who heeded those crushed pleading,
Waking at their startled cry,—
Sleeping now, whist comfort needing,
Savior, unto thee we fly.

When at night our homes are shaken,
And the howling winds we hear,
As in terror we awaken,
Keep us safe from harm and fear.
When the waves of pride or anger,
Rise to vex our lonely wilds,
Keep us from a greater danger,
From the passion storms of life.

—Meredith's Herald.

Yet There is Room.

Yet there is room! the feast is spread
For every hungry, thirsting soul;
And living streams and living bread
Are ours when once we reach the goal.

Yet there is room! the home of peace
Throws open wide each crystal door;
And voices full of love and bliss
Bid us come in and rest no more.

Yet there is room! the eternal song
Waits till our voices join the strain.
Room, room amid the choral throng,
Who praise the Lamb for sinners slain!

Yet there is room! the arms of love
Stretch wide to welcome sinner-home;
Oh, haste, no more in sorrow rove,
"Th Spirit and the bride say come!"

Christian Association of America.

EDITORS RESTITUTION:—So much has been written anent "The Christian Association of America," that I do not wish to trouble the readers of your interesting and valuable paper with any of my views.

My feeling on that subject is simply this: If you brethren, believe that you can do more, in such an organization, for the cause of our soon coming King, organize and work.

I have examined the articles one by one, and I've studied their nature and design; I have also read all the criticisms, even to that of the Cleveland church, and in-fine to my own convictions obliges me to say that I see nothing to scare the most timid.

I was intending to be at that conference, but was hindered. I should be pleased to attend the December meeting but cannot spare the means. Our brethren near Pomeroy, Ohio, (forty-two members strong in the church) have completed an excellent edifice, which I dedicated in October, when they invited on my holding a ten days meeting, commencing on Saturday evening before Christmas.

Please allow me to give my thoughts on those articles, and let me know if I am mistaken as to the meaning of any article. I shall be brief.

ARTICLE I.—Name and Membership. I see no objection to this article. Every body should have a name, and what name can be more appropriate than "Christian Association," for a Christian body? "American" is only added to show its location. It is not a church, but an association of persons and churches.

ARTICLE II.—Object of the Association. This is the article that dictates the work of the association. Does it propose any unlawful or unscriptural action?

1. To secure a more perfect union of our brethren in their work. Is this not very much needed? The weekly issues of the RESTITUTION show the work to be very necessary, and in what way can this be more effectually accomplished than by an interchange of views in a general association? where men of age, knowledge, experience, intelligence and Christian love come together. This they did in the days of the apostles; why not in the present age?

This are to meet to develop "love and harmony." Surely this is lawful business for Christians. Two can meet for those objects and if two, a thousand can assemble for the same purposes. Two churches can legally (and, by-by-by, I mean the Philadelph) come together for such work; and if two, then all may.

"Unity in faith and practice," is named as part of the work of the association. More curious in these particulars is certainly desirable.

Every writer in the RESTITUTION aims to secure these noble ends. To the object he brings Scripture argument and strives to the light in his brethren. And what every brother strives to do individually, can we not do collectively? A brother may exhort himself, at home and among a few brethren, quite a "Solomon" when, if thrown amongst the intelligence of the body, he might find himself a novice. We need such association to make us humble and teachable. In the way more unity would be secured. I would rather obey many rules than one. As matters now stand the law goes forth from Zion (RESTITUTION) and the word of the Lord from "Jerusalem," (Plymouth). Pardon me.

"Contribution and cooperation," "expected and requested." Not commanded. Members of all bodies claim that much at least, of their services. This association is not to be obstructed, nor does it interfere with church rights. It may be that some objections are members of secret association. It is, where is their consistency?

We need some general, open channel into which, from smaller streams, contributions can flow, that the great missionary fields may be watered with efficiency. We want in some where whole business is to see that the missionary work is sustained. I see such a necessity in my own region. Had I such help a great work might be accomplished.

ARTICLES III AND IV., we pass, but re quiring study.

ARTICLE V. is not such as demands special attention.

ARTICLE VI. is fair enough. Experience would regulate that matter.

ARTICLE VII.—Union Delegates. I see no particular objection to this article. Churches may sometimes find it very expensive to send delegates to a great distance, and at those times the means. Let them unite.

ARTICLE VIII.—Necessity, gives rise to such a regulation. Such power, every association must have, viz: The power to guard its membership. In these times, as in former days, we have wolves in sheep's clothing—"tramps."

ARTICLE IX.—Undesirable of Preachers. According to the wording of this article as it now stands, there might be some changes to remove difficulties, (for no one prevent that all the articles are faultless). It would exclude some worthy ministers, who might receive to work with the association. Suppose a minister is laboring where the gospel is not preached or where the brethren are opposed to giving any paper (as at Cleveland) article 8 and 9, would exclude him. I myself could not become a member of that association. The should be changed. If I understand, correctly, a minister must first get credentials from some one of our churches; and this recommend is my view, the association confines to that effect, viz: That he is a member.

ARTICLE X.—Church Government. This body being a Christian Association, and not a church, has a right to choose its companions, as lawfully as any other society or family. It is a voluntary association and may say who shall be members, and by what rules and regulations they shall act.

ARTICLE XI.—Papers. Such an association can adopt any organ it sees fit, and, I do not know where they could find a better one.

ARTICLE XII.—Home Missionary Board. The right to form such a board, I do not dispute. It seems no more power than any individual Christian, with ample means and benevolent heart would claim. Had I ten million dollars to spend in proclaiming the Gospel, I should want a responsible body to manage the work. So of our churches. When it pays its funds, it wants to know where they go.

ARTICLE XII.—Its Duties. I presume that it will not be disputed that no duties are here named that any one Christian could not lawfully exercise, with his own means, nor that any one church might not do with its own funds. Why might not two churches unite to carry on such enterprises? And if two, then any number that could co-operate.

One Christian could not be called a pope for so doing, nor one church. Why then should twenty or a hundred churches be called a harlot for doing what one Christian or one church would be a rejoice to doing?

The exception, in my opinion, is sufficient. If missionary work is done, some person or persons, church or churches, must furnish the means and do it. Why can't not be accomplished more efficiently by a union?

ARTICLES XV., XVI., XVII., XVIII. and XIX., refer to matters that would be changed to suit circumstances.

ARTICLE XX. is well enough—no principle involved.

ARTICLE XXI.—Funds—How Raised. As to the number of paying funds, experience will fix the best methods. In No. 1. "they" should be it, and in No. 2, "their," should be him. (small matter, however). Nos. 3 and 4 might have to be modified.

ARTICLE XXII.—No objection to this article. Need Article xxiii.

ARTICLES XXIV., XXV., XXV.—I see no objections to these.

My reviews of the document, being finished allow me a few general thoughts.

If brethren said, that a "name by any other name would smell as sweet," some of our brethren don't think so.

Had the word "co-operative" been used, instead of the word "association," the same powers and work would have been Scriptural and proper.

What is a confederacy, but a temporary, "Christian Association?" That they exercise more powers than the one objected, to claim, can be seen in every report. Why not object to these?

Stand at creeds, and of the same time publishing to the world, their own "creeds" and "resolves." Our papers are full of "creeds" and "resolves," the form of legislative action. Recently, by the general assembly of the state of Ohio,—"Resolved by the Church of God in Cleveland." "That we approve of the action of the Baltimore conference." "Thus who boasted in the law, by the breaking of the law dishonors! then God? Confederacy, thou art a rare jewel."

Resolved that we don't believe as you do believe. I care not if you have a thousand creeds (feeble) so that you do not require us to make me bow to them. I have been in the Advent movement 31 years and have seen the same fear exhibited and expressed in every possible form.

The objectors want the Gospel preached to the destitute, but fear all united efforts to carry the Gospel. The result is, that a few are obliged to bear the job, and the converts generally believe as their instructors teach them.

Some of our churches, rejecting all instruction except from those in their own churches, and these, spending their time in their worldly pursuits, and but little time to study the deep things of the Bible. They are ruinous in everything but Bible knowledge.

They think that profound knowledge and experience are essential, in every trade and profession, except the Christian profession. A knowledge of the Bible is thus by instinct. With such views I do not wonder that they fall into such gross perversions of Scripture as are expressed by the Cleveland church, on 1 Cor. vii. 20. "Let every one remain in the same calling in which he was called."

But I have cut enough.

A Personal Devil.

Resist the devil and he will flee from you. Draw nigh to God and he will draw nigh to you.

These personalities are spoken of, God, the devil and you.

All admit two; the language distinctly calls for three.

He hael, the arch-angel, when contending with the devil, disputed about the body of Moses, dared not bring a railing accusation against him, but said, the Lord rebuke thee Satan.

These facts entitles are distinctly spoken of. All admit two; why make a fifth or take from the third.

Then the devil heareth him, and behold angels came and ministered unto him.

These personalities are distinctly mentioned, and I could as soon think of denying the personality of the angel as of the personality of the devil. CHAS. BOARDMAN.

Report of Quarterly Assembly.

The quarterly assembly of the Church of God met, according to announcement, near Green Hill, Va. The faith once delivered to the saints was well represented from Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia. The time was spent from Friday night until Sunday night, in an humble presentation of the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, to antichristian confusion, and the uniting together with dear brethren and sisters and friends as it were, in heavenly places and in Christ.

On Sunday, the writer, by the use of the 16th chapter of the Apocalypse, and an invocation, showed that the keys of the grave to attain to the high destiny to which they are called in the gospel, they must, as a class etc., such as represented by the clean and white linen. That our garments must be white and pure, and unstained from the world; that, as subjected to temporary confinement, according to the factor of the covenant, were compelled to wear a certain particular kind of raiment to distinguish them as soldiers, so should we be in the grand army, represented in the chapter, as following him that sat upon the white horse. We must distinguish ourselves from the world, as good soldiers for our king, by putting on the white armor of God. That the three unclean spirits that are flowing from the mouth of the dragon, the beast, and the false prophet are the civil, ecclesiastical and military elements, or powers, of the world; and that they are upon the eve of great troubles, and that if we are dead with Christ, in the sentiments of the world, that the exhortation by our Apostle was to touch not, taste not, handle not, which all are to perish with the using, after the commandments and doctrines of men. That the part of the race composing those three great elements, were unclean; that they have never had their hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and their bodies washed with pure water; and more they were the poor, the sick, the naked, lame and maimed, laying around the pool, or Church of God, which we professed to be. And the object of the assembly was not only for the mutual edification of the saints of God, but to let our light so shine before men as to constrain them to glorify our Father who is in heaven, that they, too, be entitled to wear that robe of righteousness so beautifully described in the chapter read in the forenoon.

At night, we read to a crowded house the 24th Psalm, from which we showed that the righteous, such as those referred to in the chapter read during the day, would inherit the land and dwell therein forever, but the abhorred the wicked should be diligently considered, but should not be. It was made plain, that the Psalmist was not speaking of the present age, for both classes did and are found in this age. We know who they are, but at the first resurrection of all things which God has spoken of by the holy prophets, since the world began, man being mortal that portion of the race who is not ready for immortality, as the stream cannot rise above the fountain, must perish. Since the popular doctrine of eternal punishment fail to receive more, for there will be nothing to punish, for the glorious time will then have come when the whole earth will be fully filled with an undying population, for every opposing element to the eternal purposes of God will be destroyed, and even death, the last enemy will be swallowed up in victory. In view of his great and powerful antagonist, compared with whom all others sink into petty insignificance, the assembly, on receiving the suggestions of the Christian Association of America, agreed that we are willing to co-operate in connection with any or all of the One Faith, in doing all we can to aid in preaching the gospel to a dying world, in as much as it has pleased God, by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe; and also, at the suggestion of the writer, to encourage any one to give, from a cup of cold water to one hundred—or more if necessary, to aid the humble servants of God in the dissemination of the truth, so that if they should fail to be of the seed of Abraham, by being baptized into Christ, and so be made immortal when the master comes, that they may receive the glorious invitation, come ye blessed of my Father, etc., for I was a stranger, and ye gave me meat, etc.; for the King will say to this class as much as ye have done it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me, and receive their reward, which will be electrical; th t is, they will enter on a constitution of things under which they will not die.

At the close of the meeting the brethren and sisters separated themselves from the congregation, and with hearts full of love to God and one another, gave each other the right hand of fellowship as their farewell greeting, a demonstration in connection with the preaching of the word, that caused those who witness it to take knowledge that they had been with Jesus. We were informed that several were almost persuaded to become Christians.

The assembly being displeased, old Brother Allen suggested that the congregation, one and all, contribute something to defray the expenses of brethren who had traveled a long way to preach the gospel to them, at the same time holding in his hand his own his salary, and it was generously responded to, which enabled the laborer to the master's vineyard, or soldier of Jesus, to feel as if he was not going a warfare altogether at his own charge, but that there are others who are in sympathy with him in the work of the Lord.

Before the people broke up we made a free and liberal distribution of the RESTITUTION, all being done faith in word and deed in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, giving thanks to God, and the Father by him, unto it be to his glory. Amen. S. J. MORGAN.

Persons who patronize papers should pay promptly, for the pecuniary prospects of the press have a peculiar tendency to publish forward public prosperity. If the editor is paid promptly, and his books kept plain and by prompt paying patrons, he puts his paper in peace, his paragraphs are more pointed, he paints his pictures of passing events in more pleasant colors, and the perusal of his paper is of more pleasure to his people. Paste this piece of proverbial philosophy in some place where all persons can perceive it.—Exchange.

"I am sure that I [St. Paul] shall come in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ. Now, I leave you brethren for to find Jesus Christ who died for the sins of the whole, that we all together shall be saved." Rom. xv. 29, 30.

This "fulness" is thus stated:

"Jesus was the minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made to the fathers—(hence) Rejoice ye Gentiles with his people—and there shall be a root of Jesse, and he that shall rise to reign over the Gentiles! Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope (of this) through the power of the Holy Ghost." vs. 8-13.

The fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ takes this range,—"first to the Jew and also to the Gentiles," and on to the kingdom. Its most profound import confirms the promises to Abraham and to his seed, who shall "take the gate (the seat of judgment, ever) his enemies, and so judge and dispense the full measure of Divine favor. Gen. xxii. 17, 18; Deut. xxxii. 43; Ps. lxxii; lxxxix. 1-4, 20-36; Isa. xl. 10; Jer. xxiii. 5, 6; Dan. xii. 9-14, 17, 18, 20, 27; Micah iv. 1-8; Luke i. 31-33, 69-75; 2 Tim. iii. 15 to iv. 8.

This brief appeal of St. Paul quoted above is addressed, "for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake and the love of the Spirit," to Dr. John Hall, Dr. R. E. Sears, Dr. Edward Beecher, and Dr. William R. Taylor, whose sermons are summed up in the Herald and Tribune, Nov 21.

My spirit was stirred in me to ask these gifted clergymen who hold an honored place in the metropolitan pulpit and press of our country, Why they omit all mention of the crowning theme and the consummating glory of the Gospel—the second coming and salvation—reign—resurrection—reception? Heb. ix. 28; Acts iii. 19-21; Rom. viii. 17-23; Rev. xxi. 1-5; xxii. 20; John xiv. 3. Jesus the hope-bearer—the antitypes of the propitiatory or mercy seat, where the shekinah glory rested, "must needs come to his glory," that "all flesh may see it together, and the earth be filled with his glory."

As Moses, the mediator of the old covenant, must needs have come down from the mount with God, to mediate and administer that covenant, as "king in Jeshurun," how much more must Christ, the mediator of the new covenant come again to Zion, turn away ungodliness from Jacob; Rom. xi. 26; cleanse the sanctuary; Dan. viii. 14; ix. 24; Matt. xxiii. 39; and be the King of kings; 1 Tim. vi 15; Psalms lxxii. 11. Isa. ix. 12; Jer. xxiii. 5-6.

As the high priest of Israel in the shadow must needs have come out from within the veil (having put away their sin,) to bless the people, how much more must our great High Priest appear the second time to salvation—deliverance—restitution? Heb. ix. 1-28; Rom. viii. 21-24; Acts iii. 21; Psa. xcvii; 1 Cor. xv. 24-27.

Did you ever notice the caption of the pages and chapters expository of the N. T. Prophecies—The Coming of Christ—The Second Coming of Christ to Judgment—toward a score of times in all your pulpit Bibles? Matt. xxiv. 25; Mark xiii; Luke xvii. 21; 1 Thess. iv. 5; 2 Peter iii; Rev. i. Please look at these chapters.

Did not the Christian's calling, from the first, have special reference to Jesus' coming from heaven? 1 Thess. i. 10.

Was not the "blessed hope" anchored in this coming? Titus ii. 11-14.

Is not the "crown of glory" then to be given? 1 Pet. v. 1-4; 2 Tim. iv. 8.

Is not our faith then to be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ? 1 Pet. i. 7.

Does not the apostolic faith know "that he who raised up the Lord Jesus will raise up us also, by Jesus? 2 Cor. iv. 13-18.

Does not the Lord's Supper make this primal truth prominent? "As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come." 1 Cor. xi. 26.

Is not this second coming in every creed in christendom?

Nay, more, is not this crowning event of the Gospel age essential to the removal of present obstacles out of the way of its foretold triumphs? Can the kingdom come in other words, with the Pope, Grand Turk, and devil in it? The world needs the absence of these enemies and the presence of the Lord to insure the Gospel consummation? Ps. xvii. 26-28.

The Gospel is preached as a witness to all nations; Matt. xxiv. 14; and to take out a people for his name; Acts xv. 14. Then shall the end (consummation) come.

The abruptness of brevity please excuse, as I claim nothing but "for Jesus' sake, and the edifying of the body.

The occasion for this appeal lies in the fact that in your precious texts, in one instance, (1 Peter i.) there is a seven-fold reference to the facts and scenes of the second coming—which are all ignored, as if nothing worth.

Please note: The Jews ignored the first advent and its reference to atonement, but is that more exciting than to ignore "the second time to salvation deliverance?"

The Jews "knew not the time of their visitation," and hence were dispersed or dispersed to the four winds, and their city and sanctuary desolated. Matt. xxiii. 37-39; Luke xix. 41-44. But has not God given us a great deal more light from the fulfillment of all that, and intimates more in the development and prevalence of the papal power, with the Mohammedan over the East, and the third part of the Roman world? Are we not in "the time of the end" (of this prophetic range) where "many run to and fro, and knowledge is increased."

The Jews were reproved for not discerning the signs of their time in John and Jesus, with Rome "the fourth kingdom" then come, and the seventy weeks of Dan. ix. 24-25, about fulfilled. Mark i. 15; Matt. xvi. 1-3. How much more culpable are we who shut our eyes and hearts to the prophetic picture of the pope, grand Turk and the old serpent Satan's time apparently exhausted.

Furthermore, God has provided for any apparent delay. Heb. ii. 1-4. "If it tarry, wait for it. It is for an appointed time—and will surely come." In Heb. x. 37, this vision is impersonated "The Coming One will come, and will not tarry. Now the just shall live by faith, (not live by believing and waiting on the Lord for his coming and salvation.) But if he draw back my soul, (saith God) shall have no pleasure in him."

Respectfully submitted in the "love of the spirit," J. B. COOK.

The Truth Defended.

A Reply to Wm Hicks' Enquiry. "Do the Dead Literally Know Nothing?"

This enquiry, which appeared in the RESTITUTION of November 25th, is put with its ease and clearness, and certainly deserves a full and candid answer.

Mr Hicks arguing the literal import of the passage in Ecclesiastes ix. 5,—"The dead know not anything," and very fairly proceeds to quote the immediately following context, "neither have they any more a reward. . . . . neither have they any more a portion forever of anything that is done under the sun," and then argues, logically enough, (to overthrow the assumed literality of the passage,) that the last clause of the quotation must also be taken literally, (which is strictly true,) —and this convinces us to the conclusion, (to use his own language,) "Here adjust and sinner are alike perished." —No r surrection, either of the just or unjust.

Having thus brought the argument, on the premises stated, to the reductio ad absurdum by overthrowing the resurrection—the great foundation corner-stone of the Christian edifice—he very naturally writes Q. E. D. to his performances and quietly rests from his labors.

Now all this looks very fair and I am free to say that unless we can plainly detect the flaw in the logic, he claims the palm of victorious success. Let us, then, proceed to ask your intelligent correspondent, in full view of his argument, of whom do the passages quoted affirm they "know not any thing"—"neither have they any more—a reward—a portion," etc? The plain answer is "the dead." Then there is nothing in the context which declares that the living know not any thing—that denies to the living "a reward—a portion, etc, under the sun." Is not that the plain result of the literal interpretation against which he rebels?—that the dead know nothing and can get nothing under the sun, because they are dead and as long as they are dead. But the moment they cease to be dead and are raised from the death state, do they not become eligible to all things under the sun—in the land of the living? Is not this the inexorable logic from the premises by fair and reasonable reasoning?

It will not escape the intelligence of the careful reader that it is the present tense that is used in the passages quoted. Nothing is affirmed of the future of the dead, after their death state is passed. See the contrast in the language used in verse 5 b. "The living know that they shall die—but the dead know nothing."

We may truly ask: Can any thing be plainer?

Now when we turn to other parts of the Holy Volume, the testimony in support of the unconsciousness of the dead, is absolutely unanswered to and overwhelming.

David, the inspired Psalmist and king of Israel, saith "O spare me, that I may recover strength, before I go hence to be no more." Again: "Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? Shall the loving kindness be declared in the grave or thy faithfulness in destruction? Shall the wonders be known in the dark or thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?" Again: "In death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" Job saith "So man lieth down and riseth not, till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake or be raised out of sleep." "His sons come to honor and we know it it not and they are brought low but he perceiveth it not of them."

Daniel says "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth," etc, Isaiah saith of the dead "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust."

Jesus saith of the same class "All that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth," implying that, till that time they do not hear his voice, and Paul saith, still speaking of the dead, "Them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him," to wit at the resurrection and not before, and Paul again, speaking in Heb. xi. of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, etc., long since dead, saith "These all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promises."

In the light of this testimony, we submit that Mr. Hicks can scarcely now say the passage in question justifies with difficulties, and is simply incomprehensible, etc. As to the remaining objection that Jesus and the apostles did not correct the popular belief of their day, that there was a spiritual state of consciousness after death, we have yet to see the evidence that such was the belief of intelligent Jews contemporary with them. In the absence of proof to that effect, we need not call for any authoritative refutation of the notion. Respectfully submitted.

Atheism.

Atheism is the or at terrible of all professions. If we could believe a man to be in this state—not in his speculations, but also in his feelings—we should regard him with the most sorrowful wonder. If such a man there is, his spirit dwells in darkness; futurity is to him an eternal grave—an eternal sleep—an eternal night. To him the universe is a dead and dumb conglomerate of forms without mind, and of sounds without import. The sun is day after day in the heavens; the stars night after night in the sky, but unto him day unto day uttereth no speech, night unto night showeth no knowledge. Flowers bloom and fade; but he sees no meaning in the change. Ocean rolls in mighty waves, while the heavens bending over it in glory; he hears no voice of Almighty power, with which "deep calleth unto deep." The year revives; spring clothes itself with green; the genial sun melts the snow from the valleys; verdure covers the earth; and joy sweetens the heart of all that lives. Autumn comes, painting the leaves with various hues; gentle airs begin to murmur in the woods, flint sound sweetly on the ear, with a thoughtful and solemn music. Winter enters, last; the sky darkens, the wind is chilled, the beasts of the field all come for shelter to the abodes of man; the tempest gathers itself, beats the mountain, and rolls down its deluge into the valleys; inmates dwell safely in the house, and comfort glows upon the hearth. Amid all these affecting phenomena the Atheist acknowledges no God, no thanks to Father. Amid the affairs of nations, constituting the drama of destiny and time, in all their mysterious success of causes and consequences, the Atheist discerns no sovereign intellect, no guiding providence. Atheism makes a man acknowledge no rule but that of expediency; no standard but that of selfishness; no God but that of materialism. Jewish Chronicle.

The Holy Bible.

The world has had six thousand years to bring on its "more excellent way." What has it devised, apart from the Bible, to heal the sores of the broken, wounded, bleeding heart? What has Rome, in her ages of martial glory, or Greece in her ages of philosophic culture and refinement done, to solve the vexed problem of aching humanity? What streams of comfort has the tool, wielded by their greatest intellects, extorted from the barren rock? What trees have they planted in the world's desert, "whose fruit shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed; whose fruit shall be for meat, and the leaf for medicine?" On the other hand, how many thousands, racked with pain, tortured with doubt and anxiety, agitated with remorse, darkened with bereavement—the sick, the weary, the lonely, the dying, have been cheered and comforted by the everlasting consolation of this holy book! —Selected.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION elevates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also elevates as a means to this end, the personal advent of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with Jesus Christ as King at its head, and the immediate gathering of his elect into one body through a literal resurrection of the dead; the bona fide reception of the Holy Spirit, as an abiding principle in the heart of the believer; and the final destruction of the wicked, root and branch, both literal and spiritual, as an only kindred traits. It also advocates a hearty belief in the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Reigning Spiritually.

I was quite surprised, and a little grieved on reading,—in the Bible Banner, for August 7th, (page 59, column 3),—the following: " * * * but we belong to the royal family, a royal priesthood, to spiritually reign with Christ, as did the Corinthian brethren when they were spiritual." To the latter part of the sentence exceptions are taken. I had got so far with my lessons in the school of Christ as to have learned, that as "a spiritual seed," all true believers were constituted sons by faith, in consequence of the adopting Spirit conferred, and as children of faith they were heirs prospective, and that the heirship was in joint-ure with Christ—so that what is his is ours; his Sonship insuring our Sonship, by his Spirit given us—heirs of the promised kingdom; and that as heir of everything. "all power and all authority in heaven and in earth" is vested in Christ, resulting now in his mediation of the covenant of promise on behalf of the joint heirs until these minors should attain their majority and the time of inheriting the patrimony should come according to the specification of the will. That until the "time appointed," these heirs were to serve as "daily priests" here, in "the holy," offering up spiritual sacrifices, of "thanksgiving and praise," "till he shall come," to bestow the inheritance. But I had not learned that such "serving," however high and holy, however spiritual and "acceptable to God," constituted their inheritance, or sovereignty. I had not learned that "the nobleman who went into a far country to receive for himself the sovereignty, had returned" and assumed jurisdiction, conferring authority upon the joint-inheritors to "reign," some "over five cities," and to others, "over ten." Or, that "the stone had smitten the image," and that these earthly kingdoms had been "broken to pieces," and that the "saints had taken the kingdom," or that Christ had "bruised Satan under their feet," or that those who, in times by-gone, "suffered with Christ," and were then "sown" in death as "natural," had been "raised" as "spiritual" men, that they might "live and reign in other with him." Nor had I learned that "the third angels' message," went forth over a thousand years ago, or that it was no long since the saints "got the victory over the beast," to whom the dragon gave power, seat, and great authority; "prior to his having been in and," that we had been for eighty-four years, past in the "war of Armageddon," the saints on "the sea of glass," the "beast and false prophet in the lake of fire," Satan bound in the pit, and the devil come down unto us in great wrath because of the shortness of his time, the "day of the Lord" upon us, and we all found "repentance." Neither had I learned that the Second Adventists had got so far along in popular theology as to hold and teach a "spiritual reigning, kingdom and reign of Christ," all "in our hearts," and ergo, the kingdom appointed unto the twelve apostles (Luke xxii. 29, 30) was "the church," and the "title and honors," the "exercise of sacerdotal functions by the apostolic succession," ever since Peter received "the keys to open the door of salvation" on the day of Pentecost, for Jew and Gentile to enter into "spiritual kingdom"—and that, therefore, "Rome is the true, mother church," ruling the world legitimately by Divine appointment, "reigning spiritually" with infallible wisdom; and Protestantism "the apostacy," doomed to "destruction." Nor had I learned that Paul's irony to the "carnal" Corinthians had become "words of truth and soberness," until I read it there in the Bible Banner. But it has been said, "we are never too old to learn," and I must therefore, now learn what I never could forget when I was young. Knowledge, is power—sanctified, it is power for good; unsanctified, it is a mighty power for evil. We will then return to question the correctness of the statement that "the Corinthian brethren had reigned spiritually when they were spiritual," be one we receive, adopt and promulgate the doubtful lesson to others, which is so dogmatically set forth for our advancement in the truth. Surely, Paul and Apollos as ministers of Christ and "anointed of God," were spiritual. If any of or among them were so, and as such, had an unquestionable right to "reign and judge spiritually," if any had or did. The case of these two, Paul and Apollos, then, will determine and settle the rest. Let us, then, hear Paul. He says, (1 Cor iv. 1–6,) "Account us ministers of Christ, not heads, but his servants ministering to you as stewards, not the depositaries, but the dispensers of his grace, serving as deputies, not exercising dominion over, or reigning; but "that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches," watching over them as a faithful under shepherd, in which we are not accountable at all to men, or amenable to man's judgment in his day, but we are held answerable for faithfulness to the Lord's Judgement in his day, and we cannot even judge, ourselves, but the Lord is to judge us, therefore, (do you) judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come." In verse 6, Paul charges them with being "puffed up" for one favorite minister, and set another, in which they assumed the right of judgment to approve or disapprove of the faithful or unfaithfulness, as to God's ministers in their service to him. This exercise of dominion in lordship by them over "the house of God" was the very foundation, and cause of Paul's irony in verse 8, as the most effectual mode of rebuking them simply for their spiritual pride, vain conceit, egregious blundering folly, and carnal-mindedness. (Ili. 1.) Estius says, translate—"Already ye are filled full (with spiritual good), already ye are rich, already ye have seated yourselves upon your thrones as kings, without us."

"The emphasis is on 'already,' and 'without us.' Ye act as if ye needed no more to hunger and thirst after righteousness, and as if ye had already reached 'the kingdom' for which we have to strive and suffer. Ye are so puffed up with your favorite teachers and your own fancied spiritual attainments in knowledge through them, that ye feel like those, 'filled full' at a feast, or as a 'rich' man finding himself in his riches; so ye feel ye can now do 'without us,' your first spiritual fathers.

"I would * * * ye did—I would indeed ye did reign. I would truly it were so, and that your kingdom had really begun, that we also might reign with you." (See Jamieson—Fausset and Brown in loc).

The entire context clearly indicates the very opposite of the claim put forth in the objective paragraph, quoted at the beginning of this article. Reigning, indeed! Did not Jesus say "that the servant was not above his master," * * * "if they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you," * * * and "in the world ye shall have tribulation"? Did you find it true, Paul? or did you "reign spiritually" with Christ? "Reign spiritually"! But you say, "reign?" Well, let me tell you how I reigned! Of the Jews five times I received forty stripes save one, (193). Thrice was I beaten with rods. (Continued), once I was stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, and for a night and a day I have been in the deep; in journyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness. Beside those things, that are outside, that which came upon me daily, the care of all the churches. Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is offended, and I burn not? If I must need glory, I will glory of the things which concern mine infirmities. In Damascus the governor * * * garrisoned the city to apprehend me, and through a window I was let down by the wall in a basket, and escaped him, and I was shamefully entreated at Philippi, I. But from boat fully knows * * * my manner of life, purpose, faith, long-suffering, charity, patience, persecutions, afflictions which came unto me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystria; what persecutions I endured * * * you, and all that will live godly (spiritual) shall suffer persecution * * * if we suffer—with him—we shall also reign with him. I am now ready to be offered, * * * I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only but unto all them also that love his appearing! Therefore, brethren, dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and my crown, I have told you all about it. Here is my answer; and if you can call that reigning; "reigning spiritually," then I, Paul, reigned! But it was a sorrowful reign, one without a sceptre, without a kingdom or a crown, and one without dominion, a reign of persecution, a reign of terror and of blood! Surely it must be a most desperate case that drives its votaries or to the old position of the Papist against the Reformers for its support and this "spiritual reigning," is a "sample brick," right out of the front center of the main building, which (loving examiner), there is no necessity to look at the rest.

The writer quoted above, has the "souls," of Rev. xx. 4, resurrected, "living again," and "reigning" from A. D., 302 to 1792, (1000 years,) and has them "slain" under the fifth seal in the Dragon power (Rev. vi. 9,) prior to 302, which makes the "beheaded souls" live again, have part in the first resurrection" 908 years or more, before they were "killed," according to Wm Miller, who placed the opening of the fifth seal in A. D. 1700, and in force therein to 1792. (Miller's Lectures vol 2. p. 183). Of the 1000 years, this leaves only 92 for the "reigning," as shown by Miller vs. Morrill. Which is right? Who's mixed? But singular combinations of numbers, events, characters, and prophetic periods, may be expected when the object in view is to sustain a theory by putting "the thousand years in the past."

Christianity in the Catacombs.

Speaking of art in the catacombs of Rome, a recent writer says:

You recognize the novelty of the Christian painting at every step by the intensity of feeling, by the inspiration which animates those rude figures, and which determines their arrangement and suggests their forms. No picture of distress, despair, or desolation is there where desolation must have assumed its most fearful aspects. In those dark vaults you may see now the Good Shepherd gently bearing the young lamb in his arms, showing his protection to the weak and innocent; now four compartments in which are drawn subjects from the Old and New Testaments surrounded by garlands of flowers and fruit; now it is Noah in his ark; now Moses striking the rock, Job on the dunghill, or the miracle at Cana, the multiplication of loaves, or Lazarus rising from the tomb. Meanwhile only it is Daniel in the lion's den—a symbol of martyrdom by the wild beasts; or Jonah ejected from the whale, a symbol of martyrdom by water; or the three children in the fiery furnace, a symbol of martyrdom by fire. These scenes of triumphant martyrdom were painted to give courage and consolation. But no traces of contemporary persecutions, no representations of Christians slaughtered do we find nor scenes of bloodshed to awake hatred and revenge; while images of peace, love and hope, are predominant. This is Christian painting in the catacombs. This is Christianity as it was before."

The Iron Bedstead.

A definite Gospel scheme is sometimes stigmatized as "an iron bedstead." It is said, that those who use it, must be either stretched out or cut off, to fit them to the size of the bedstead.

Although this term is decidedly applied to a well defined Gospel, and we can see but little significance in using it in that way, yet we will accept it, in order to show that the Gospel is a particular scheme, for the accomplishment of a particular purpose, which must be apprehended, and received by faith in order to salvation.

1. A bedstead is a place of rest. So is the Gospel.

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest to your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light. Matt. xi. 28, 30. Let us therefore fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. Again, if they shall enter into my rest. There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God." Heb. iv. 1, 9.

2. A bedstead has certain fixed dimensions.

It is of a certain width, and length, and height. And it has a certain capacity, and if it is made of iron, it will last a life-time without change. So it is with the Gospel. It has certain fixed and well-defined dimensions. Its arrangements are immutable, and never can be changed. When we have learned its whole, or any of its parts, we have learned them forever.

How large, then, is this Gospel scheme? It is as large as is God's purpose concerning the world, as stated in his covenant with Abraham, and with David. And God said to Abraham, I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee for an everlasting covenant, and I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies, and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed. In this covenant God has promised, that the seed of Abraham shall take possession of all the nations of the earth, and subdue them by blessing them that bless Abraham, and by cursing them that curse Abraham, and thus, bless all the nations of the earth forever and ever.

God said to David: I have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David my servant. Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne; his name shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me. He shall judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth, and men shall be blessed in him; all nations shall call him blessed. In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth. He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth, and his enemies shall lick the dust. All kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him; and the whole earth shall be filled with his glory, forever and ever.

In this covenant with David, God's purpose concerning the world is the same as it was in his covenant with Abraham. The seed of David, which is also the seed of Abraham, shall be established upon his throne, and shall have dominion over the nations of the earth, and shall judge them righteously. He shall break the oppressor to pieces; his enemies shall lick the dust, and all nations shall be blessed in him, and serve him, as long as the sun and moon endure.

These covenants teach us, that God's purpose concerning the world is this, but the time will come when all the nations of the earth shall be blessed, so as to be cursed no more. That in order to accomplish this work, the seed of Abraham and of David, shall take possession of the nations, and judge them righteously, and in this way subdue them and bless them so that the will of God will be done in earth as it is done in heaven forever and ever.

This purpose is confirmed by two immutable things in which it was impossible for God to lie, his promise and his oath. Therefore, it can never be altered in breadth, or length, or purpose, but must always remain the same as yielding belief, by which all who use it must be measured. This purpose is just as large and just as long, as the kingdom that was promised when the world was made, and which was given to Nebuchadnezzar, and afterward became subject to the Medes and Persians, due to the Greeks, then to the Romans, and which is to be given to the seed of Abraham and of David, even the kingdom where all people, nations, and languages dwell under the whole heaven.

This bedstead defines and measures the mission of Jesus Christ. He was born to reign the throne of his father David, and to perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember God's holy covenant, the oath which he swore to our father Abraham. He lived for the same purpose. He died in fulfilment of the same promise, and was raised from the dead to sit on David's throne, and to fulfill the promise made to the fathers. He went to heaven to receive for himself the same kingdom. He will remain there until the time comes when he is to possess the gate of his enemies. He will then receive the kingdom and return. And when he comes, then he will sit upon the throne of his glory, and have power over all nations, to subdue them, and to bless them, all in fulfillment of the promise which God made to Abraham and to David.

This same promise made of God to the fathers, measures the hope and the consolation of all the heirs of promise, who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before them in the Gospel. It also measures the faith which was once delivered to the saints, and is the very Gospel which was preached to Abraham.

This is the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, which was preached by Christ, and by the apostles, and which must be preached in all the world. Thus we have set forth the dimensions of this iron bedstead.

3. What are the conditions of being saved upon this plan?

The terms of salvation upon this plan are the same to all. Whatever is necessary for one to do is necessary for all. Whatever one may neglect to do as a condition, may be neglected by all.

Faith, repentance, baptism, and a holy life are the conditions of salvation on this plan. But faith is the real condition, and all other conditions are subordinate to faith, and are the fruit of faith. Whatever else we may do, without faith it is impossible to please God. We must have faith in God, and in the Gospel, and in Jesus Christ, as the seed of Abraham and of David, and as the Son of God. We must believe in him as the Messiah of the prophets, as the Prophet that was to be raised up, and as the one sacrificed for the sins of the world; as the child that was to be born, upon whose shoulders the government was to rest; as the one whom God raised from the dead, and set him down at his right hand, till his enemies shall be made his footstool; and as the one whom God will send at that time to occupy the throne of his father David, and accomplish the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.

To have faith in Christ as he stands in the record, is the same as to have faith in God, and in the gospel. To have faith in the gospel is the same as to have faith in Christ. God, and the gospel, and Christ are inseparably connected together. God originally devised the gospel scheme. This gospel reveals what God has prepared to do for the world. The seed of Abraham, which is Christ, is the instrumentality by which that purpose will be accomplished.

If one man must believe the gospel in order to be saved, all must. If one man must repent, or perish, all men must do the same, or perish. If in this dispensation one man must be baptized in order to be saved, all must be baptized for the same reason. If one man must be buried with him by baptism into death, all must be baptized in the same way. If one man must be planted in the likeness of his death, in order to be in the likeness of his resurrection, all must do the same thing for the same reason. If it is necessary for one to have one Lord, one faith, and one baptism, it is necessary for all to have the same. If one man must deny himself and take up his cross and follow Christ in order to be his disciple, then all must do the same thing to secure the same end. If one man must love Christ more than he loves his father or mother, or wife or children, or houses or lands, in order to be worthy of him, then all others must do the same for the same reason. If one man must love the appearing of Christ, in order to receive a crown from him at that time, then all must. If one man must overcome, and become worthy of the kingdom, and of the resurrection from the dead, in order to sit down with Christ in his throne, and have power over the nations, then it will be necessary for all to do the same thing for the same reason. If every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as Christ is pure, then if any man does not purify himself even as Christ is pure, he does not have this hope in him. Thus it is evident that the conditions of this salvation are the same to all.

4. What about the stretching out, and the cutting off process?

It is evident, from what has been said, that the sinner must be conformed to his bedstead, and not the bedstead to the sinner. As there is but one gospel by which we can be saved, and as the conditions of this salvation are the same to all, it follows that all sinners must conform to this particular gospel, if they would be saved. We have now come to the stretching out process. How is this done? Every man who is to be saved by this gospel, must be stretched to the extent of his ability, in obeying all the conditions of salvation as shown above. He must believe with all his heart, might, mind, and strength, in God, in the gospel and in Christ, who is to save men on the plan of this gospel. He must repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. He must deny himself of ungodliness, and worldly lusts, and live soberly and righteously, and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of our Savior, Jesus Christ. He must love the things pertaining to this hope, more than he loves his father or mother, or his wife or children, or his houses or lands, or his own life; and after this manner he must yield obedience to all the conditions of his salvation. This is all the stretching out he will need to fit him to this iron bedstead.

Now for the cutting off process. How must this be done? He must put off the old man with his deeds, and become a new man. He must put off anger, and wrath, and malice, and blasphemy, and all filthy communication out of his mouth. He must put off the works of the flesh, which are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, and revellings, and such like. They that do these things cannot inherit the kingdom of God. Be not deceived; neither the unrighteous, nor idolaters, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, nor such like, shall inherit the kingdom of God. These are the things that must be cut off.

This at stetching out, and this cutting off will fit him to be saved by the one gospel plan.

The Roman Sentinel.

When Pompeii was destroyed, there were very many found in the ruins of it who were afterwards found in very different situations. Some were in deep vaults, as if they had gone there for security; some were found in lofty chambers. But where did they find the Roman sentinel? Standing at the city gate with his hand still grasping the war weapon, where he had been placed by his captain. And there, while the heavens threatened him, and while the earth shook beneath him, there where the lava stream rolled, he had stood at his post; and there, after a thousand years, he was found. So let Christians stand to their duty in the post at which their Captain has placed them.

Get to the end of things. The gold mines of Scriptures are not the top soil. You must open a shaft. The precious diamonds of experience are not picked up in the roadway; their secret places are far down. Get down into the vitality, the divinity of the word of God, and seek to possess with it all the inward work of the blessed Spirit.—Spurgeon.

Dare to be singular, when you see all around you to be wrong.

THE RESTITUTION

PLYMOUTH, IND.,... Dec. 18th, 1872

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞We hope our brethren every where will make an extra effort to come to our Christmas meeting. Remember the time, Saturday and Sunday before Christmas.

☞The financial pressure of the times is nowhere more severely felt than by Publishers of Religious Papers. We clip the following, assuring our friends and patrons that it is emphatically applicable to our own circumstances. The friends of truth must sustain it in these days by a greater or less amount of sacrifice. God's cause and worship, in fact, has never been sustained in any other way. For encouragement please read Heb. xiii. 10 and Psa. l. 5. This dispensation nears its close, its peculiar work, confined to Christ's disciples, is almost accomplished, and the Son of Man will soon come in his Father's glory with his angels. "Then shall he reward every man according to his works." Matth. xvi. 27. S. A. C.

Everybody is pinched, and thousands of pinches concentrate upon religious papers. They feel the pinch of every subscriber who delays payment or discontinues his paper. Some papers have lost thousands of subscribers, and suffer exceedingly from non-payment of dues. The Baptist Union has lost some, though not a large number, but a great many fail to pay promptly, and on that account we are exceedingly pressed for funds to meet current expenses. Every dollar that can be sent us now will be doubly welcome; indeed without assistance from this direction we must suffer very seriously. Our friends will relieve us by sending on every dollar they can spare, and doing it promptly.

☞The war cloud in eastern Europe has not cleared away. Some days it lowers darkly, again it seems to grow lighter and whiter; but still it hangs on the horizon. There is disturbance in that direction, foretelling fear and untold complexities. The attitude of England is looked upon with great anxiety. She is now expected by Russia to do what she herself, some months ago, required as a condition of peace among the great powers. Meanwhile Servia suffers, the Christians in Bulgaria are in trouble, and all eyes turn toward Constantinople. The war may be delayed, but it seems inevitable; and when it comes it will be dreadful.

Shrewd interpreters of the Bible prophesies are studying the ominous demonstrations with unusual interest. There is thought to be an movement of fulfillment to divine Revelation soon to be consummated. The Jews are main toward Palestine, the Rothschilds (Jews) are ready to loan vast sums to Russia; and the Roman power wanes. The pope is reported to be dangerously ill, his Antonelli is dead, and the strange crisis in the political situation in our country all add interest to the times. Our Centennial year closes amid scenes of peculiar significance. The New Year must bring great events to pass.

Jerusalem the Home of the Future.

It is said that Father Beckx, General of the Society of Jesus, has a plan for the purchase of Palestine from Turkey, with a view to make Jerusalem the Rome of the future. Negotiations are being carried on with great vigor between the Vatican and the Porte through the Patriarch Hassoun. Jaffa will be made a distributing harbor, and a railroad will be constructed from Jerusalem to Bethlehem.

The forming indicates a new point of departure. Truly, Jerusalem is becoming a "burdensome stone for all people." Great events seem to be rapidly lifting up their marking pages of human history. Of course we may not know what point is to be gained in this new departure of the Pope, but one thing seems certain, and that is well confirmed by the almost unanimous drift of modern ideas and schemes towards Jerusalem.

International Exposition.

It has been remarked that the great Industrial Exhibitions have been the precursors of war and revolution. Prince Albert was the first to give these exposition a charm or compulsiveness in the world. The far-famed crystal palace was opened in London, May 1, 1851, by Queen Victoria. The number of visitors was 6,170,000. This was followed in two years by the Crimean war, involving France, Great Britain, Sardinia and Turkey against Russia. In 1855 an international exhibition was held at Paris, and was opened May 15, by the Emperor Napoleon III in person. The number of visitors was 4,853,304. This was followed in 1859 by the Franco-Austrian war, terminating in the victories of Magenta and Solferino.

The second great national exposition of 1876 was opened April 1, 1867, by the Queen, and with reference to its display of curiosities will be remembered open. This was followed by the Franco-Prussian war in which Napoleon lost his crown and the pope his temporal power. The Vienna national exposition was opened by the Emperor William, May 1, 1873; the total number of visitors was 7,254,687. This was soon followed by the present conflict in Turkey, of which the wisest can not discern the end.

In the present year has been held the great Centennial Exposition of these United States, opened May 10, by President Grant, and attended by more than 3,000,000 visitors—and what is to follow? The situation of affairs in our own country is fearful in the extreme. Is one century to be the age of this boasted republic? We shall see.

S. A. C.

Christ's Reign Confined Exclusively to the Earth.

"Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming; afterward the end." 1 Cor. XV. 23, 24.

1. The same Greek preposition occurs in the first word of the 23d verse, which is translated after in the previous verse. If the word eita signifies after, in one of these verses it signifies the same then in the other verse. It has been eighteen hundred years since the resurrection of Christ, and yet they that are his, are his still. Sleeping in the dust of the earth. According to the record of the work of Christ between his coming and the end of the cosmos so clearly described by the apostle, there must elapse at least one thousand years. It will be remembered by every reader of my previous article, that Christ will remain at his Father's right hand until his father makes his enemies his footstool, by investing him with authority to reign over them, and no longer. He will then return to commence his reign, and afterward the end, or rest of the dead. But how long after? Paul answers this question emphatically. He says, "For he must reign, till he has put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." 1 Cor. xv. 25, 26. According to Rev. xx. 4, 5, this work of subjugating or destroying his enemies will occupy one thousand years. And by comparing the foregoing testimony of the apostle and the Revelation, it will be seen that at the beginning of the thousand years Christ will come, raise the righteous dead and commence his reign over his enemies whom the father will have given him dominion over; and at the end of the thousand years he will destroy death and raise the rest of the dead.

2. Having put down all rule, power and authority he will deliver up the kingdom to the father, by subordinating himself to the father, having been invested with supreme authority to rule the world for a limited period of time. Then the head of all things on earth will be Christ, and the head of Christ will be the supreme ruler of all worlds. Then the closing doxology can be sung by Christ and all the redeemed of earth, "thine is the kingdom, the power and glory forever." And from thence Christ will reign as the legate of his father while the sun and moon shall shine, and the days in heaven shall roll on.

3. Christ returns to Zion, the place of his throne, and the metropolis of his kingdom before he commences his reign. The Father having commanded his son to sit at his right hand until he makes his enemy a footstool by divesting him with authority to rule over them, will send "him to Zion; and then in the language of David, the "Lord shall send the rod of his strength (his son) out of Zion (and say) rule thou in the midst of thine enemies." Psa. cx. 2. What a contrast between the passive position of Christ, sitting at the right hand of his Father, far removed from his enemies, and his active position upon Zion ruling in the midst of his enemies. In the former position the Father reigns alone, in the latter the Son reigns alone. In none the Son is sitting upon his Father's throne millions of miles away from his enemies, but then the son is enthroned in Zion and reigning in the midst of his enemies. And I may add in the former the Father is ruling over Christ's enemies, while his Son is pleading in their behalf, (1 Tim. ii. 5,) and in the latter the Son is ruling over his own enemies, while the Father is interceding for them. Thus, the father says, "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill Zion. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Be wise now, therefore, O ye kings; be instructed, ye judges of earth. Serve the Lord (the son) with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the son lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him." Psa. ii. 6, 12,

1. According to Psa. 2, 6 and ex. 2 God enthrones his son in Zion and then sends the rod or scepter of his power out of Zion.

2. The Father commands his son to rule in the midst of his enemies.

3. The Father pleads with the king and judges of earth to submit to his Son or his Son will destroy them.

4. The Father pronounces a blessing upon all those who will put their trust in his Son. The foregoing establishes the following points beyond all doubt.

1. The Father gives his Son supreme control of this world for one thousand years, at the expiration of which he delivers up his high behest of power and reigns subordinate to his Father.

2. Zion will be the locality of his throne and metropolis. Indeed no other locality is promised Christ for his throne and metropolis in the bible I would just as soon try to remove Christ's kingdom from the earth as to remove his throne from Zion.

3. He returns to Zion before he commences his reign. Speaking prophetically of Christ enthroned in Zion and ruling in the midst of his enemies David says, "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power." Psa. cx. 3. And again he says, "The Lord has sworn, and will not repent, thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchizedek" v. 4. According to Paul Melchisedec was king of Jerusalem and priest of the most high God. Heb. vii. 1. Having shown in a former article that Christ cannot be the antitype of Melchisedec, according to the typical tabernacle upon earth, I will now prove that he can and will be a priest after the order of Melchisedec, when he shall be a priest upon his throne in Jerusalem. "Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts saying, behold the man whose name is The Branch; and he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord; and shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a priest upon his throne." Zech. vi. 12, 13. Jeremiah gives the time when this righteous Branch shall be raised up, and the place and people over which he shall rule, and for whom he shall officiate as priest. He says, In those days, and at that time, will I cause the BRANCH of righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely * * For thus saith the Lord; David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel. Neither shall the priests and Levites want a man before me to offer burnt offerings, and to kindle meat offering, and to do sacrifices continually. Thus saith the Lord; if ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season. Then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the priests my ministers." Jer. xxxiii. 15, 21. Putting the two in any of these two prophecies together, we learn (1) that Christ will be a kingly priest upon the throne of David, when he shall reign over the house of Israel, and when he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. Have these predictions been fulfilled in the past? No. Then they must be fulfilled in the future.

2. Judah and Jerusalem will have been restored and be dwelling securely in the Lord, when Christ shall be a king and priest upon his throne. Has not Judah been scattered among all nations, and Jerusalem in ruins during the past eighteen hundred years? How then could Christ be the antitype of Melchisedec in the past?

3. The throne of David and the house of Israel will have been restored when this righteous Branch shall be a king and priest upon his throne. But both have been in ruins since Christ's ascension to heaven; therefore his reign, as a kingly priest, must be future.

4. From the time this righteous Branch, or king, shall be raised up, or shall be a priest and king; David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of Israel" (or as repeated at the 21st v., "a son to sit upon his throne.") "Neither shall the priests, the Levite want a man to offer burnt offerings, and kindle meat offerings, and to sacrifices continually." David has wanted a son upon his throne, and the priests a minister, for eighteen hundred years: but when David's royal heir shall take his position upon his throne in Jerusalem, as the antitype of David and Melchisedec, from that time forward David shall never want a successor upon his throne, nor the Levites a priest. With this view, all is clear and harmonious; but so that the view which make Christ a king and priest in heaven there are insuperable difficulties. And with the view that Christ will not reign until he returns to Zion, and "rules in the midst of his enemies," as the supreme ruler of the world until he puts down all imposing rule, power and authority, gives the ex. Psa. The whole work of ruling is ascribed to the Father while Christ is in heaven, and the whole work of ruling and subjugating the world is ascribed to the son after his return to earth. He "will go out of Zion." He will "rule in the midst of his enemies." The "people shall be willing in the day of his power." He will be a priest after the order of Melchisedec forever. He "will strike through kings in the day of his wrath. He shall judge among the heathen; he shall fill the places with the dead bodies; he shall wound the heads (kings) of many countries. He shall drink of the brook in the way: therefore shall he lift up his head." His reigning as the antitypal priest of Melchisedec, belongs to the same throne, kingdom, glory, and independent rule. Why sever the fourth verse from the two verses going before, and the three verses following. What necessity of severing the connecting link in the indissoluble chain that binds the antitype of Melchisedec and David to the only throne, metropolis and kingdom promised him in the whole book of God? The fulfillment of all these predictions are either before or after Christ returns to Zion, and commences ruling in the midst of his enemies. Which?

1 Cor. xv. 23.

What a scene of indescribable glory that will be when the Lord himself shall descend to gather his redeemed to the home He has prepared for them! What a moment of unsullied delight, when at the shout, the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, his sleeping saints, raised, and living saints, changed, "shall be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall they ever be with the Lord!"

All the hosts of the redeemed shall be marshalled there, in bodies of glory, instinct with Divine life—the saints of old, who on the faith of a promise were worshippers, pilgrims, soldiers—those to whose faith dens and caves bore witness—of whom the world was not worthy; the elders and just men who "died in faith, not having received the promise," shall be there; "Abraham, Isaac and Jacob;" "Noah, Daniel, and Job;" "Moses and Elias" shall be there; Abel, and the long line of Martyrs; Aaron, and the Lord's priests; Samuel, and the Lord's prophets; David, and the men of faith who sat on his throne; all God's renowned ones, the perfected just, shall stand in that scene for which they in faith waited.

"The Church of the first born," too, as the bride prepared for the Lord, shall take her place there; all down to the last re-born soul, who shall form the complement of the mystery. She, too, will recount her worthies in that morning; the many who have stood forth in other days, and who stand forth in our own days, as the witnesses of God's truth and the jewels of God's salvation, all shall ascend together, and swell the countless multitude of Christ's own—shall take their place there in their respective glories—"every man in his own order"—star differing from star in glory, and each reflecting the image of Jesus.

There will be seats too in the kingdom; thrones for rulership over the tribes of Israel; mansions in the Father's house; thrones round the throne of God; all shall be occupied by the redeemed, each invested with the insignia sovereign love has assigned him. All will "know even as they are known"—each known to each—all known to all. What a season of unutterable joy of holy fraternized communion! But the rapturous thought of each one of this innumerable company will be, they are Christ's—"I am my Beloved's, and his desire is towards me." To be Christ's own will be a source of deep mutual pleasure, then—(should it not be now?) The absorbing object of their hearts inspired vision will be Christ—to be forever with him—to behold him—to cast their crowns at his feet, paying the heart's deep homage to him in one united utterance of "Thou art worthy, for Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood."

The power of Christ's resurrection will be applied to the bodies of his saints; they will be raised because he has been raised; by virtue of having his life and being indwelt by his spirit, they will be presented in the perfection of that life in its full triumph over death, and him who had the power of death; they are raised not for judgment—that to them is passed, Christ bore it for them—but because they are Christ's; Christ's resurrection was the first fruits, and the pledge of that abundant ingathering. He was the first sheaf presented to the Lord, the sample and earnest of the harvest that shall then be gathered into the garner of God; they will be raised up, and presented to the glory with him. He is the expression of the glory, and they stand in him. The re-united dust shall be re-animated and vivified with Divine life; the weakness shall be transformed into power, corruption into incorruption, dishonor into glory, the natural body into a spiritual body; it will bear the impress of the heavenly, even as it has borne the image of the earthly. Where is the sting of death? Gone! Where the grave's victory? Gone! Victory, full, complete, eternal, is theirs—Satan bruised under their feet forever.

The saints will stand before the tribunal of Christ to receive the rewards of the kingdom; but they will appear there as glorified saints; no stain of sin shall be there, the last trace of the curse shall have been removed, the reproach of Eden clean and forever rolled away; the death of the slain Lamb will be learnt in the light of glory, and in the presence of God.

Earth may move on still in its course and projects, as it did when its light was set in the darkness of the cross; its religion may go on too, quite compatible with its godless pursuits, until judgment break the spell of its delusion and dissolve the dream—awaking men to the deadly reality of falling "into the hands of the living God." The light—God's light—shall have been removed to its own proper sphere, there to reflect each its peculiar brightness, "shining as the brightness of the firmament"—"as the sun in the kingdom of their Father"—being with him who is the sun and centre of that heavenly system, undisturbed, unobscured by the clouds of unbelief or doubt. They are with him as in nearness on in the course of the cosmos of God, whether relating to the heavens above or the heavens beneath in the presence of his glory, they shall be presented faultless, "with exceeding joy." Will he "take his great power, and reign," swaying the sceptre of righteous supremacy over a judged and renovated earth? They will be with him there. After the course of the kingdom shall be complete, and he shall have delivered up the kingdom to the Father, will he be tabernacles in the home, the dwelling place of righteousness, in the new heavens and new earth? They that are his will still be with him. They are Christ's present and eternal portion, and their place is to be "forever with the Lord." Whether in the kingdom or in the new heavens and new earth, they will enjoy the rest of God in its perfection, and bear witness to his glory in the exalted sphere in which grace has set them, and for which grace has adapted them.

The hope for which we wait is no lost hope, but the kingdom set up, not Israel's restoration, or the deliverance of creation from its present bondage (all true in its place)—but God's Son from heaven! He is coming, not to fulfill prophecy, but to fulfill promise—"I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." Judgment waits for this! the restoration of Israel, creation's deliverance—all waits suspended until the rapture of the saints—"they that are Christ's at his coming."

After the Lord Jesus has gathered his own to himself in the heavens, he will make good the prophetic word in its bearing towards the earth, and deliver creation, bringing it into the liberty of redemption.

Will may the affections of the heart be moved at the prospect! Will may the mind of that well-known Scripture reverberate in the inner man "Behold I come quickly!" Yes, he is coming to appropriate to himself those which he has purchased at his own personal cost; to whom he can say, "I have redeemed thee; thou art mine!" to surround himself with the trophies of redeeming love. The Father's will will be fully accomplished in the resurrection and glorification of those who were the objects of it for this they were saved. Our necessities were not the first cause; that is ascribed to the redemption he has wrought, and the objects of his love are prepared for the glory that awaits them. They shall stand in the clear unclouded light of divine righteousness, and be at home there. The robe in which they are arrayed is divinely righteous and meet for the occasion.

God, resting in the complacency of Omnipotent love, will welcome them himself; his own immediate presence will be their rest; his unclouded glory the sphere of their worship; God and he himself their light and their temple. He will dwell in their midst; they his people—he their God.

What a prospect! Even the anticipation of such a hope lifts our spirits above the clouds and mists of earth; but we need purified hearts to be prepared to allow the rays of that glory to reach within and shed its light abroad there. There should be nothing allowed to cast a shade with that holy scene; it will darken the vision and confuse the affections. The Holy Spirit, will be leading us within, to look after the home, and rid it of its corruptions and intruders, instead of opening the windows of the heart to allow the light of a new heaven to fill and irradiate it with its illuminating glory.

On that our constant position may be—as those who are "turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God"—"to wait for his Son from heaven," with the heart purified and the eye single, with staff and girdle, ready to welcome the shout in the air, whenever it may be uttered; ready! with nothing to leave behind that would retard on upward flight, nothing that may clash with that all-expressive—"Amen! Even so, come, Lord Jesus!"—Selected.

No Fear of Death in Dying.

A striking fact in connection with the dying is that they are not afraid of death. You notice this even in executions. The majority of men who are hanged are reported to have died "game." Death following injury or disease is seldom accompanied with fear. Disease dulls the intelligence so that the attention may not be fully comprehended, or there may be pain, and death looked upon as a relief. Nature, by a kind provision, seems to prepare for the flight of the spirit. As the hold upon life grows weaker, so does the desire for life grow less, and to scarcely a single instance within my experience, or within that of my professional brethren, with whom I have conversed upon this point, has not the dying man relinquished life at last without sending reluctance or fear. The several physical phenomena which accompany the act of dying vary considerably in the early stages with the causes which produce death. There is much similarity in the latter steps. Death offers then a physiognomy which once witnessed is not hard to recognize again. Among the more constant signs are the falling pulse, which gradually becomes imperceptible—the [redacted] the wrist and last at the brow itself—the extremities grow cold; the countenance changes as the venous blood courses the arteries; the skin grows clammy as the vessels relax; the eye glazes; the jaw drops; the fluids accumulate in the windpipe, causing the "death rattle," so called, as the air passes through; the breath comes short and hally ceases. As the red blood leaves the brain the judgment is sometimes obscure and the senses deficient. Speech is incoherent. Many times "last words" are imagined by affection to mean more than intended, if there was any intention at all. "It grows dark" or "more light" are common sayings as the optic nerve loses its stimulus, or strange sights may be seen or sounds heard, as occurs sometimes in the still twilight. The hallucinations of the dying may be often explained upon natural causes.

An Unseen Saviour.

As yet, we have often been told, sin not conquer love. The victory of love over absence, when that love was once grounded in presence, is a strange thing. It is part of every family history, and consecrates all our griefs. But to love one we have never seen, known to us only by his biography and by a spiritual power we can not explain, is one of the mysteries of the grace of God. And yet it a fact. Christianity is not the adoption of a principle, but the love of a person. Children who know nothing of principles, philosophers weary of theories which yielded only chaff to the toil of logic, have found in the love of a personal Lord the answer to every longing of their hearts. Here is one of the greatest facts of human history. There once lived and died and ascended from earth a man who, though never seen on earth again, has commanded the hearts of millions of men with an attachment whose bonds, like those of gravitation, are at once invisible and almighty.

Christians sometimes say, "If I could only see my Saviour and hear his voice, it would help me to a sense of his love and friendship. He would be to me less an idea and more distinctly a person." Nor is the remark entirely without foundation in experience. There is danger lest the personal Jesus may become obscure behind his doctrine, and we may think we are loving our invisible Lord when we are rather loving the truths for which he stands, his humility, grace and mercy. —Sel.

Man's love to God is like the changing moon; his is like the solid rock. Man's love is like the passing meteor with its fitful gleam; his is like the fixed star, shining far above, clear and serene, from age to age in their own changeless firmament.—Rev J. M'Duff.

Hard speech between those who have loved is hideous in the memory. Like the sight of green sea and beauty a fall into vice and ruin.

The Consummation.

The road must — where end.—
Tis not for us but those to read,
That lead to life within
The jurisdiction of God.

The storm must soon time cease,—
The storm that is re-round;
And shelter, calm, and rest,
Be joy'd among kind.

The prayers, and cries, and sighs
Which up to heaven we send Must one day in the song
Of glory have an end.

O that we now had reached
The rest's sab[illegible] over;
That we had cherry ended,
And gained for [illegible]!

Ah, Lord! there are whiles,
And years, and days, and hours;
But none avoid the hour
Of those last verdant flowers.

From Brother Myers.

Brother Read:—The last two numbers of the RESTITUTION have put in their appearance at a much earlier date than usual. Also, the spirit of the articles, and the make up of the paper, are so excellent that all combined put us in a good humor, and make us feel first rate toward everybody. We can, with a great deal of satisfaction, hand these numbers out to the world to read.

It would be quite a source of satisfaction to me to return to Plymouth and enjoy the Christmas meeting, but a combination of circumstances render it impracticable. Brother Hill, in a recent letter to me states that he expects to attend.

Brother Wilcox:—I have just read your article in response to mine. I accept your explanation. Although I misunderstood your meaning and intention in penning the phrase, "salvation by faith," yet I do not now regret that I wrote as I did, as it has been the means of drawing out many good thoughts, and enabling us to see that we do see eye to eye.

I heartily agree with you that works [illegible] motionless. It is not for an [illegible] and God blesses a man; it is not [illegible] re an act, or after an act, but in [illegible] act. Further, a man should not [illegible] God simply as a duty, but as a [illegible] sure; his obedience should not be [illegible] of the servant, but that of the [illegible] ection.

Brother Wagoner:—Have just read and re-read your article in the RESTITUTION of November 29, entitled, What is on the Lord's Side? I admire the spirit and tone of the article very much, and your exhortation to the brethren "not to move the ancient landmarks." But let me say to you and a few others who ignore associations, that there is no danger ahead. I know of none among us who are in favor of compromising away with the world or with any one else any vital truth. The almost recent effort in Southern Indiana, and here in Iowa, to unite our brethren and Adventists, involves no sacrifice of truth necessary more than you make in your article when you say, "When the question is asked how much faith is necessary to qualify a person for baptism, the answer is, Faith in the great facts of the kingdom), and not in the details of the fact."

Now, if you are satisfied with your own language as given above, rest assured that there is no danger. But let me ask of you, and for the satisfaction of others, do you really comprehend the situation of the field before us? A word or two upon this point. I am now residing within one-fourth of a mile of where the effort for union was made in Iowa, and have learned somewhat of the movement and of the work proposed, and know that there is no occasion for any compromise of the truth. I am speaking half of my time to an Advent congregation, and present to them, as occasion offers, about the same things I preached in Indiana. My discourses, so far, have been acceptable; and one of this congregation, is a stockholder in the RESTITUTION. But that you may see that I am not unnecessarily excited in this work, I will give you an extract from a letter to me of recent date:

"I am almost out of patience with some of the correspondents of the RESTITUTION who are opposing a union with Adventists. It is strange they do not comprehend the situation. They do not seem to understand that the Adventists have of late made great advances in the truth, and also in the way of salvation and Christian charity, and are now doing out their hands to us to help them along. Just as soon as they can be rescued from the control of a few of their leaders they will gladly embrace all the truth. I say, let us help them, not by holding them off at arms length, but by taking them to our arms, and heart's, and in a spirit of love and kindness teach them the way.

Yours, &c. H. J. HILL.

In addition to this, I will ask you if you do not remember of having read in the RESTITUTION, in the last twelve or eighteen months, some articles from the pens of E. A. Marsh, G. W. Stetson and others of the same body?

A word further: The experience of five years of almost constant labor as an evangelist teaches me that the presentation of the truth in love will do more by ten fold than harsh, railing words and actions. That if ever we expect to reach any man or community with the truth, we must not in the first effort cut their ears off, but into them drop a truth to-day, another to-morrow, and another the next day, until finally all may be received, digested, and acted upon. Paul, as well as experience and principles of to-day, teaches us that strong argument to young children is not the best food with which to commence. Be patient; be charitable.

Brethren Magruder, Wagoner, and others:—I have read your articles and strictures, and of your votes relative to the "Constitution of the Christian Association of America," and must say, in all candor, kindness and courtesy, that I think, in some instances, you are too severe. It is true, it is sometimes necessary to deal severely with some things; but I think not so much so with this, when all things are considered. But before I make my points numbers 1, 2, 3, &c., I do not desire to be understood as either condemning or defending the paper referred to; only setting forth a few facts as they really exist, and then appearing in behalf of co-operation.

1. It was never thought of by the framers of those articles that our local congregations should give up their organizations and all emerge into one body, and then create a head, such as a bishop or a deacon, or the pope at Rome; but that those local organizations should remain independent.

2. It was never thought they would become to be church, or any part of the church, a creed; but to the contrary the framer stands to-day bitterly opposed to creeds and to creed-making now-a-days.

Question: Then what was the design? Simply a plan by which we might co-operate in the work of evangelization. As to whether it is a good one or not, I state again that I do not propose now to defend or condemn, only that which and how many among brethren are worth more than all lines of expediency.

But is it right that we should co-operate in any good work? I answer that it is at least Scriptural, as we learn from Paul in 2 Cor. xi. 1, 2.

Then, do you oppose co-operation? I am satisfied you do not, because two or more of you co-operate in a church organization, and then your congregations co-operate with each other in a general meeting, which you designate a conference. Then, so far as co-operation is concerned, we are all of one mind.

Now, do you hold your meetings illegally, legitimately, or chance, or do you have order and system in them? I am persuaded that with you order prevails. Now, if you have order and system in your meetings, then you have a plan in this work of co-operation, and by which it is originated and conducted. This being true, then so far as a plan is concerned, again we are alike, and not alike.

Now I propose charity, as charity, stands at the head of the climax, and say that if Brother Wilcox's plan will not give satisfaction, then let us have yours. Then come to the meeting appointed, if you can, and let us compare it and decide on matters of expediency as best we can. But as the time for preparation for the meeting is now for short, in case the meeting is not to a great degree general, we propose a general meeting, where we can all meet for acquaintance sake, and for deliberation, at an early date, next season, at Plymouth or Chicago, or some other central and convenient place which may be designated.

But the question arises, Is there any good to grow out of such a meeting? We answer, Yes, in various ways. It will enable us to make each other's acquaintance, to cultivate friendship and fraternal love toward one another, to compare notes as did Paul with Peter and the other apostles, to harmonize in word and action; it will strengthen our faith, it will brighten our hope, it will increase our zeal, and give us a greater abundance of charity toward each other. And further, it may lead to an arrangement on some good plan which will do more by evangelization than has heretofore been done. Now we are doing nothing to this end. Any plan that will sound out the glad tidings of the kingdom is better than no plan. A penny per day into treasury from many brethren in a little while amounted to several hundred dollars, and was better, and would secure more discourses preached in destitute localities than we are getting now, while we have no plan for general work and no treasury.

Is it not a fact that heretofore and to-day we are not prepared like a host for battle, where the energies needed at this point are turned upon each other in contentions upon questions of no profit, but which get the strife? What say you relative to general co-operation? What say you relative to a general meeting? Our brethren at Baltimore expressed a desire for such a meeting. Do you think it expedient?

Brother Kimsey:—In your last communication to me you ask no relative to the appearance of my name in connection with the Constitution of the Christian Association of America, whether it can be inferred thereby that I have abandoned my former position on creeds? I answer, No. At our last annual conference in Indiana, I was chosen secretary for the ensuing year, holding that position, the articles and notes thereon were placed in my hands till further action. It cannot be inferred therefrom, whether I am for or against the articles.

I never did, and never expect to subscribe to any creed, aside from the Bible. That is sufficient till Jesus comes, and whether we will then need more or not I cannot tell. I am uncompromisingly in favor of all divine truth, as I opposed to all laws of expediency which are calculated to make trouble and division among God's people. I am decidedly in favor of system and order, and therefore organization in the church, and in the churches, with a strict adherence to divine law, where it speaks, and on matters of expediency if my plan will not work and give satisfaction, then I will work to some body else's plan. For instance: As we are not told how long, how wide, and how high our church houses shall be built, if my views do not suit, then I will work to those of another. As we are not told how in our collections the money is to be transferred from the pocket to the treasurer, my plan which will give satisfaction—by envelope, by public or private conveyance—is my plan.

Wood, Hay and Stubble.

I have closely observed different views of different writers in the RESTITUTION for the past six months. There are great truths advanced in its columns, and there must be errors also, for truth and truth, if properly understood and applied, will no antagonize itself, yet in almost every number the elements are at conflict with each other.

I shall not undertake to treat in detail the difficulties, or state who it is that has not adhered to the truths; but will merely observe that, in Apostolic times, the Church was liable to corruption under their (the Apostles') immediate care and protection. For instance, let us take a few expressions from the first three chapters of Paul's first letter to the Corinthians: "Now I beseech you, brethren, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment," 1 Cor. i: 10. Paul directed this letter at a condition to the brethren of the one body at Corinth, which was all on the same foundation, and of which he was the "wise master-builder." 1 Cor. iii: 10. Why did Paul write such an admonition as this to the brethren? he surely had a reason for it. We will let him answer it in his own words, "For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, * * * that there are contentions among you. Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ." 1 Cor. i: 11-12.

They had begun, in that early day of the Church, to create contention, strife, and division, and to boast in their separate names, just as some of our brethren, I am inclined to think, are doing in the latter days. Though they do not contend for the sake of contention, nor do we suppose the Corinthians did, yet it may be that some are zealous for fame. Paul styles such as being carnal, "for whereas there is envying and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?" 1 Cor. iii: 3. This is truly a painful state of affairs for the brethren of the one body. It is not wonderful to behold these things in the world which is composed of murmurs, separations and distinctions. But on that foundation which is Christ, men are permitted to build gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay and stubble, 1st Cor. iii. 12. "But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon." iii: 10. For "every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." iii: 13.

There is at least one divis on to take place yet—it is a final division. It will be between the gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay and stubble. It will be between the two Virgins, the representatives of the one body of Christ, which are to king for the return of their Lord. But a part of them are prepared to meet him; the other part have not their lamps trimmed in good order.

J. H. WHERRY.

"Turkey and Russia."

[The following articles from the Youth's Companion is a careful digest of the present political relations of Turkey and Russia, and as such is worth preserving by all who would have clear views in reference to the painfully interesting "Eastern question." O. W. A.]

Let us recall three facts. One is, that Constantinople, the present capital of Turkey, was the seat of the Greek church, of which Russia is now the head, before the Turks invaded Europe.

The second is, that a large portion of the inhabitants of Turkey are not only Christians, but are Selaves, that is, of the same race and blood as the great body of the Russians themselves.

The third fact to be kept in mind is, that for two centuries the Russians have coveted Constantinople, for two reasons; because she has her ambition that that city should once more be the capital of the Greek church, and because she desires to be a great naval power. Now the possession of Constantinople would give her the command, not only of the Black Sea, but also of the Eastern Mediterranean.

Peter the Great left it as an injunction on the Czars who should succeed him, to conquer Constantinople; and this has accordingly been the aim of the Czars ever since. The Crimean war was the result of an attempt to make this conquest on the part of the Czar Nicholas; and Russia and England and France came to the Sultan's rescue, and Russian ambition was checked by the fall of Sebastopol.

Russia still covets Constantinople, and is believed to be, at this moment, taking advantage of Turkey's difficulties with that end in view. She has encouraged the rebellion in Bosnia and Bulgaria, and undoubtedly urged Servia to declare war against Turkey, and the Servian army is full of Russian officers and soldiers.

But what concern has England, so far distant, in this trouble between Russia and Turkey? What cares she whether Russia takes Constantinople, or what becomes of the Sultan's rule? She has two reasons for being deeply interested in the quarrel. In the first place, England is the foremost naval power in the world. She longs that her navy is the greatest, and that her fleets rule every sea. She dreads to see Russia in possession of the Bosphorus, with a great port at Constantinople, rising to be a rival naval power.

But she has a yet more powerful reason than this. England rules over the great empire of India. She is most anxious to maintain that rule, and will fight to the last to maintain it.

Now Russia has been for years approaching India with her troops by way of Central Asia; and now her armies are almost in sight of the Indian frontier. There is little doubt, that Russia is ambitious to possess India, as well as Constantinople.

Well, it happens that the nearest route for England to India is through the Mediterranean, and by the Suez Canal. Suppose, then, that the Russians had Constantinople. Her fleets could sail freely on the Mediterranean, and would prove an immense obstacle in the way of English ships going to India. She might be able to cut off English communication with India by this nearest route altogether.

In case of a war, then, we should see the Russian fleet in the Mediterranean stopping the way of the English, while with her armies in Central Asia she made an attack on India.

It is mainly this fear of losing India, and of Russia's getting it, that impels England to sustain the Sultan, and to resist a Russian conquest of Constantinople; thus she fought for Turkey in the Crimean war, and will probably fight for her again, if the worst comes to the worst.

Austria has a deep interest in the Eastern problem, though which side she would take in the event of war is doubtful. Her empire is composed of several races which do not live very amicably together under one rule. Within her limits are Germans, Magyars, or Hungarians, Czechs, and Selaves. Each of these races distrusts the others, and fears that one of the others will gain the ascendancy in the empire.

The Austrian Selaves border upon the Servians and Bosnians, who are also Selaves. Austria is afraid of the latter's becoming independent, or part of Russia for then she might lose her own Selavic populations. So Austria has always sided with Turkey, and would be very likely to do so now. Besides, Austria would not like to see Russia become more powerful, and become mistress of the Danube.

Neither Germany nor Italy have a direct interest in the Eastern difficulty; their course, in case of war, would be dictated by their alliances, and the gain they might expect from the promises of a power—probably Russia—in return for their aid. Both would be inclined to favor Russia; for Germany desires Belgium, Holland, and Denmark, and Italy craves a part of the Austrian Tyrol; and Russia would probably consent to aid in fulfilling these ambitions.—Selected.

The Versatility of Paul.

"He that winneth souls is wise." This wisdom is from above, and is that pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy. No person ever possessed more of this excellency than Paul. His prudence appears in the election and variation of the means he employed to accomplish his end. He considered the circumstances, the tempers, the prejudices of his hearers. He addressed every principle and every passion of human nature. He reasoned; he declaimed. He reproved; he admonished; he warned; he encouraged. He compassed sea and land to furnish himself with illustrations and assistance. He borrowed from the institutions of Judaism. He borrowed from the institutions of heathenism. He borrowed from the manners of the age. He borrowed from the festive games. Not a wrestling or race passed by unnoticed or unimproved. Any occurrence, however accidental or transitory, he seized, to guide the attention which it awakened to some wise and important purpose.—Wm. Jay.

DIED.

She died of long and painful illness. Her suffer ings were great, but she bore them with Christian fortitude. Her mind was clear and calm to the last, she died strong in the faith that Christ will soon come to quicken her, with all the rest of going ones, to immortal life to reign with him upon the earth.

Her maiden name was Parke. She was married to E. L. Gilbert in 1867, with whom she has walked hand in hand in the same faith and hope through all the stages of her christian pilgrimage.

To the friends of Brother Gilbert, this phrase is known that he died in the full triumphs of faith, and is now resting in the bosom of Abraham, and his sleeping dust will be awakened and changed to be forever with the Lord. Amen. Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly.

Emblems of Human Life.

The leaf that falls in autumn's hour,
The rose that dies upon the stem,
Are emblems of the silent power,
Of time and change over us and them.

Yet happier is the rose's fate,
For Spring will other leaves restore,
And Summer will new flowers create
As fresh as those that bloomed before.

But when life's morning dreams depart,
A grief succeeds to fair realities,
Say what shall cheer the lonely heart,
Or soothe sorrow's bitterness?

Years may roll on and time may bring
Its varied seasons but in vain,
There is in life but one short spring,
And it can never return again.

There is a Spring beyond the tomb,
In a far happier land than this,
Where roses do forever bloom,
In everlasting joy and bliss.

Harmony of the Periods of Daniel: Ix. and x.

In Ezra vi. 14 we have this record: "And the elders of the Jews builded and they prospered through the prophesying of Haggai the prophet, and Zechariah the son of Iddo; and they builded and finished it, according to the commandment of the God of Israel, and according to the commandment of Cyrus and Darius and Artaxerxes king (singular) of Persia."

Verse 15: "And this house was finished on the third day of the month of Adar, which was in the sixth year of the reign of Darius the king."

From this testimony it appears evident that it took all of these decrees to carry out the one decree of the God of Israel assigned to the Persian kingdom. This work, according to the record, was confined to the house. But as we find other decrees from the same Persian kingdom for the rebuilding of the walls and the streets of Jerusalem recorded in the books of Ezra and Nehemiah, are we not to include them also as parts of that one decree of the God of Israel, named in Dan. ix 25? This is evidently correct, and the Persian kingdom, as all this work, was a unit from the first to the last, which suggests the following application, and is the only one which appears clear to my mind:

1. The 69 weeks or 483 years begin at the end of the Babylonish captivity in the first year of Cyrus' reign, and ended at the birth of the Messiah.

2. The 61 weeks, or 434 years, begin at the completion of the city and wall, and the restoration of the law of Moses, under the decree of Artaxerxes in his 20th year to Nehemiah, and ended at the cross.

3. As to the beginning and the ending of the 70 weeks of verse 24, and the one week of verse 27, my mind is not quite so clear; but from the events named in these two verses, I have long been of the opinion that they must in some way have extended to the events connected with the destruction of Jerusalem. Consequently they do not begin or end with either of the other two periods. The assumption that they date from the 12th year of Ahasuerus' reign, who, it is claimed, is the same as Artaxerxes Longimanus, is not correct, and for these reasons:

1. It seems inconsistent that after the issuing of a decree in the 7th year of his reign, to Ezra, in favor of the Jews, that he should have so far forgotten himself as to be induced by Haman to issue a decree in his 12th year for their destruction, throughout his empire.

2. Ahasuerus' reign, according to the book of Esther, could not have been over 14 years, whilst that of Artaxerxes, according to Prideaux, was 41 years.

As to who Ahasuerus was, it is a matter of dispute among the learned; but the most reasonable view I have seen is the one found in the Encyclopedia Americana, which makes him to be Xerxes of ancient renown. In confirmation of this application I call attention to the vision of Daniel, which he had in the third year of Cyrus, as recorded in chapters 10, 11 and 12 of His prophecies.

In x. 1 he says: "A thing was revealed to him, and the thing was true, but the time was long, and he understood the thing, and he understood the thing, and had understanding of the vision."

In xi. 2 the revealing angel said to him, "And now I will show the truth. Behold there shall stand up yet three kings in Persia; and the fourth shall be far richer than they all; and by his strength through his riches he shall stir up all against the realm of Grecia."

This was true of Xerxes and of no other Persian king.

By this testimony we have that the visions of these chapters began after the third year of Cyrus, and the "time which was long," must of necessity commence somewhere in the reign of these four kings. As Xerxes is the last and only prominent one named, who, through his riches, stirred up an army of about five millions—the largest the world ever saw—against Grecia, and under his reign Persia attained its meridian of glory; and with his fall commenced its decadence; it seems reasonable that the 2,300 days should be dated in his day.

As the 70 weeks of ix. 25 are cut off at that time and begin with the same event and time, we can readily see how they can be extended to the events connected with the destruction of the city and the sanctuary by the Romans.

Verses 26 and 27 read as follows: "And after three score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself: and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week; and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate." (Margin, desolator.)

This testimony places the cutting off of Christ at the end of 62 weeks, and not 62½ weeks as is usually claimed. But the important points to be considered are these:

1. Who was this prince?

2. What is this covenant?

3. How and when was it confirmed?

If the second question can be correctly answered, the others come in as a matter of course.

That this covenant is not the New Testament covenant, sealed with the blood of Christ its Testator, is evident from these and other similar reasons:

1. That covenant was not confirmed till after the resurrection of Christ and the descent of the Holy Spirit.

2. That confirmation was by the testimony of his chosen twelve apostles, in connection with signs and wonders, and diverse gifts of the Holy Ghost, from heaven. Acts ii. Heb. ii. But what was it? The answer can be found only in the Law and the Prophets, and embraces all the events written against Israel and Jerusalem, extending down to the end of Gentile times and Gentile rule, yet future— all of which was made sure by the specific work accomplished by the King of glory in the first year of Cyrus' reign, and ended at the birth of the Messiah.

But before closing, I will copy the 24th verse entire:

"Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy.

These are the events to transpire within that period, and are "a seal" of surety that all of the other parts of the vision will have a like fulfillment in the appointed time.

Dan. xii. 10 reads thus: "Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly; and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." This verse has been a polar star to me through all the darkness of more than thirty years past, and now it shines with increasing brightness as the desired haven is approaching.

If this is light to others, give the glory to God, and not to man.

P. ALLINO.

A Short Sermon from a Few Strong Texts.

"Hold fast the form of sound words." Paul.

"Stand up with that cannot be condemned." Paul.

"If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." Peter.

"So speak ye and so do as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty." James.

In the interest of the cause so dear to the brotherhood I write, in the hope of kindly pointing out some errors among us, which it seems to be our duty to correct. Will the brethren bear with me with patience, whilst I discharge this fraternal office in all love?

1st. We sometimes see in the RESTITUTION, editorially and in correspondence, the phrase, "our views," as descriptive of the Gospel of the kingdom. Such an one is said to be favorably in the pre sed with "our views." Now our views are necessarily human and therefore liable to be erroneous. Did any Apostle ever use such language? On the contrary, they set out of them, as above quoted, require us to speak as "the oracles of God, and another command to us "the form of sound words" is to be held "fast." Wherein, then, do we derive the authority to preach "our view" in place of God's truth, plainly quoted from his word? Is such a practice harmless? Our God is a jealous God, and will not permit the admixture of his word with human inventions and human wisdom. David tells us, in the Psalms, that "it went ill with Moses at the waters of Meribah, because he spake even unadvisedly with his lips," and he was, on that account, deposed from his leadership of Israel. Now his words were as recorded in Num. xx 10.—"Hear now, ye rebels, must we fetch you water out of this rock?" He was told to speak to the rock simply, at the command of God, but he must needs mix himself up in the transaction and give his "views" also, saying, "must we fetch you water out of this rock?"

The sectarians, whom we oppose, give us their views in their creeds, confessions and theological books, and thereby disclose to us the secret of their continued blunders and mistakes, caused by departing from the word of God, thereby exalting the wisdom of men above the Divine oracles. Shall we follow their example, by giving our "views," too, and thereby "build again the things which we once destroyed," making ourselves "transgressors," Gal. ii: 18. To preach the word, and not to present our views is our mission and plain duty. Is it not so brethren? "I speak as unto wise men; judge ye what I say."

2d. Again, we often read in the RESTITUTION that such a brother preached faithfully "the doctrines of the Gospel." Do we thus use sound speech which cannot be condemned? Nowhere, I believe, in either the Old or New Testament is the phrase used in the plural, when applied to the teachings of the Lord, the Prophets, or the Apostles. The reason, I think, is obvious; it is because the doctrine is single and one, throughout the Book. There has always been "one God, the Father of all, one Lord, one spirit, one body, one faith, one baptism, and one hope of our calling." Moses, in his song, declares "my doctrine shall drop as the rain." Paul writes in Hebrews vi., "therefore, leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ." He exhorts Timothy to "take heed to the doctrine," and at the same time warns him against "the doctrines of devils." False religionists have many "doctrines," as they have "Lords many and Gods many," but the servants of God have only one doctrine, which is unique, harmonious and consistent throughout. Shall we not forbear, then, to talk of the doctrines of Christ, etc., and thus follow the Divine example, in proclaiming the one doctrine or teaching of God's holy word, from Genesis to Revelations, which is simply to practice faith and obedience, to fear God and keep his commandments, which is the whole duty of man.

3d. "A scribe instructed in the kingdom of God," reading even cursorily in the RESTITUTION the announcements and notices of meetings, preaching, etc., would be apt to conclude that for a primitive people, as we claim to be, well taught in the word of God, we had utterly forgotten, if, indeed, we ever knew, what is written in the General Epistle of James, chap. iv. v. 13 to end. Turning, for illustration, to the last number of the RESTITUTION before me, Nov. 27th, we read the notice of a certain meeting, in Iowa, which runs thus:

"The meeting will commence December the 21st."

Another, "I will meet Brother Daniel Wright, the Friday before the second Sunday in December."

Again, yet another: "There will be a meeting of the brethren of the Church of God, etc., beginning the Friday before the first Sunday in December, 1870, and continuing over the following Sunday, etc. I will meet certain brethren (naming them) with a team."

One other notice, in the same paper, is exceptionally proper. It announces the day and place of meeting, and adds, "Brother J. F. Wagoner is expected to be present." This is signed Jacob Shafer.

Now, are not these notices all liable to the objection (except Brother Shafer's) that they are written in the disregard of the Apostle James' admonition, when he writes, "Go to now, ye that say, to-day or to-morrow, we will go into such a city and continue there a year, etc., whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow; for what is your life? It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little while and then vanisheth away. For ye ought to say, if the Lord, we shall live and do this or that. But now ye rejoice in your boastings; all such rejoicings are evil."

This must suffice for the present. I hope no brother will take offense at my freedom, for we "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and must not be entangled again in the yoke of bondage." I plead Paul's example when even sharply reproving the Galatians, he said, "Am I therefore become your enemy because I tell you the truth.

Faithfully and affectionately submitted to all whom it may concern.

ALLAN B MAGRUDER.

Truth.

How beautiful is truth! In this world where there is so much falsehood and deceit; where hearts are estranged, and recriminations, assaults and crimes engendered—how beautiful are the true thoughts, words and deeds. Like the sun smiling out amid the misty storm—like the bright star shining through the heavy night cloud—like friends clasping the hand of friend—like right rebutting wrong—like the force of virtue tinging on the shield of vice—like heaven upon earth, and God in man, is Truth! Precious and priceless. Dearer than smile of friends, love of parents, or pomp of fame. Truth is all. By this we know the nature and value of things. Falsehood is craven, a dastard. Truth is bold, noble and God-given, beyond every other attribute of the soul.—Hall.

Correspondence.

Bro Reed:

By order of the Church, I send a report of their action on the articles of the constitution of the Christian Association of America. A meeting having been appointed, by the elders, for the Church to assemble together and take some action upon said articles of Association, on the 25th day of Nov., there was quite a number of members present. They could not all of them be present, as some few live quite a distance away to in the place of meeting. The articles of said Association were read and deliberated upon by the members who were present. After due deliberation said articles were unanimously rejected, the members stating that they believed in co-operation, but considered the Gospel a sufficient rule to govern them, believing the admonition of the Apostle Paul to Timothy. 2d Tim. iii. 16-17. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfectly and thoroughly furnished unto all good works; and if we are thoroughly furnished through or in the Gospel, what need have we of any other code of laws to govern the Church.

Hoping we may all come to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, I remain your brother in Gospel hope. JOSEPH OGILWY.

Mission School-House, Nashville, Ind.

EDITOR RESTITUTION:

I am very happy to send you the amount due for this year's RESTITUTION. It was a struggle to get it as times are very dull, and I am only working three-quarters time, and at small wages, and ¾ is all I can do to get along. But I thank God for what I get, and, if you think proper to continue the paper to me, I shall be able to pay you before my time expires. If the Lord spares me. It may, perhaps be interesting to you to know how things are going on here in Hamilton. We have a Christadelphian body who have bought a Methodist meeting-house and fixed it up, and it is now known as the Christadelphian synagogue. They meet on the first day of the week; in the morning fellowship and breaking the loaf; in the afternoon, Bible class and school for the children; and in the evening, a lecture by Mr. Powell, one of the brethren. Then there are the brethren of the one faith, who meet in the Temperance Hall—a very few in number.

There is a body here who go by the name of Adventists, and, although they go by that name, are the same as the brethren of the one faith; for the greater part of them came out from them because of the leaders. They would be glad to amalgamate, and the division is a great pity, for there is only a few in each body, and they realize that unity is strength, and that, if united, they could do more for the Master. These divisions are a great stumbling block in the way of bringing in sinners. The Christadelphians are very hard. If all bodies are the same, I pray God to be kept from them. Knowledge of the Scriptures will not save unless the life is in accordance with it. Faith and works must go hand in hand. It is to be feared that the rival principle— the Spirit of Christ—is lacking. By their fruits, says our Lord, ye shall know them. If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His.

I wish to ask a favor: that is—giving an exposition of the ten virgins. Who are they that constitute the virgins, and how? when does the marriage take place? What does the oil represent? What does the lamp represent? and what do the words that the wise carry the oil in signify? Be pleased to make each particular clear by the Scriptures and oblige

Your brother in the one faith.

EDITOR RESTITUTION:

Enclosed please find payment for paper and fifty cents for the Centennial number, which if were so many dollars. Do not think me stingy because I am delinquent as I have given away all I ever earned. Although not married, I have a family to support, and a mother 84 years old. I was unfortunate to run out of employment the past summer. I glory that I can get along without spending time or money over politics—looking for something better.

I get my paper more regularly than last year, yet miss some copies. We frequently hear that people are added to the church; what a pity we cannot learn where they belong. I return my heartfelt thanks to the contributors to the RESTITUTION, especially Bro. Magruder, Sister Wiser, Bro. Sweet, and J. M. S.

Yours in hope of eternal life in the new kingdom. AARON OLMSTEAD.

WEST BLOOMFIELD, N. Y.

Dear Brethren of like precious faith scattered abroad, greeting:

As our paper is open to us to admonish each other through its pages, and that we may hear from each other and learn how the cause is prospering. I am at work at this place that a few may give up their sectarian views and accept the truth as revealed. I was to debate the establishment of the kingdom with a disciple, but when he began to study the word, he gave it up without a public discussion, and nearly all the church has come to acknowledge the truth. Glorious good news is the Kingdom of God when believed literally and not spiritually. DAVID BENNER.

LOCKPORT, Cal.

BRO. REED:

As some brethren expressed a desire that, on my arrival at home, I should let them know through the columns of the RESTITUTION, you may say to all those that care to know, that I arrived safe at home on Saturday last, and found my children, brethren and friends generally well, except one throat, which seem to be an epidemic in these parts just now. I wish to say to all those who gave me a home in their houses,—and many others with whom I might have in days gone had my circumstances permitted—that I shall ever look back to their kindness as some of the few bright spots in my history.

Say to Bro. Wilcox that I still keep on my "train bottle-lead," the dimensions of which may be found in Paul's 2 letter to the Church of God which is at Corinth, with all the saints which are in Achaia." Chap. vi: verses 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18; and that I see no reason why I should plunge it off for one of modern invention.

With charity for all and malice to none, I am your brother waiting for the Kingdom of God. WM. J. OREM.

The Bible Class. Rev. 12.

DEAR BRETHREN:

The grand points embraced in the lesson yesterday, seem obscure, namely, because they are so unfamiliar: while in themselves they are of very superlative.

I. The first point relates to the man-child and his origin, and the relation to the Church he bears. Is it not indicated by Adam, first formed, and then Eve from him? 1 Tim. ii: 13, 14. Hence "the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church; and he is the head of the body. For we are members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones (having the same human nature). This is a great mystery (profound truth, not understood but I speak concerning Christ and the Church. Eph. v: 23, 33.

Thus while Christ came of Israel; Rom. ix: 4, 5; John, iv: 22; Luke, ii: 30; the church comes after and by Christ—as Eve from Adam. "For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Judah, Heb. vii: 14, 28, of whom came the chief ruler." 1 Chron. v: 2. As it is written, 'Thy maker is thy husband, I am married unto you." Isa. liv: 5; Jer. iii: 14; and the nigh the Virgin Mary, Jesus the only begotten son was born. Luke, i: 27-35.

In this personal distinction the Church is Christ. 1 Cor. iii: 23; Rev. xix: 7-9. Believers are baptized into Christ—his body. Gal. iii. 26-29; 1 Cor. xii: 12. Then as Adam's "deep sleep" was not the era of his dominion, but rather of God's complement of humanity, "male and female." So "the night (now) is spent." Is not the era of the saints' reign—or the world's conversion; but of God's wondrous working to bring forth the second Eve—the complement of the new man, the last Adam. The head of our humanity and world restored at the inauguration of "the world (age) to come" Heb. ii: 5; Matt. xii: 32. Then "the saints take the kingdom Dan. vii: 18,—wear their crowns, 2 Tim. vi: 1—8; share the glory given to Christ, John xvii: 21-24; and as the fullness of the Abrahamic seed, all posse the full means of new covenant favor." Gen. xxii: 10, 18; Heb viii: 8-12; Rev. xx: 4-7.

II. The wonder—sign—stands here for that which it signifies in the vision. Let me illustrate: The 7 fat kine are (plenty and not fat) 7 years of "plenty" &c.,—4 times repeated. Gen. xli: 17-32. Israel drank of that rock, and on it rock was (stood for) Christ, in that revelation of God's mercy. 1 Cor. x: 4. "Thou art this bread of gold." Dan. ii: 38. This bread broken is "my body." It was that signified was in the Lord's supper service.

Thus, in the lesson, Rev. xii., the dr —a huge serpent—was in Rome, throughout the idolatrous world, the s of worldly wisdom. It was consulted made, and worshiped as a God. He signified a "the God of this world" (s his power to oppose Christ was organiz Rome—its centre of dominion.

The Roman army in Africa, conquer one of the two serpent-monsters, and ado its form for their military ensign. Hence in this revelation, St. John sees the Dragon, the sign of Satanic power. It-7 head and ten horns identify and blend it with the 7 mountains, ch. xvii: 9; and ten horns, vs. 12-14, of the divided Roman world.

In the ancient prophets, Rome was the fourth and last of the world powers, that is to reach the judgement and kingdom of God. Dan. vii: 7-11; Zech. ii 18-22. The four kingdoms are summed up Dan. vii: 17, and succeed by the divine kingdom, vs. 14, 18 and 27.

With this clear fact before the significance of the Dragonic symbol, is apparent. In symbol it is Rome, and Rome is here the organized, idolatrous, anti-Christ power. As "then art this bread of gold." Dan. ii: 38 So the ground shedded and stood for and was the organized power of the old serpent—the Devil.

III. The Dragon—cast down to earth, in Rev war with the woman and the remnant of her seed, vs. 7, 17, destroys the city and sanctuary of Israel, persecutes and wears out the saints—the seed—the 144 hundreds, gives his power and seat and great authority to the changed symbol-beast, chap. xiii. 5, deceives the nations, v. 7-8, sends out his spirit, with others, to gather the kings and nations to the war of the great day, chap. xvi: 13-16; and is yet to be bound 1,000 years, that he should deceive the nations no more, &c., chap. xx. 3.

Question. "Is he to be cast out of Heaven again?" No. Once is enough. He will never get back there. We have him here in "this present evil age," noted ten times, acting on earth.

Question. "What will become of him?" He is never to rise, but fall,—"cast in to the bottomless pit."

Question. "Is he to be freed again?" Yes; he must be brought forth for execution; his head must be ruined. He must be destroyed. Gen. iii. 15; Heb. ii. 14. Chairman "Well, that will do."

Note. "The third part of the stars cast to the earth," &c unites with fact that may aid its elucidation. "The third part" of the Roman world was conquered by Mohammedanism. Rev. xiv, 15-18. "The false prophet" "personified mental confusion the religious rulers-eastern, or "third part" of the Roman firmament. "The mystery (unfolding) of the 7 vials" is given. Rev. x. 7. "The prophet that to clothe this is the fulfillment. Isa. lx. 16. Such is" false prophets" and his image in this vision is contemporaneous with the Dragon-power in Rome. While his place as "the tail" of the symbol is transcendently striking; as it portrays the most pernicious and poisonous features of "that great and evil (wicked) spirit" as it exists in or to the judgment. Rev. xix. 20.

Such answers to fit the prophetic picture of our age. They are consistent with the general aspect of the prophecy, and demonstrate its accomplishment by events more important in all history, and meet the carping of notice by our Divine Instructor.

The events, v. 18 of, seem to require, that but my aim is notice only the main causes. The climax vision is given in the dominion to glory, and gives only "that which is hinted in the Scriptures of truth."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.
THE RESTITUTION advocates "the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with Jesus Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the resurrection of the dead; the literal resurrection of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and in by other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Our Inheritance.

The child of earth that he is heir valuable estate, that he will be ssed of a grand and goodly inherit-by and by. The first response ested by his awakened interest d be: How do you know? On g fully satisfied as to its certain y evidence incontestible, the next esponse naturally suggested by his inevitable interest in the matter would be: What and where is that inheritance, and when will I receive it? Would it not be exceeding strange, indeed, to say the very least, that a child of the Divine Father, and heir of God and joint heir with Christ, could, by any possibility of means, be less solicitous in regard to the nature, locality and time of reception of the external inheritance through Christ? How may we know, or from whence obtain evidence as to such inheritance? The fruitless efforts of men to disprove the statement, as to the only source of obtaining such information, uttered by the Holy Seer of God near three thousand years ago, in these words: "Since the beginning of the world men have not heard, nor perceived by the ear, neither hath the eye seen, oh God, beside thee what he hath prepared for him that waiteth for him" (Isa lxiv. 4,) have only served to demonstrate the truthfulness thereof."

Unless God has revealed it, man's efforts to solve it, would only be an exhibition of his folly; it would remain a mystery locked up in the mind of the Eternal, but it has thus revealed it, "it is for our learning that we might have hope." Has he done so? Let Paul answer: "But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery; even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory, which none of the princes of this world knew . . . . as it is written," (quoting the prophet as above). "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him, (then adds), but God hath revealed them unto us by his Holy Spirit." 1 Cor. ii. 7-13. Again, "By revelation he made known unto me the mystery (as I wrote afore in few words) . . . . which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit." Eph iii. 3-5. From which it is certain that God has revealed the mystery to prophets and apostles out how are we to understand it? Answer. Wherby when ye read ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ, (verse 4 in above connection).

Now, by means of a few plain interrogatories, let us see if we can understand. Paul, will you please answer? (by what you have written). First God made promise (to those that have him) of an inheritance? It is written: "For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise," but God gave it to Abraham by promise. Gal. iii. 18. Now, to Abraham and his seed were the promises made (verse 16). Yes, but who are the seed" Thus it is written: He saith not and to seeds as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed which is Christ (16).

Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus . . . . ye are all one in Christ Jesus, and if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise. Gal. iii. 26-29. Did you mean to say that Gentiles as well as Jews, would be made partakers of his promise? so it is written, "For you Gentiles, if ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you-ward." How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery . . . that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel. Eph. iii. 2-6. Now I fully understand that God has promised an inheritance to Abraham, Christ, and all that are in Christ through faith.

But of what does this promised inheritance consist, and where is it?

As it is written: By faith, Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should afterward receive for an inheritance, obeyed and went out. . . . By faith he sojourned in the land of promise. Heb. xi. 8, 9. From which it is clear that the inheritance is a place or land of promise, in which Abraham sojourned, dwelling in tents with Isaac and Jacob, heirs with him of the same promise. Stephen's dying testimony declares: The God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham . . . . and said unto him, get thee out of thy country and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I shall show thee . . . and he removed him into this land wherein ye now dwell, and he gave him none inheritance in it; no, not so much as to set his foot on, yet he promised that he would . . . . (and he certainly will) give it to him and to his seed after him. Acts vii. 2-5.

Surely, then, this was the country inhabited by the Jews in the days of the apostles. But will this be the extent of the inheritance in its full and final development?

By no means. For the promise that he should be the heir of the world was not to Abraham or his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith". Rom. iv. 13. Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth. Matt. v. 5. Those that wait upon the Lord shall inherit the earth. Psa. xxxvii. 9. Their inheritance shall be forever. Verse 18. The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever. Verse 29. The wicked shall not inhabit the earth, but the righteous shall never be removed. Prov. x. 30. The perfect shall remain in it. Prov. ii. 21. Such was God's purpose in forming the earth, and he is not man that he should be turned from it. His purposes will stand. "For thus saith the Lord that created the heavens: God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it; he created it not in vain; he formed it to be inhabited. Isa. xlv. 18. When the earth shall be thus possessed by Christ, as it is written, "I shall give thee . . . the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession," (Psa. ii. 8), and by those that are his, the meek, the righteous, taking joint heirs with him. Then will the collateral promises of inheritance find their complete fulfillment, namely: "Fear not little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Luke xii. 32. Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him. James ii. 5. For he shall be King over all the earth; in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one. Zech. xiv. 9. The earth will be the territory of the kingdom,—the inheritance of the one, will, therefore, give possession of the other. But at first the kingdom "shall be small, like a grain of mustard seed," established in Mt. Zion,—in the promised land,—when they shall come from the east, west, north and south, and sit down in the kingdom of God (Luke xiii. 29.) finally becomes a great mountain (kingdom or government) and fills the whole earth. Dan. ii. 35, 45. For the kingdom and the dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him. Dan. vii. 27. The further promise "shall inherit everlasting life," will then find its fulfillment. To possess an eternal inheritance, the possessor must eternally live. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God . . . behold I show you a mystery . . . . we shall all be changed. 1 Cor. i. 51.

It is, therefore, certainly clear as to what and where our inheritance shall be. When will we receive it?

It is now a matter of promise as a reward, "knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance, for you serve the Lord Christ." Col. iii. 24. We shall receive it then when he gives his reward; but when will that be? Then shall be recompensed (rewarded) at the resurrection of the just. Luke xiv. 14. Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his works shall be. Rev. xxii. 12. The Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father . . . . then shall he reward every man according to his works. Matt. xvii. 27. "The seventh angel sounded . . . . the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord . . . . and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou should give reward to thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and to them that fear thy name, small and great." Rev. xi. 15-18.

"He that sat upon the throne said, behold I make all things new." Rev. xx. 5. The earth, by reason of sin, has prematurely grown old, and now reels and groans under the weight of the curse; but then, as it is written, (Rev. xxii. 3,) "There shall be no more curse." Now is the day of death, of sorrow, and of tears. Then will be the glad day of redemption, when he shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying. Rev. xxi. 4. Then, "instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier, shall come up the myrtle tree, and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off. Isa. lv. 13. The sons of God shouted together for joy in the morn of earth's creation. The new song will be sung in earth's regeneration, "Saying, thou art worthy . . . . for thou was slain and hast redeemed us by thy blood, out of . . . nation, kindred, tongue and people, and hast made us unto our God, kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth." Rev. v. 9, 10.

Dear reader, may you and I serve the Lord Christ, receive the reward of the inheritance, and share in the glories of a world redeemed, "When all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Amen.

D. T. HALSTEAD.

The Subjects, Nature and Design of Baptism.

"When they believed preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." Acts viii. 12.

I. The subjects of baptism.

That baptism is only for believers, we have abundant evidence in such expressions as these: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Mark xvi. 15, 16. It does not say, "he that is baptized first and believeth afterwards."

"When they believed . . . . they were baptized both men and women." Acts viii 12. It does not say "men, women and their infant children."

"Many of the Corinthians hearing, believed and were baptized." Acts xviii. 8. Here the events are given in their natural and exact order, 1—hearing; 2—belief; 3—baptism.

"Were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins." Matt. iii. 6. Infants were not capable of confessing their sins. The two or three cases of household baptism do not prove infant baptism, for many households contain no infants. Thus "Cornelius and all his house into the ark," did not include a single infant, so far as the record goes, for we know of only eight souls who entered it—Noah and his wife, and his three sons and their wives. Gen. vii. 1, 13. 1 Peter iii. 20. Hence we conclude 1 st baptism (with the grounds for observing it and the penalties for not observing it) was instituted only for persons old enough to hear, believe and obey the Gospel.

II. The nature of object of baptism.

There are two sets of opinions as to the nature of the act; one party claiming that baptism can be performed by sprinkling, pouring, or immersion; and the other party accepting immersion only.

Thus while one part to the controversy objects to sprinkling or pouring, they both agree that immersion is a valid and proper baptism. To be on the safe side, then, common prudence would lead an enquirer to adopt immersion, inasmuch as both parties admit this to be a valid and proper baptism. But to make the matter certain and to leave no room for doubt, it is pictured to us under such world-wide and familiar symbols as burial, planting, birth and resurrection. Jno. iii. 5; Rom. vi. 4, 5; Col. ii. 12. As a body is laid in the grave, and arises to a new existence in the resurrection morning; so the believer is laid in the watery tomb, and arises from the water to walk in newness of life. As a seed is planted in the ground, and springs up a beautiful flower; so the believer is planted in the baptismal waters, and springs up a new creature in Christ Jesus, showing forth the praises of him who hath called him from darkness into light. As when born of the flesh we enter upon the career of the natural life, so when born of water, we enter upon the Christian life. It would be a stupid objection to say that being born of (ek, out of) water cannot signify immersion which indicates a going into the water. I say this would be stupid, because a man cannot come up out of the water without having first gone into the water. Thus emersion presupposes immersion; and immersion is necessarily followed by an emersion, in performing the ordinance of Christian baptism.

But the peculiar and unmistakable language used in describing the administration of the ordinance proves it to be a dipping in water, as plainly as the symbology under which it is represented. Thus "baptized in Jordan;" "in the river Jordan;" "went down into the water;" "up out of the water;" "baptizing in Enon near to Salim, because there was much water there," etc. Matt. iii. 6, 16, Mark i. 5, 9; Acts viii. 38, 39; John iii. 23. Our word baptized is the Anglicized form of the Greek verb baptizo, which is only rendered "dipped" in the connection of the strongest rules of Biblical interpretation that "all the plain texts relating to any given subject ought to be taken together impartially compared, and the expressions of one of them restricted by those of another, and explained in mutual consistency." Neglecting this important rule, some persons have fallen into the grievous error of supposing that the candidate ought to be dipped three times instead of once. Starting out with a perverse notion of Matt. xxviii. 19, they neglect the other portions of Scripture which throw light upon and fully explain the act of baptism alluded to in that text. I say the other Scriptures fully explain that text, because the same instructive symbols which teach that baptism is immersion teach also that it is not three immersions but "one immersion," as the translation by the American Bible Union reads in Eph. iv. 5.

If we would faithfully observe this ordinance "according to the pattern," or patterns, laid down in Scripture for our guidance, we can easily discover the right way. These patterns or symbols are—

1. "The birth of an infant"—once Jno. iii. 5.

2. The planting of a seed in the ground—once. Rom. vi. 5.

3. The burial of a dead body in the grave—once. Rom. vi. 4; Col. ii. 12.

4. The resurrection of a dead body from the grave—once. Rom. vi. 5; Col. ii. 12; iii. 1.

5. The deluge of water over the world—once. 1 Pet. iii. 21.

No amount of sophistry or torture, or scraps of uninspired history in the form of ancient heresy and tradition, can destroy the force of such plain teaching of the Bible. As the infant by once coming into the world is ushered into a family relationship to all the names or its kindred, whether there be three or three hundred names; even so, according to the analogy, the believer by going down into the water and once emerging from it, is ushered into all the relationship to Father, Son and Spirit, which water baptism can confer. Thus the language of the symbols, like a two-edged sword, cuts one way against the no-dipping (sprinkling) theory, and the other way against the three-dipping theory." A. R. U. notes, (1860), by Conant on Matt. xxvii 19, say: "The practice was adopted, at an early period, of immersing at the utterance of each name. But this is clearly contrary to the terms of the command. To justify such a practice, the form should have been either 'in the names of,' or 'in the name of the Father, and in the name of the Son, and in the name of the Holy Spirit.'" In reply to Rice, who advocated sprinkling, Campbell says: "The gentleman tells you of the trine immersion of Tertullian. And what have we to do with these eccentricities? It only makes the argument stronger; for, if they thus submitted to three immersions instead of one, how strong their faith in immersion. The Gospel commands one immersion, but it seems they got to three." Debate, p. 248.

Rice, in speaking of Tertullian's time, (about A. D. 200) says: "In those days they objected to one immersion as decidedly as to pouring or sprinkling. Indeed, they considered it a matter of such importance that in one of the early councils, as Dr. Gale informs us, it was decreed that a bishop should be deposed if he ventured to baptize a person by one immersion only." Debate, p. 252. Thus if one immersion and other apostolic precepts and practices came to be objected to by the growing apostasy as "early" as A. D. 200, how absurd it is to say that Eunomius invented it in A. D. 360, or Munzer, in A. D. 1522! The Edinburg Encyclopedia says, "Baptism in the apostolic age was performed by immersion. . . . Immediately after the apostolic age, however, trine immersion was introduced!" Vol. iii. 1832. Thus, being after the apostolic age, it was of course too late to be Scriptural. But even if uninspired historians could trace it to the lifetime of the apostles, this would not prove what is called trine immersion to be of Divine origin, unless it could be found in the Bible; for who does not know that heresies crept into the church before the apostles fell asleep, as the apostolic epistles and the letters to the seven churches plainly show. Rev. ii., iii. Cutting up the paschal lamb into pieces and breaking its bones would have "changed the ordinance" and destroyed the fitness of the symbol to convey the doctrine it was intended to teach. And as baptism is a symbolic action, breaking it up into three dips not only does violence to the symbol itself, but also to the doctrine which that symbolic action is designed to teach. Jno. xix. 36.

III. The design and importance of baptism.

Baptism, even from the days of John, "was plainly declared to be for "the remission of sins." "Be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling upon the name of the Lord." Mark i. 4; Acts ii. 38; xxii. 16.

From this we learn its vast importance. The "for" is evidently not in the sense of "because your sins are remitted." We do not take medicine "for" a disease because we are already well of it. How could Paul wash away his sins in the act of baptism, if they had already been washed away before that act? In saying this, however, we do not for a moment lose sight of the blood of Christ which "cleanseth us from all sin." When at last the redeemed shall be clothed in shining garments of spotless white, it will be because they have "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Rev. vii. 14; v. 8; i. 5. There is no conflict here between the water and blood." 1 Jno. v. 6. It is only the precious blood of Christ which gives efficacy to the waters of baptism, being as it were reflected in those waters and imparting its white dyeing tinge and power to those waters. So that, in the act of baptism, a believer of "the Gospel of the Kingdom of God" is "baptized into Christ," and hath in this way "put on Christ," and became an heir, "according to the promise." Gal. iii. 27, 29. As the Israelites left their enemies in the Red Sea, and as Naaman left his leprosy in the Jordan; so the believer leaves his sins behind him, and arises from the baptismal waves "a new creature" to whom there is now no condemnation provided he thenceforth "walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit." 2 Cor. v. 17; Rom. viii. 1. By a beautiful figure of speech, we may say that, in one view of the case, baptism is the contract of espousal (or betrothal) between Christ and his church. Eph. v. 26.

We can scarcely overrate the importance of baptism when we consider that "except a man be born of water (ex hudatos—out of water,) and of spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." Jno. iii. 5. If those who rejected John's baptism were said to have "rejected the counsel of God," what must be said of those who reject the baptism commanded in the Gospel? Luke vii. 30. The Lord, speaking by an apostle, has "commanded that believers shall be baptized. "Blessed are they that do his commandments." Acts x. 48; Rev. xxii. 14. Beware of dispensing bodily acts. Was it not a bodily act when Christ was nailed to the cross, and his body pierced for our sins? Was it not a bodily act when he arose from the dead? without which bodily act our faith would be vain. 1 Cor. xv. 17. Was it not a bodily act when Eve ate the forbidden fruit? And is not our final redemption a bodily act—"waiting for the adoption, to-wit; the redemption of our body? Rom. viii. 23; Phil. iii. 21. How infinitely more delightful it is to go down into the baptismal waters and come out again, than to be "cast into the lake of fire," and never come out, but be consumed into smoke and ashes like the fat of lambs? Mal. iv 3; Ps. xxvii. 20; Rev. xx. 15. Oh, can you hesitate which to choose?

*In the sentence of somewhat similar construction—"The God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." Luke xx. 37, although the sacred writer occurs three times, yet we know that one God is meant. And when Paul says "one," we know that he means one, whether "one hope," "one faith," "one baptism," or "one wife." Eph. iv. 4, 5; Tim. iii. 2; Titus i. 6.

Russia and Turkey.

There is little prospect at present of a peaceful settlement of the difficulty between Russia and Turkey. The Czar, having espoused the cause of the Christian population of the Turkish provinces, to whom he is related as their ecclesiastical head, insists on the concession by Turkey of such rights and privileges as shall secure them from the cruelties and barbarities to which they have been subjected, at the caprice of their Moslem masters. He demands that just and equitable principles of government shall be established under efficacious guarantees, which shall preclude the possibility of the repetition of the late atrocious outrages and slaughter of innocent and defenceless people. And in these demands he is likely to be sustained by the other European powers, however much they may be opposed to any further acquisition of territory by Russia. All must see that the attitude of the Czar, as now taken, is right; that it is in the interest of humanity and Christian civilization, and if they abstain from helping the Czar, in case of war, they are not likely to take part against him.

The Turk is evidently in a dilemma. He does not relish the pill which the Czar has compounded, even though it should be sugar-coated with the integrity of his empire. He has been so accustomed to treat his Christian subjects as dogs, and to butcher them at pleasure, that he regards the interference of the Czar as an unjustifiable attempt to abridge his sovereignty. But he must either swallow the dose or go to war with Russia in defiance of the public sentiment of all Europe, and without the help of his former allies. Which he will do no one can tell. But in either case his power in Europe must be weakened and the time of its overthrow hastened.—J. G. W., in Prophetic Times.

Good Advice.

It is better to tread the path of life cheerfully, skipping lightly over the thorns and briars that obstruct your way, than to sit down under every hedge lamenting your hard fate. The thread of a cheerful man's life spins out much longer than that of a man who is continually sad and desponding. Prudent conduct in the concerns of life is highly necessary; but if distress succeed, dejection and despair will not afford relief. The best thing to do when evil comes upon us is not lamentation, but action; not to sit and suffer, but to rise and seek the remedy.

Swearers Work Cheaply.

"What does Satan pay you for swearing?" said a gentleman to one whom he heard using profane language.

"He doesn't pay me anything," was the reply.

"Well you work cheaply. To lay aside the character of a gentleman, to inflict so much pain on your friends and civil people, and to injure your own soul, and all for nothing, you do work cheaply—very cheaply indeed."

THE RESTITUTION

PLYMOUTH, IND.,....Dec. 20th, 1870

☞By a private letter, addressed to his son now visiting friends in Plymouth, we learn that Bro. Richard Corbsley has been very sick. The last news is more favorable and his recovery is probable.

☞We are glad to state to our readers that we are adding new names to our list. Let each old subscriber be prompt in paying up arrears. We need all that is due. The coming year is crowding in upon us with great events, and it becomes us to watch the march of time, as it brings us nearer and nearer to grandest of all events—the establishment of the kingdom of God.

☞The editor of the Sabbath Advocate has recently argued in an article that there were, during the Mosaic age, two laws. The one he calls the moral law, and the other the ceremonial law. Now, as the editor claims to be a Bible man, will he please point out anywhere, in God's word, where the ten commandments are called the "law of God?" Where are they called a moral law? Where are they called a perfect law? Please let your light shine. We don't want inferences, but plain, simple, unvarnished Bible proof. Bring proof.

☞Nothing does more to retard the progress of truth, than a cold, harsh spirit. Don't talk, write or act as though you knew everything, and the rest of the world were all heathen. Do be honest, plain, unpretending and humble. Your reliance on the Bible rather than self, will make men search for the way of life. Don't brag or boast, but be faithful, devoted and true. Remember that a good character and an earnest desire to save men, are better than a whole mouthful of big words without a meaning.

☞The times are full of trouble and gloom, the hearts of men are growing weary of the long suspense. The ocean is temp st-tossed, the earth reels underneath its weight of years. Society puts on the form of hope, but trembles in view of the coming crisis. Happy is he whose trust is in the Lord, and the Gospel of His dear Son. The tempest cannot harm him, the earth shall be made pure and shall shine out from behind the gloom, and God's plan will be accomplished. Trust and wait. "He doeth all things well."

☞It is to be hoped that every one of our subscribers will get us, at least, one new name for 1871. If each reader of the RESTITUTION will make a little sacrifice, we shall add at least 2,000 names to our list. Who will try? Some can afford to take ten copies. Others more, and others less. By one united and vigorous push, we can send the light and hope of the Gospel into thousands of homes, where darkness and sin now reign. Brethren, wake up and do your duty now. God will bless you, and your works will follow you even unto the perfect day.

☞There is more than one way to preach the Word. Some have an idea that they could do a world of good if they could only preach. We thank God that there is more than one way to preach the Word. The tongue, the pen, the press, the purse and the conduct, are all preachers. Your tongue may falter, but your pen glides smoothly; your pen may fail, but your purse is open; you may be poor, but your conduct will preach with the eloquence of angels, and bring many to the throne. Whatever your gift or calling is, use it for God, and he will bless you with honor and crown your labors with victories.

☞The old year is dying. What have you done for the Gospel? Have you done your duty toward God and your fellows? There are men in darkness within your reach; have you let the light of truth shine into them? There are poor men and children within sight of your comf rts; have they been fed and clothed? There are those who would rejoice in the light of the one saving hope; what have you done toward their salvation? Men are dying at our very doors who need the Gospel of life. God has placed the means within our reach. We are his stewards, but are we faithful? The new year is fast upon us. Shall we labor to save men, or make ourselves more comfortable? Shall we let the crown of life slip from our hands when we are so near the throne? May each heart find new joy in working for Christ, and in saving men from sin and death.

What ground have we for believing that we are ready to make great sacrifices, when we daily fail in offering the least.

A Crisis Impending.

We have read with absorbing interest the papers of Bro. Colgrove, and others, on the Great Pyramid. We shall not speak at length upon this remarkable pillar, that was to be a sign in the land of Egypt just before the fulfillment of some very striking predictions in relation to both Egypt and Judah. Isa. xix. 17-25. It will suffice our purpose to draw from the papers referred to above, the fact that dates and times are measured in that remarkable structure by inches. On the Grand Gallery floor the line of 1881 inches terminates at a wall that impends over from the perpendicular six inches. These 1881 inches evidently measure an important period, and we are inclined to accept the conclusion of the Astronomer Royal, that it is the measure of Gentile supremacy, or, in other words, the times of the Gentiles. If this conclusion is correct, we are now going under the shadow of the impending side wall,—or, into a period of unprecedented calamity. Our readers who have preserved No. 870 of the RESTITUTION, of April 11, 1875, will please refer to it. The Great Pyramid points to 1881-'82 as a crisis in human history.

Again, there is a period of 2300 years given Dan. viii. 14, for treading the sanctuary and host under foot. Four hundred and ninety years of this period were determined—cut off, divided off—upon Daniel's people, the Jews, reaching to the commencement of the overspreading of abominations,—compare Dan. ix. 27, with Mark xiii. 14, and Luke xxi. 20-24,—and the rest terminating the times of the Gentiles. From the complete restoration of the Jewish polity, 420 B. C., (see Kitto) to the year A. D., 70, is 490 years. This leaves 1810 years to span the times of the Gentiles during which they tread down Jerusalem. The temple was burned in 70, but the work of desolation lasted a little while longer. By this measure again, 1880-'82, becomes ominous as indicating a crisis in human history, as A. D. 70+32+1810=1880-'82. The last 40 years of the first sub-division, or 490 years, was remarkable as covering the ministry of our Lord and his apostles to the Jewish nation. Even John the Baptist warned of the impending vengence, or coming wrath. Matt. iii. 7. Jesus warned, and wept over the doomed city. The apostles spoke of wrath coming to the uttermost, but the Jews knew not the time of their visitation. As they entered the last week of the 70, or the last 7 years, troubles commenced that ended in Jerusalem being surrounded with the legions of Rome, and the utter overthrow of the city, temple, and commonwealth.

As the 1810, spanning Gentile times, drew within 40 years of closing, a new message startled the world. Its burden has been the personal coming of Messiah in power and great glory. Faithful servants enter heartily into the work of giving the world due warning. The press is brought into requisition, and tracts and periodicals are scattered by millions. The message, however, proved most unwelcome to professed Christians, and church doors were closed against the heralds of Messiah's reign. The conduct of professors caused the world to receive the message with scorn and contempt. Both professors and worldly people have wasted the precious forty years crying peace and hailing a good time coming, till we are entering a week of years such as probably the world has never seen.

The great international expositions have, with singular uniformity, been followed with calamity and war. Our great Centennial has just closed, and a great and frenzied political campaign terminated about synchronously with it, and what is the outlook? The faces of the better and more candid portion grow pale and sad, and the hearts of the thoughtful sink within them, as they contemplate what may result if the dangerous and destructive elements that make up the heterogeneous masses come into collision.

Then, furthermore, look over the ocean to the l ns of Europe, and what are the indications? Statesmen and students of prophecy give one and the same answer—a war in the near future unparalleled in all past national conflicts. And this Armageddon onset is the most portentously ominous evidence of the coming of Christ to the etherial like a thief, the eruption of his saints, and the outpouring of dreadful judgments on mystic Babylon and a wicked world. Rev. xvi: 12-21. The astronomer, too, has his forebodings. He tells of a perihelion period of all the larger planets to take place from 1880 to 1885, that is to disturb our system in its central forces, and result in fearful plagues and pestilences. Thus the hearts of all are failing for fear and for looking for those things that are coming upon the earth, and for the imminent shaking of the heavenly powers.

The great Turco-Russian conflict foreseen by Daniel chap. xi: 40-45, is now in its incipiency; this is to be followed by such a time of trouble as never was since there was a nation, at which time the deliverance of Daniel's people and the resurrection are to take place. Dan. xii: 1, 2.

The supremacy of Mohammedanism is measured in this chapter as v. 7. This period, like the temporal supremacy of the Papacy, chap. vii: 25, is 1260 years, though with a different beginning and ending. Mohammed's supremacy dates about A. D. 622, and 1260 years more expire about 1882. The 1290, and 1335 years belong to restitution times, and extend beyond Messiah's coming and the resurrection, as Daniel is to stand in his lot in the promised land at the termination of the larger period. No period terminates at the precise time of Christ's coming; they terminate with great political changes and revolutions. The 2300 year period of giving the little book, or Bible, to the world, commencing with Luther's German translation of the Scriptures, A. D. 1522, expires about 1882. Rev. x: 6, and Matt. xxiv. 14.

The great powers of earth are massing their hosts for a mighty contest, to settle, if possible, the great questions of international policy that have long disturbed the world. The great political conflict in our own country has failed to decidedly elect either candidate. On election day the writer was in New Jersey, and quietly recorded his own suffrage for the Divine Monarch, God's candidate for earth's empire. Isa. xlii: 1-4. Our love of this free country and its institutions remains unchilled, and we heartily pray for a lengthening of its tranquility. But we have lost all hope that man will ever reform the world. We wait for the coming of One before whom kings shall bow down, and whom nations shall serve, to redress the wants of the poor and needy. Psa. lxxii. 1-17. But we must close. We throw out the foregoing as suggestive for contemplation and future study. In our own case we shall engage in no warfare against the existing denominations. We look upon the world with a grieved heart. The churches and world have not known the time of their visitation. As a parent, we feel for our children and grandchildren. We feel too, for the children of others. As the little ones gather round for their Christmas presents, we sadly forecast the contingencies of the future, and pray Jesus who loved the children, to take them into his own care and protection. To our brethren and friends, here and elsewhere, we wish a happy Christmas. To the readers of our paper we express our thanks for all their favors. We must, however, say that our cause demands sacrifice on their part. For ourself we expect to labor and sacrifice as much as we can in the future, as we have tried to do in the past. Some, we trust, will help bear the burden of proclaiming the last message of mercy to the world. Some will refuse to do this, and carry all their money to the judgment. We find no fault, but envy them not when called upon to render an account of their stewardship. In a few instances we have been treated in harsh and bitter expressions for our supposed delinquencies. We shall forbear to wound feelings in return. We are trying to fix up our little individual matters for the soon-coming judgment. We shall try to be blameless and harmless and do all we can to hold forth the word of life to a perishing world.

The dark clouds are massing up heavily in the horizon, threatening soon to overspread the whole heavens, and sweep the earth with a tempest of fury. We hope then to abide under the shadow of the Almighty, and be hid in his pavilion for safety. We know not the time of Jesus' coming. No period exactly reaches it. Some terminate before that event, and some extend beyond it. The 1260 years of Mohammedan supremacy terminate in proximity to that return, but what the variation may be we can not tell. With temples frosted with the snows of time—with a shadow falling graveward—we still indulge the hope that we have cherished for nearly forty years, of living till Shiloh shall come. With solemn faltering footstep we tread the dangerous pathway leading to the close of this dispensation. With this ends our labor for one year as associate editor of the RESTITUTION. It has been a position of peculiar trial, for which we were very poorly qualified. May the Lord forgive all our short-comings and imperfections. The paper will be needed to herald Messiah's return, and to unfold the blessings of the covenants of promise. We wish its continuance and prosperity. With full allegiance to our Lord Jesus Christ, with love to the brotherhood, with a spirit of forbearance and kindness toward all, and "malice toward none," we repeat the expression of our best wishes, and the congratulations of the holiday season to all our readers. Beyond the coming storm and tempest bloom the Paradises of God. This earth will find its peace and rest when the "Glory Leader" appears. His hand will wipe away the tears from all faces and fill anguished hearts with unalloyed ecstacies. Let us not waste the very few remaining years of this dispensation.

S. A. C.

Elevation.

"What must I do to be saved?" Success in any enterprise depends upon a correct understanding of the principles that govern it. This is no less true in grace than in secular affairs. The strongest proof of this may be found in the language of Paul: "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Here the great truth is unfolded, that no approach to God can be made except through the legitimate channel his wisdom has devised. That is clear testimony concerning who and what God is, for without such testimony no proper conception could be formed of him.

For in the absence of testimony, how are we to know who is to be the object of our adoration? We might worship Moloch, Vishnu or the sun; nay, even idols that our own frail hands have made. But with the light of revelation there is no mistaking the Being who claims our worship. Then all that is necessary to know about his nature, attributes and locality, is given in language that can be easily understood.

It is then we learn the reality of his existence; not an abstract principle, as of electricity, or odile, but a real tangible being, possessed of infinite knowledge, wisdom, and goodness whose abode is the heaven of heavens, from whence he looks in pity and love upon the frail race he has made.

The strong love God has for man is thus beautifully expressed: "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life." What practical love! What noble compassion! Oh! how different from the empty expressions of human beings, whose love is of the abstract kind, and suffers the objects it should reach to perish for want of the practical application of this heaven-born principle.

"Oh, for such love, let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break;
All harps attune, and sing aloud
The Savior's praises speak."

The key that solves the great problem of salvation is found in the last quotation I have made. To be saved, then, does not mean to escape the awful fate of eternal life in misery, for no such penalty is threatened. To be saved is equivalent to receiving everlasting life. Its opposite, "to be lost," is to perish, to die, to lose life. And, in accordance with this Scriptural truth, we will quote Paul's language again: "For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ, our Lord." From the foregoing, it is clearly established that, "to be saved," in a Scriptural sense, means to come into possession of eternal life; for Jesus says, "Of all that the Father hath given me I shall lose nothing, but shall raise him up at the last day;" again, "that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day."

Having now shown from the Bible what it is to be saved, we will now proceed to a Scriptural answer to the question wrung from the heart of the honestly and thoroughly convicted jailor (Acts xvi. 30). And here I would remark that the answer to this important question, as given by those uninstructed in the word of life, is too often "a string of glittering generalities" that leaves the inquirer in even still greater darkness than before. Of such it may be truthfully said, "they darken counsel by words without knowledge." To the anxious inquiry of the jailor came the quick response of his teachers, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."

Is this all, nothing to do but to simply believe? "Yes," says one, "simply to exercise faith in Christ." But, hold a moment. How could the jailor exercise faith in Jesus Christ without testimony concerning this wonderful personage? Is a Scriptural fact that "faith comes by hearing." Was the jailor's case an exception to this grand truth? Certainly not; for the record plainly says, "And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house." In other words they instructed this man and his family of intelligent persons, by expounding unto them the word of the Lord, or as elsewhere stated, glad tidings, or good news concerning the kingdom of God. The great message delivered by Jesus, but unfolded the great purposes of God in relation to the Messiah and his reign of righteousness on earth. To illustrate the jailor's question, and the direct response of his teachers, we will suppose a foreigner, newly arrived, meeting an intelligent government official, to whom he puts this question: "How shall I become a citizen?" The official answers directly, "Become naturalized." This answer, although correct, leaves his foreigner badly perplexed, until the process of becoming naturalized is fully explained, when the matter becomes plain. So, too, the jailor doubtless listened with rapt attention while his teachers unfolded the grand truths of inspiration, showing the Messiah, who was to come, his holy life, his sufferings, death, resurrection and ascension, his coming again in glory to reign upon David's throne, and away his scepter over all nations.

When this grand theme had been thus plainly set forth, and the minds of the jailor's family stored with the good news of the kingdom of God, or, in other words, had heard and believed the word of the Lord, they were baptized straightway. Behold the unity of the divine plan. In the case of the jailor, intelligent faith in God's plans preceded his baptism, they bear the same relation to each other that cause does to effect. When Philip taught the Samaritans, it is recorded of them, that when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized both men and women. And when Peter had declared to the assembled thousands, on the day of Pentecost, that God had raised Christ from the dead to reign on David's throne, they were cut to the heart, and cried, "what must we do?" Quick as the lightning leaps from the thunder cloud comes the answer, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, and you shall receive the remission of sins." Why then prolong the theme? Here we have called a few specimens from the record showing just how aliens were anciently brought into the household of faith. And to all who desire a home in God's coming kingdom, with eternal life, and the society of the good of all ages, believe the word of the Lord, accept the good news of the kingdom, renounce your evil ways, be baptized, and lead a holy life, and God's promise is, "ye shall be mine when I make up my jewels,"—Amen.

J. F. WAGONER.

Don't Look so Cross.

What is the use of it? Suppose things do go wrong and your friends sometimes choose to consult their own inclinations instead of yours—frowns don't help the matter any, neither do impatient words draw the hearts of others any nearer to you. The path of life is thickly strewn with troubles and crosses—with thorns and thistles, but there is here and there a sweet draught and a refreshing shade—there is often a rose by the wayside, and sometimes a handful of pearls.

Other hearts are burdened as well as our own, and could we look into their depths and see the suffering so carefully hidden there, we should never wound them even by fretful or unkind words.

Life is sweeter and friends are dearer when love and sympathy go hand in hand.

How often a cheerful word or a cordial greeting will break the clouds that hang over our heads. Many a gloomy hour in our own hearts might be saved by a little earnest effort. You don't feel like being brave and cheering others, when you are blue and discouraged yourself—of course you don't; but if you will only try it, you will find the receipt works both ways and by bearing the burdens of others, you will often lose your own.

Perhaps you are tired or sick—your stomach may not be doing its duty, and there is probably a general rebellion in the region of your liver; such things are very liable to happen, (especially in bilious countries) but it is hard enough to be sick, without being cross; bad enough to be bilious without being so blue as to fling everybody that comes near you.

Cheer up, then, and look the world bravely in the face—don't try to shirk your duties or evade your responsibilities. Don't grumble over your misfortunes and trials—remember that the most of us have more blessings than we deserve.

The trouble is, that we spend the most of our time in mourning over the things that go wrong, and, therefore, pay but very little attention to those that go right. We count the evils instead of the blessings,—we see the thorns and forget the flowers—we find the stones that lie in our pathway, while we overlook the pearls. We feel a thoughtless or unkind word that lingers on the lips of a friend, and forget how often the same lips have uttered words of love and sympathy.

Let us remember the kindness and forget the unkind actions—remember the smiles and forget the tears,—remember the words of tenderness, and forget our impatient moment—remember the sunshine, and forget the storm.

"There is no dearth of kindness
In this world of ours,
And only in our blindness,
We call the thorns for flowers."

MRS. H. V. REED.

Correspondence.

The undersigned went to Wheatland to meet Mr. Manford, Saturday night, Nov. 25, and heard him preach his destiny of the body and spirit. The spirit, according to Mr. Manford, is resurrected out of the body, and the body is restored to earth, and this completes the resurrection. When he had finished, I challenged him to defend what he had preached in debate, but he declined. Some outsiders proposed to make him up $35 or $40 if he would accept, but he still declined to stand fire. I then gave notice that on Sunday night I would reply; which I did, and showed that Mr. Manford's only hope was based on the supposed immortality of the soul, or spirit; and this being untrue, he would have universal damnation instead of salvation.

Parted with the dear ones of the faith on Tuesday, and hastened home through a snow storm to attend the Port Scott conference, and got to the place of meeting Saturday night. Here I had the pleasure of meeting Bro. Hayden and wife, Bro. Foore, and Bro. Cooper, and on Sunday night, Bro. Loser and wife.

There is but few in the place that look for the Great King. Found a pleasant home with Judge Chapman and Bro. McDonald. The few in the place declined to accept the proposed twenty-six articles of the American Christian Union; believing that it is all that they can do to live up to what they find in the Old Book. Bro. Foore says, that this is the mind of the brethren in south-western Kansas.

Sunday afternoon, we met at Bro. McDonald's to break bread. Elev[illegible] all surrounded the table. It was [illegible] to be there, as all seemed to be ch[illegible]. On Sunday night, the writer spok[illegible] the 12th chapter of Revelation,—[illegible]ing that the woman was the chu[illegible] that the child born was Paul's m[illegible]sin—that the dragon was di[illegible] Rome—that the they who fed her w[illegible] the horns of the dragon—that the flood[illegible] of water sent to destroy the woman, was the revolution in France—that the second time she found shelter in the desert (in the nations). In the 17th chapter, we see the same woman again, and her course ends in the flames of judgment. In the first scene she was clothed with the Sun of righteousness—in the last scene, she is clothed with antichrist—in purple, and scarlet; that her appearance is like God's Messiah when she is clothed with him, baptized into him, and that those who are baptized into antichrist, are clothed with him. Thus God has given the history of his church. The word is, "come out of her (Babylon) my people."

The meeting closed, and the good-bye was said in hope of soon meeting in the kingdom.

Well-built Christians.

A well-built Christian is harmonious in all his parts. No one trait shames another. He is not a jumble of inconsistencies—to-day devout, to-morrow frivolous; to-day liberal to one cause, and to-morrow niggardly toward another; to-day fluent in prayer, and to-morrow fluent in polite falsehoods. He does not keep the fourth commandment on Sunday, and break the eighth commandment on Monday. He does not shirk an honest debt to make a huge donation. He is not in favor of temperance for other folk, and of a glass of toddy for himself. He does not exhort or pray at each of the few meetings he attends, to make up arrearages for the more meetings which he neglects. He does not so consume his spiritual fuel during revival seasons, that he is cold as Nova Zembla during all the rest of the time; nor do his spiritual fervors outrun his well-ordered conversation.—Cuyler.

One of the few sites in Palestine the identity of which has never been assailed is that of Jacob's Well. Capt. Anderson, who examined it in 1866, cleared out the mouth, and was lowered by a rope to the bottom. He found it seventy-five feet deep, of a circular form, with a diameter of 7 feet 6 inches, and lined throughout with rough masonry. Captain Anderson thinks, however, that the well—into which every visitor throws a stone—was formerly very much deeper. Besides the stones, the debris of a ruined church, built over the well in the fourth century, has fallen into it and helped to fill it up. An offer has been made by Dr. Nathaniel H gers, of Exeter, England, to contribute the sum of $5k towards the complete clearing out of this well, so rich in Scriptural associations. The Palestine Exploring Committee have accepted his offer, and propose to perform this work on the return of the survey party.

Our Creed.

"Beginning at Jerusalem." Luke xxiv: 47.

Submitted to the intelligence and candor of the reader

"Have you a creed?" said Mrs. A., an intelligent and estimable lady, a Roman Catholic, to a disciple of Christ. "I heard that one of your peculiarities was, that you acknowledged no creed."

"Certainly we have a creed," was the reply. "To be without a creed would be to believe nothing, as the creed embodies what we believe."

"Oh, then, as you have a creed, please let me see it," she urged. "Certainly, I will lend you a copy if you haven't one," replied Mr. B.

"Is it in the form of a book?" she said.

"Yes, it is a book of very ancient date and very high authority, and it is written expressly for man, so that he has no occasion to invent one. I hope you are not wholly unacquainted with it. It is the Bible."

"Oh, yes," she said, after a pause, "I perceive you are a protestant. Am I not right?"

"Yes," replied Mr. B. "I am doubly a protestant, I protest against the Catholics and I protest against the protestants. Both are condemned, in my humble judgment, by our creed."

"Indeed," she said, "since you are opposed to both, how shall we class you in religion? Have you no name?"

"We have a name. We take that of our founder."

"Who is your founder?"

"Our Lord Jesus of Nazareth, and we take his name. We are called christians, for it is written in the Bible, 'The Disciples were called Christians first in Antioch.'" Acts xi: 26.

"Oh, yes," she said, "we also follow him."

"True," said Mr. B., "How is it that you do not take his name? Is it not a reproach to the founder of a family, for a son to discard the family name and assume another? For Mr. Smith to call himself Mr. Jones?"

"Oh, you know," she said, "there is nothing in a name. 'A rose by any other name would smell as sweet.'"

"That point," said Mr. B., "though a poetic license, is hardly true, in fact. We know when we call it by any other than its own, it ceases to be a rose, and becomes to us the lily, or the anemone or what we make it. Thus we see names are important. Hence that other point 'The Bible is ruled by names.' If innocent or indifferent, why do you object that opposers of your church call themselves protestants and you papists, romanists, &c.? Names in religion can never be unimportant or indifferent, so long as it is written 'There is no other name given among men whereby we must be saved, but Jesus Christ of Nazareth.'"

Mrs. A. "Our name is given us by the church, and you know you are commanded in the Bible to 'hear the church.'"

Mr. B. "True, but these words of Jesus must not be torn from their context, which limits and explains their application. If you will turn to the passage in Matthew xviii: 15–18, you may detect, by reading it, the fallacy of extending your reasoning beyond the particular case in which we are to 'hear the church.' It is written 'If thy brother trespass against thee' &c., an appeal lies to the church in the last resort, and it is certainly an usurped authority to extend the jurisdiction beyond the limit prescribed by the law-giver. This conclusion is sustained by the numerous and repeated warnings in Scripture against making void the Word of God, by the doctrines and commandments of men."

Mrs. A. (With animation) "Let me ask you a question, Mr. B. Which is the older the church or the Bible? Now you know the church existed before the Bible was written, and consequently the church, not the Bible, must have been the first teacher of the true religion. You cannot escape this dilemma."

Mr. B. (Calmly) "The Bible is the Word of God written, but this word was first spoken, and the church cannot be older than the word, for it is written 'In the beginning was the Word. How can anything be older than the beginning?"

Mrs. A. "You know you are indebted to the church for the Bible. We catholics gave you the Scriptures. You got them from us the Mother Church. So that, without our faithful care of the Holy Oracles you would have been without them, and through our Priesthood, we give you also the true meaning and interpretation of them."

Mr. B. "Suppose for the sake of argument, I admit your claim that your church transmitted to us the Bible, would it thence follow that we must accept her interpretation of the Book? If a father send a written message—a letter—by his servant to his son, must the son turn from the letter itself and inquire of the servant as to his father's meaning? Is the servant more competent to explain the letter than the master himself?

But in truth, are we indebted to the Catholic Church for the possession and knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. The Old Testament come to us from the Jews, 'Unto them,' saith Paul in Romans ch. iii: 2, 'were committed the Oracles of God.' As to the New Testament so far as human testimony goes, especially through Luther and the reformers of his day and notably by the numerous bulls and anathemas of the Popes against the circulation of the Bible among the laity, it appears that we acquired this invaluable gift to man not by, but in spite of the Catholic Church, who sought to withhold it from the masses. It has ever been the work of the heretics—so called—to preserve the custody of God's Word free from the inventions and doctrines of men. The book itself gives us the admonition 'to the law and the testimony—if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them.'" Isa. viii. 20.

Mrs. A. "It will not do to take the Bible alone. You can prove anything you please by it. See the fruits of that fatal course in the numberless and contrarious sects of Protestantism. They all profess to take the Bible for their guide and you plainly see the consequence."

Mr. A. "Do you see that your plan of 'hearing the church,' produces any better result? Look at the numerous schisms which have sprung up in her bosom; the Arian the Athanasian and others. Do not all the protestant seceders of Rome practically or remotely? As the Mother Church as you call her, she must needs have daughters. Hence she has become the faithful parent of the very sects you condemn, notwithstanding her boast of unity and grand panacea of Papal supremacy and infallibility to keep her whole.

As to the charge that we can prove anything by the Bible, we reply that sect-making is one of the sad consequences of not taking the Scriptures as our only guide and arbiter in religion. The names Catholic and Protestant, &c., &c., are all outside of the Bible, which no where appropriates these titles to the servants of God. They are, without exception, departing from and substitutes for the bible names of Christ's followers who still claim the now forgotten and absolute names of saints (like Abraham Moses, Aaron, David and Daniel) or Disciples, Brethren and Christians (like Peter Paul, James and John.) If our modern sect-builders would forsake their inventions and truly follow the Bible, they would become Christians, and denouncing all others, cleave only to the "founder and finisher of the faith." Then there would be no Catholics and no Protestants; but being one in Christ they would be complete in him in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.

Mrs. A. seemed interested but undecided as to her seeing the subject, which led Mr. B. to proceed thus:

As you have asked me several questions as to my creed, will you gratify my desire for light on so important a subject, by allowing me a like liberty as to yours?

Mrs. A. Most willingly as far as I may be able.

Mr. B. Is it not your belief that the church of Christ began at Rome; that it was there founded by Peter, "the prince of the apostles" as you call him, and that it is to that source we turn for the true light?

Mrs. A. Such is my firm conviction.

Mr. B. On what evidence do you found that conviction?

Mrs. A. On the testimony of history—on the voice of tradition—and the most ancient and trust-worthy chronicles of the past.

Mr. B. And do they all testify that the church began at Rome?

Mrs. A. They do, I believe.

Mr. B. Then I must have a book in my library that you have not seen.

Mrs. A. What book is that?

Mr. B. The Bible; for I find it written in Luke xxiv: 47-49, that Jesus commanded his apostles to "preach repentence and remission of sins in his name, among all nations," "beginning at Jerusalem," (not at Rome.) Now if they began at Rome, did they not disobey their instructions and begin at the wrong place? Can you believe them guilty of an offence so grave? Were there not Christians at Jerusalem before the Gospel was carried to Rome?—before Peter went there, if indeed he was ever there, of which there is no trustworthy proof. Can you wonder in the presence of such stubborn facts and pointed Divine testimony, against the assumption of Rome's primacy and supremacy. I should feel justified in discarding her pretensions and be driven to the conclusion that the church of Rome, and all her Protestant offshoots are too modern, too recent in their origin to be the Church of Christ which began at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost A. D. 33, and consequently that we must seek elsewhere "the truth as it is in Jesus and the faith once delivered to the saints." Are we not admonished in Holy Writ "Let God be true though every man be a liar." To the Bible then, which alone of all books contains the inspired history of Christ's Church, we must turn at last.

Mrs. A. Well, I have heard many objections to the Catholic Church, but it has been reserved for you to add a new one, for I never before heard that she was "too modern" seeing that she is confessedly the mother church—the oldest of them all.

Mr. B. Do you not by these words discredit her claims to this high antiquity, the Bible being the judge between us; for in Gal. iv, 26, it is expressly written by St. Paul "Jerusalem (not Rome) is the mother of us all." So that the utmost we can admit in behalf of your greater antiquity, is that you may be the oldest of the sects and schismatics, unless it be indeed that one referred to in connection with the same Paul, as "The sect every where spoken against," Acts xxviii, 22, of which he was charged with being "a ring-leader."

* * * * * *

Here the interview terminated, but not before Mr. B. had placed in the hands of his amiable interrogator for future reference and consideration, an outline of the argument here briefly sketched in the following summary:

Catholics begin at Rome with the Popes. Episcopalians begin in England with Henry the Eighth, Latimer and Ridley. Lutherans in Germany with Luther. Presbyterians in Geneva with Calvin. Baptists in the Swiss valleys with Waldo. Methodists in England, with Wesley and Whitfield; and the numberless small sects of the Gentile world—the present Anti-builders of to-day begin with their respective founders but Christians begin at Jerusalem with Christ and the Apostles.

"Preach repentence and remission of sins among all nations beginning at Jerusalem." Such are wholesome words of the Great Teacher to his chosen Apostles. Who shall we not heed the lesson they teach? In these times of confusion and opposition of sinners on every side, what duty is there except in "beginning at Jerusalem?" But then, if we do so, how minus the conclusion, how inexorable the logic that, one by one, we part company with those who do not "begin at Jerusalem." For all must admit there were neither Greek, nor Protestants at Jerusalem in the beginning. Truth and candor compel the confession that Christian faith and practice were in full and perfect operation in Jerusalem, before any of the apostles or disciples of Jesus ever went to Rome—before there was any Pope. Before Luther warred against the papacy—before the Eighth Henry of England and his recreant Bishops met at Westminister to form their infant establishment—before Calvin or Waldo or Wesley were born. Yet can we deny or doubt that there were Christians who had begun at Jerusalem long before the earliest of these church-founders appeared on the stage.

"Tarry at Jerusalem," saith Christ to his Apostles, "until ye be endued with power from on high." Luke xxiv: 49. They obeyed His words, and on the day of Pentecost, (second chapter of Acts) having received the Holy Spirit, they began at Jerusalem and preached repentance and remission of sins by baptism, as expressly recorded in their "Acts," passim.

Shall we not then heed what they have spoken and written? By adhering at Jerusalem, called by Paul in Galatians iv: 26, "the mother of us all," we go behind all these modern teachers, and sit at the feet of Jesus, and Peter, and Paul, and James and John, and learn from the divinely inspired teachers the way of life and salvation. Shall we not then set our face like flint against any other beginning than at Jerusalem?

In hearing "the Church" and in following the uncertain light of human tradition, we do not turn away from the "true light that, coming into the world, enlighteneth every man. John i: 9. Why turn from Christ to "the Church?"—from Peter to Polycarp?—from Paul to Wesley?—from Jerusalem to Rome, or Geneva, or England, or Germany?—from Moses and the Prophets to stale tradition, to Books of Rabbinical Theology, Jewish, Catholic and Protestant? from Matthew and Luke to the Theses of Luther and Calvin? from John and Paul to the Augsburg Confession, and the "Book of Common Prayer," with the Rubrics and Canons? from James and Jude to Fox's Book of Martyrs?

Is this "beginning at Jerusalem?" Is not this receding from light to darkness? from the divine to the human, in short from God to man?

Can any doubt that in believing what Christ and the Apostles taught, as recorded in the blessed Word, that in walking in the way they teach as we shall be saved? Have we any teachers better or wiser? If not, then are we not in great danger of being misled by other guides, however honest and sincere? for all experience teaches us that men may be, and often are perfectly honest and sincere, and yet wholly in the wrong. Paganism proves this position.

But turn we to the "beginning at Jerusalem." Open God's record at the first and second chapters of Acts. There see this beginning: "How readest thou?" Those teachers sent by God, tell their hearers (Acts ii: 21,) that "whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved," and in the twenty-fourth to forty-second verses they explain the meaning of thus calling upon the name of the Lord for salvation, by declaring the purpose for which God had raised up Christ, namely, to plant His Kingdom in the earth, that he might sit on the throne of His father David, and in due time make His foes His footstool, and meanwhile to occupy the right hand of His Father's throne, as the "Lord and Christ." The second Psalm and Luke i: 32, with many other Bible testimonies reach the same plain truth. It is thus we learn that in the beginning men were taught to become Christians.

I. By believing the promises concerning the Christ as the Prophet Priest and King, of God's appointment, to redeem and rule the world in righteousness—to reign personally in great power and glory in Jerusalem over all nations—as the Prophet like unto Moses—the Priest, after the order of Melchizedec, as he is now, and God's kingdom, mount Zion as he is to be when he returns to the earth. These promises, made to our first parents in Eden, repeated to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and David and Daniel, and renewed by the Christ himself to his apostles and disciples, constitute in their faith and hope, the Gospel of the kingdom of God which he commanded to be preached for the obedience of faith among all nations. Rom. xvi: 26.

II. By repenting of their past misdeeds, and by a changed heart and practice in respect to their future disposition and course in life.

III. By baptism in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. Acts ii: 38.

No honest man can read the record and gainsay this conclusion from it. The succeeding chapters from the same book, all teach invariably the same doctrine, but particularly chapter iii: 18-23; chapter viii: 5, 12, 38 and 40. Also chapter ix: 18-21; x: 34, 48; xvi: 15, 30, 34; xviii: 8, 30, 31; xviii: 8; xix: 8; xx: 21, 26; xxii: 14, 16; xxvi: 6, 24; xxviii: 17, 31.

For further proof see Moses, the Psalms and the Prophets of the Old Testament and the New Testament—passim.

Thus faith and obedience constitute God's religion. Thus the Christian religion was taught, "beginning at Jerusalem," and thence carried unto "all the world" of the Roman Empire.

Can we improve God's plan? Nay, verily. Then let us turn our faces away from Rome, England, Geneva, etc., and go back to this "beginning," for the only, pure, uncorrupted, untraditionized "Gospel of the Kingdom of God" which Jesus expressly commanded His Apostles to preach. In Matthew and Mark, "in all the world and to all nations."

How marked and broad the contrast between such preaching and doctrine "in the beginning" and the miserable substitutes for both, offered by all the modern churches both Catholic and Protestant.

The gloomy superstitions—the fashionable license—the skeleton fanaticism of these modern Babel-sects, all spring from a common error

That error is not "beginning at Jerusalem.

ALLAN B. MAGRUDER.

Pregnant with Significance.

In the RESTITUTION for Nov. 22nd an article headed by the interrogatory: "Do the dead literally Know Nothing?" is signed, "Wm. Hicks."

The writer after spending his strength on the passage in Eccl. viv. 5, "But the dead know not anything,"—to prove that they do know something, apparently, even while they are dead, though nothing of this world, seems to wish some one would say something "regarding the anomalous silence of Jesus and the apostles regarding the popular belief of their age, viz: That there was a spiritual state of consciousness after death."

Why they did not expose the error of the common belief, if an error, is the point which he thinks "even at a glance, is pregnant with significance."

This silence is certainly most pregnant with significance; but the significance is, that there was nothing in the notion worth their notice. In this we agree with Dr. Whately, that such a belief was totally ignored by Christ and his apostles. It never was a Jewish belief—never found in Moses or the prophets, and all Jews that ever adopted it received it from pagan philosophy that was wholly outside of their religion. But where is the evidence that it was the popular and general belief of their time? Since the large and influential sect of the Sadducees, believed in nothing but total death—"no resurrection, neither angel nor spirit." Acts xxiii. 8.

"It appears from many passages in the Jewish rabbins," says a writer of good authority, "that they held the doctrine of the migration of souls from one body to another; and it is probable that they derived it from the ancient Pharisees, and these from the Oriental philosophers."

Now could we not make some show—very weak we admit—of an argument for the "metempsychosis," on the ground of the silence of Christ and the apostles about it? Does not some one think the silence is significant and pregnant with meaning? Yes, significant of its nothingness.

The light shone in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not. A noble steamer goes right on her course, with all her lights and signals and power and living freight, not stopping to attempt to dissipate all the foggy mists. And so the gospel amidst darkness, giving light and safety to all on board and a good hope of the harbor.

There was little need of entering the arena of pagan controversy with the Jews. All that was needful to cure them of Gentile philosophical conceits, was to reprove them for their departures, and bring them back to original Judaism. The very first of Judaism was in this: "I will give unto thee and to thy seed after thee, all the land of Canaan wherein thou art a stranger, for an everlasting possession. And I will be thine God." And when Jesus declared: "I am the resurrection and the life," he superceded all other conscious life of the dead. But Judaism held to the promise and the hope of the promise. All good Jews "obtained a good report" of the future possession of the land, while they lived their temporal life upon it; and died in faith of the promise, not having received its provisions, but in full expectation of a future realization, Heb. xi. 13, 39. This was a Jewish hope. Originated by Him who knew man wholly; and fully comprehended the being to whom he said: "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return."

Paul did not stop to explain to King Agrippa and noble Festus, and Bernice, with the chief captains and principal men of the city, why he ignored in toto all ideas Platonic, of conscious shades in Hades; but in brief and clear words stated the Christian and Jew confidence. "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers." And the twelve tribes in law service hoped to come to the promise long since made to Abraham and reaffirmed to Isaac and Jacob. Now we admit that Paul's audience of Roman officers and chief men of Cesaren, could not see the availability of this christian Jew expectation in the promise. If their philosophical myths had taught them that the shades of good men were conscious in hades. Myths could not have taught them how Abraham could be the inheritor, the inhabitant and possessor, with his seed, of a portion of the earth, ages after his death; though in his lifetime he had put up his tent upon it. We admit too that Paul could not have explained how it could be. This incongruity prompted Festus to call out, "Paul, you are beside yourself! Much study has turned your head!" But sober sanity cuts the Gordian knot: "Why should it be though a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" This is the Jews and Christians expectation of consciousness and of existence after death—the resurrection.

If Roman Senators laughed at,—and the great intellect of Cicero, lost all confidence in soul immortality, as soon as he ceased reading proof treatises upon it, and even Socrates intimated that most men did not believe in it. We do not see an thing "anomalous" or ominous in the alledged silence of Christ and the apostles respecting it. In truth this Gentile fancy had not come up then, to the mighty dignity and importance it now holds. It was no chief cornerstone nor foundation to build the theory of christianity upon, as now. It was to all true Israelites, true to the law and the prophets, and to all christians, much as the Indian's belief in the happy hunting grounds, to which his rifle and "faithful dog shall bear him company," is now regarded as a contemptible nice dream.

The apostles had found One who was "The Resurrection and the life." "A minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made to the fathers." Most of the Jews in their perversion judged that He was not the One who should come to be head of all the seed of Abraham and confirm the truth of God's promises; and still looked for another. If they had been convinced as the crowd who heard Peter on the day of Pentecost, that He was the One God's oath pledged to David as Heir to his throne, their vain deed a would at once have given way and out of mind.

Convince men of this and they are effectually and directly cured of all other confidences, immortal soulism, atheism, Polytheism, Development by natural selections, life in hades and life beyond the skies, all flee like the ghostly phantoms of dreamland.

Correspondence.

DEAR BRETHREN:—It is with pleasure I send the report of meetings and note by the way: On the 13th of November, 1876, I left Boon, Iowa, to fill an appointment at Rockcreek, Jasper county, Iowa. On the night of the 15th of November, I staid with Bro. Dr. John F. White, of Story county. I was treated very kindly by the family, for which I return them my sincere thanks. On the 17th inst. I started for Bro. William R. Eychaners of Jasper county, which place I reached on the eve of the 17th. On the 18th it snowed and rained. I harnessed my horses to drive to Rockcreek through the storm, Bro. and Sister Eychaner said I must not go through the storm. I took their advice and staid with them, and with Bro. Milton Eychaner until the 21st inst, when I returned to Story county, to fill an appointment there, made at the request of Bro. J. T. Prime. I filled this to the best of my ability. On the 21st Bro. Prime wished me to preach on Brotherly Love, text, 1st John iii. 14, 15.: "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother, abideth in death. Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer has eternal life abiding in him." (v. 20: "If a man say I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar, for he that loveth not his brother whom he has seen, how can he love God whom he has not seen? And this commandment have we from Him that he who loveth God love His brother also."

I called their attention to Christ, "Greater love then this has no man that a man lay down his life for his friends," and many other quotations suitable for the occasion. I found the Brethren at the Story county church badly demoralized. Some claim it is the Woodrow trouble, others claim it is not. While the Brethren were singing at the close of the meeting, I shook hands with all in the house, I then tried to get the Brethren to extend the right hand of fellowship with each other, and forgive each other as Christ had forgiven them, and commence a new life this 21st day of November, 1876. Some few extended the right hand, but it was not a union, though glad and rejoiced I should have been, if the Brethren had all extended the right hand of fellowship.

"He that tries not the spirit of Christ, is none of his." Remember this, Brethren. I staid over night with Bro. J. T. Primes, where I was made welcome and well provided for. On the 22d I left Bro. Prime's for home.

I sent an appointment to the Pearson School House, about 6 miles south of Ames, Iowa, to commence Dec. 2d. 1876. This is a place where the ancient faith was never before preached. Quite a good many turned out to the meeting the evening of Dec. 2d. I preached what we believe to be the gospel on faith and hope. Sunday at eleven o'clock, I preached of baptism. Matt. xxviii. 19. Sunday evening I preached from Matt. v. 5, the kingdom and coming of Christ to this earth again. The house was full; seats were brought in to seat those that were standing. The friends received the truth with interest. At the close of the meeting, I thought I would try and see how much they were interested. I stated to them I was nearly worn out with a severe pain in my breast, but if they wanted meeting to continue, I would stay two nights longer, and would take a vote to that effect. They all arose to their feet, even the little boys and girls. I then told them I would continue the meeting two nights.

On Monday, Dec. 4th, I hitched up my team and drove over to Bro. J. T. Primes to get him to come and help me at the place of meeting. I found him at Bro. Samuel White's, where we took dinner with Bro. Rude. We returned to the place of meeting Dec. 4th, being a little late. The house was filled with intelligent people awaiting us. I preached from Job xiv. 14, on the resurrection of the dead, followed by Bro. J. T. Prime. Dec. 5th, Bro. Prime preached on "What is the spirit of man?" He made it very clear and plain. I then gave them a variety sermon which was pleasing to all, old and young. We made many friends who are in faith with us: Bro. and Sister Matthew Elliot, Bro. and Sister John Rubey, Bro. Sharp, the school director, who declares it was the only Bible preaching they have heard, or had in their school house. Any of the Brethren passing through that section of the country, will find warm friends and a welcome place to stop, at either Bro. John Rubey's or Bro. Matthew Elliott's. I shall hold a series of meetings there for one week, commencing some time next month. I think a church can be organized there with a little more labor.

Dec. 6th, Bro. Prime and myself started home. Bro. Prime came as far as Ontario, where he took the train for Nevada, where he would get off to go to his home, 6 miles in the country. I came on to Boone, the place of my home for the winter. If any Brethren are living near Boone, I would be glad to have them call and see me, or write me. I shall soon commence a series of meetings one mile east of Boone, at the John A. Hull School House, by request of some friends living near said school house. I cannot get any of the churches in Boone, as they claim my theory of the Bible is wrong, yet they have not time to reason the real points of difference. I hope before many years to have a wagon in such a shape that I can have my own meeting house with me, then I can visit the towns and cities.

Your Brother in Christ,

WALDO AGELER.

Friendship.

'Tis sad, indeed, to contemplate
That oft we mourn find,
With sorrow souls and void of love,
Who labor to supplant another
In the heart and friendship of a brother.

And should the new-made friend
Be kind, and true, and good,
Who shall the fun-ted, old, and tried,
Whom we have proved and understood?—
Oh, when the cleaved to life's o'er,
Then friend will grieve the friend no more!

When Jesus comes to show
The secrets of each heart;—
When we are known as we shall know;—
When friend shall no more part;—
Then they we all in Eden meet,
Rested in his righteousness complete.

Only a Woman.

Only a woman, shrunken and old,
The prey of the winds and the prey of the cold,
Cheeks that are shrunken,
Eyes that are sunken,
Lips that were never o'er-bold;
Only a woman, for-aken and poor,
Asking an alms at the bronze church-door.

Hark to the organ! roll upon roll
The waves of its music go over the soul!
Silks rustle past her
Thicker and faster;
The great bell echoes its toll.
Pain would she relieve, but not for the poor
Swings the wide open the bronze church-door.

Only a woman, waiting alone,
Icily cold on an ivy-clad throne;
What do they care for her,
Mount line a prayer for her,
Giving not bread, but a stone?
Under gold locks their haughty hearts beat,
Mocking the woes of their kin in the street.

Only a woman! In the olden days
Hope enrolled to her feighest lays;
Somebody nursed her,
Somebody kissed her,
Somebody crowned her with praise;
Somebody faced up the battle of life,
Strong for her sake who was mother or wife.

Somebody lies with a cross of her hair
Light on his heart where the death shadows are;
Somebody waits for her,
Opening the gates for her,
Giving delight for despair.
Only a woman, yesterday poor—
Dead in the snow at the bronze-church-door.

For What Shall We Pray?

"For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears." 2 Tim. iv. 3.

Nothing can be more truly pitiful than to observe the nervous and childish agitation with which the "religious world" hurries here and there, to evade, explain away, or render unnecessary the personal presence of the Son of God. "The world is improving every day," says some popular preacher; "Missions and societies will soon convert the world," says another; "The idea of the Son of man coming to reign upon earth is carnal and sinful," says a third. It is most painful to observe the inveterate malice of the heart, thus concealed under the mask of spirituality, or hid under the language of piety, like a serpent under flowers. But in spite of all this, the Lord "shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before His ancients gloriously" (Isa. xxi. 23).

In former times there was a certain body of men who were famous for long prayers; but, strange to say, when the highest authority pronounced its judgment upon these men, it was anything but a judgment of approbation. "Blessed be ye, scribes and pharisees, for your long prayers?" said the Jewish people: "Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites!" said the King of the Jews. These men of long prayers were afterwards the foremost in the crucifixion of the Son of God, and were always foremost in covetousness. Far be it from us to compare the modern protestants with the ancient pharisees; yet, in spite of ourselves, we cannot but observe a most unfortunate resemblance. The pharisees were notorious for "covetousness," and their desire for the "chief seats in the synagogues;" and modern Christians are notorious for their love of money and the approbation of men. But above all, the pharisees were accomplices in the master crime of the world,—the crucifixion of the Son of God. "Well," you will say, "there the parallel fails between the pharisees and the protestant. We have never crucified Christ, and we abhor those who did crucify Him." Do not be too hasty in repelling the accusation; though you have not crucified Christ, you have condemned Him to perpetual exile. Whatever difference exists between a sentence of death and a sentence of perpetual exile, just so much and no more exists between you and the ancient pharisees. The Lord has promised to come again, to "be King over all the earth;" and you have spiritualized and trodden under foot that magnificent promise, and have ridiculed and treated with contempt all who ventured to revive it. The Savior, with His own blood, has purchased a kingdom, and has promised to "restore all things," and you have cut down His empire to the fragment of an idea. The pharisees killed the Son of God, and you have built His sepulchre. The pharisees put Him to death, and you have buried Him for a thousand years. The pharisees crucified the Lord—not for the mere pleasure of killing Him, but because they hated His presence, His interference, and His government. He claimed to be their King, and they put Him to death that they might escape His dominion. This is precisely the temper of modern Christendom. It has no personal enmity to Christ, it has no direct wish to persecute or slay Him; but it hates His presence, it dreads His interference, and as for His kingly government, the very thought is insupportable. "What! must we give up these smooth and comfortable sermons, these cautious preachers who never tell us of the threatened judgments, nor torment us with the prophecies concerning the second advent; must we give them up for the awful presence of the king of kings?—we, who have done so much to reform our corrupt governments, who have distributed and taken bribes in voting in our men of parliament, and even cover the multitude of sins under the cloak of 'disseminating the gospel,' increasing the funds of our colleges, and improving society in general: must we renounce this system of adaptation? must we break down this finely adjusted balance, to welcome the advent of the Lord from heaven, to submit to the sanctity of His government and the purity of His plans? No; we will have Christ to save us as much as you please, for salvation is comfortable; but not to govern us, for His government is uncomfortable. We will allow him at a distance to give us spiritual directions; but never home we prefer our own government, our own ministers, and the principles we have already put into operation. We can certainly improve on 'evangelists' and govern the world quite as well without the personal presence of the Lord."

O "scribes and pharisees, hypocrites!" What, if the world should be evangelized through your instrumentality, and could be brought to the same standard with that of your ministers, what an unsanctified world of bickering and strife would you have! Are not your ministers of the different "sects" as much at variance with each other as the nations of the earth? Many of them have never been "born again," and preach, not through desire of saving souls, but because it is a profitable business. Alas! instead of your ministers being the instruments to the world's conversion, the world is fast converting them to its follies and fashions.

Our "long prayers" are therefore little better than those of the scribes and pharisees, the difference in our favor is miserably small. In spite of all we can do, the state of things both at home and abroad becomes every day still more alarming.

For what then, should we pray? We see philanthropists, philosophers, men of "progress," running to and fro with furious haste, worrying mankind with every invention of every addled brain, to force happiness upon them; and we see all their efforts come to nothing. We see the world growing more wicked and wretched every day; ripening for its last apostasy. We see the ministers of the gospel departing from the primitive doctrines of Christianity, spiritualizing the Scriptures into empty dreams, and denying the future reign of the Son of God upon earth. We see spiritualism (a sign of the "last times," 1 Tim. iv. 1), with its twenty millions of votaries spreading far and wide the "doctrines of devils" (didaskaliais daimonion, teachings of demons), denying the inspiration of the Bible, and bidding defiance to all law. "For they are the spirits of demons, doing signs to go out to the kings of the earth, and of the whole habitable globe, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty (literal translation, Rev. xvi. 14). We see Christendom diseased, and to effect its cure trying every imaginable thing but the sole remedy—the personal presence and reign of the King of glory—the world's first and last and only remedy, and yet the only remedy that is thrown aside. You hear a great lament about the sad state of affairs, but you never hear of the sovereign remedy. You may pray against the vices of the day, but you must not breathe a word as to the universal remedy. The personal reign of the Son of God is a proscribed subject, and is banished from our prayers as if it were equivalent to the "reign of terror." Yet so long as the personal reign is omitted in our prayers, just so long is God dishonored. We resemble a sick man praying for health, yet refusing the only remedy for his disease. Every invention of man is joyfully adopted, but the grand scheme of divine wisdom is contemptuously passed by.

But from the hand of God the world's deliverance must come, as the world will soon learn by an awful experience; and that deliverance would have come eighteen hundred years ago, had the world been willing to accept it. Divine wisdom saw from the first, what even a child may see now, that man cannot govern himself, man can achieve nothing, can restore nothing, can give life to nothing. Should he even be permitted as an instrument in the world's conversion, he could do no more; he could not change the brute creation, he could not change the climate, he could not restore the earth to its Eden state, nor could he bind Satan for a thousand years. Arrange it as you will, you cannot do without the direct interposition and personal presence of the "second Adam," the Lord from heaven.

It is for this manifestation we are bound to pray, as the prescribed remedy for every disease; for every disease of the mind, of the body, of the earth, and of the sky—of creation itself; "for the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." St. Paul tells us that all creation is longing for that day. David, bolder still, speaks of the inanimate creation rejoicing before the Lord, when he cometh to judge the earth. St John closes the volume of Holy Writ with that one solitary prayer, "Amen! even so; come, Lord Jesus." The first words of Scripture announce the creation of light; then, for six thousand years, the light wanders over a world of ruin and desolation; and having crossed the ghastly desert, it merges in the gorgeous light of millennial day. Creation longs, all inanimate nature rejoices, the last line of Scripture prays for the one great act, the coming of the Lord Jesus. And, wonderful to tell, this great act is despised or dreaded by the Church of God itself. Where it should be the perpetual theme, it is made the perpetual scorn. No wonder that the world does not improve, no wonder that the Church has sunk so low, when the only divine remedy is rejected, and when the poisonous remedies of money and man's wisdom are adopted in its stead. God would be really dishonored were the world to prosper under its present machinery; for if man's wisdom is to supersede the wisdom of God, if we only want God afar off, and can dispense with Him at hand, it might almost be said that we do not want him at all. "His citizens hated Him, and sent a message after Him, saying, 'We will not have this man to reign over us" (Luke xix. 14).

When the birth of the King of the Jews was proclaimed, "Herod was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him" And when the reign of the King of the Jews is announced, the gospel ministers are troubled, and all Christendom with them. They utterly deny the sovereignty of Christ; they call him their king, but deny him the kingdom; they ask for God's gifts, but do not ask for himself. Here lies the evil; God has told us by a thousand revelations that nothing but himself, his own personal presence, can renew the world. We deny the revelation, despise the promise, and look only for the gifts. We are troubled, like guilty Herod, at the presence of the king, and are put to shame by the wise men of the East, who, when they had seen the star, "rejoiced with exceeding great joy." Oh, to what a state has Christendom been reduced, when it dreads, like guilty Herod, what the heathen from the extremities of the earth rejoiced to see! When God has offered us his own Son to be our king, we scoff at the announcement, and desire no king but Cæsar. This fatal evil attends all our public prayers; and so long as we allow it to remain, we need expect no effectual answer. No prayer can be altogether in vain; some kind of answer will always be returned; but not the answer we require. Such prayers will be so far from saving us from the great tribulation, that they will be far more likely to plunge us into its awful vortex. "Pray," says Jesus, "that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." But we shut our eyes tight, and with indifference declare that we see neither signs nor danger; although passing events now warn us that the great tribulation is almost upon us. By our indifference we have added to the list another sign of the times; for Peter informs us that there shall come in the last days, "scoffers," saying, "where is the promise of his coming?" But in spite of those "scoffers," there are some who never cease to pray for the world's only remedy; and God has promised that their prayer shall be answered. "And shall not God avenge His own elect, who cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them? I tell you, that he will avenge them speedily. Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" God will not always be mocked by the dull hypocritical prayers of Christendom; but those his enemies, who would not that he should reign over them, he will order to be brought and slain before him (Luke xix. 27).—Sel.

Love is circumspect, humble and upright; not yielding to softness, or to levity, nor attending to vain things; it is sober, chaste, steady, quiet and guarded in all the senses.—Thomas A. Kempis.

The Temple of Satan is Always Open.

A young man of twenty-eight, writing to the Pall Mall Gazette, says that ever since he can remember—that is for about twenty two years—the "cannon of the world has never ceased to roar." His earliest recollection is the Crimean war. After it came the Indian mutiny, Garibaldi's exploits in Italy and the Franco-Austrian contests about Italian affairs. Then came the four years' war of the rebellion in this country, followed by the Prussian attack upon Denmark and the annexation of Schleswig-Holstein. The moment as struggle between Austria and Prussia ensued, culminating at Sadowa. The Carlist war, beginning then, has raged almost all the time since, and the Cuban insurrection, opening two years afterward, has been going on eight years.

Then came the great Franco-German war, with its extraordinary results, including Napoleon's downfall. England, during the intervals, has also had her little wars in Abyssinia and Ashantee; India and the Malay peninsula; China and New Zealand. The Dutch have had their Achiem war; Russia has fought Khokand and a half-dozen other Oriental states in Asia; France has had her unfortunate expedition to Mexico and a desultory strife in Algeria—Mexico has been in almost chronic insurrection; Brazil has fought Paraguay; a half-dozen South American Republics have had their insurrections; there have been outbreaks in Jamaica, San Domingo, and Barbadoes; Egypt has fought Abyssinia, and a native war is now progressing at the Cape of Good Hope. In the United States there have been repeated Indian wars, besides troubles in the South. And to-day, while Delaney is threatening England, and the Carlist of Europe seems tending to a general convulsion, while Russia is attacked in Asia, France in Algeria, and the English in China, the young man says we are still fought as a quarter of a century ago, that this is "the era of civilization and peace."

Time of Reward.

"Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be" Rev. xxii 12.

That every man will be rewarded according to his works, is a statement, the truthfulness of which is unquestioned by all who acknowledge the Bible as a revelation from God. But concerning the time when God will confer this reward, as well as the nature of the same, there is a want of harmony among the professed followers of Christ. Can the discord be attributed to a lack of evidence on the subject? Is not the testimony of Jesus sufficient to dispense all doubts in the minds of candid men and women, who desire to know the truth? Jno. viii, 32; Isa. viii. 20; xxxiv. 16; Jno. v 39; xvii. 17; Acts xvii. 11, 12. Let us note briefly the language of Jesus, recorded above.

1. Who is speaking? Undoubtedly the one represented by the personal pronoun, "I." "I, Jesus, have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, (Luke i. 31, 33,) and the bright and morning star." Rev. xxii. 16; i. 1. It is Jesus that speaks through the medium of an angel, to his servant John, and through him to the seven churches, Rev. i. 14.

2. Of what does he speak?

1. He speaks of his sudden coming, (which will be personal, visible and glorious, Thes. iv. 17; Rev. i. 7; Titus ii. 11, 13.) "Behold, I come quickly."

"2. He speaks of the reward, or recompense, that he brings with him, my reward is with me.

3. He tells to whom this reward is given to every man.

4. He gives the manner of conferring this reward upon every man. It will be given according as his work shall be. How plain, though vast and comprehensive, are the words of Jesus! "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." No man will go unrewarded. God proposes to reward man, and not some immaterial, imperishable ghost. God's love embraces the perishing. "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life," Jno. iii. 14, 16. When Jesus comes, he will bring a reward for every man. Consequently they will not be rewarded prior to that epoch, in earth's history. All future reward is contingent upon the coming of Jesus, and the resurrection of the dead. "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Luke xiv 14. This recompense will be in the earth, Prov. xi. 31. That one word "reward," includes in its height, breadth and depth, the endless sweep of the ages to come, that shall roll in divine splendor over earth renewed. Eph. ii. 7; Rev. xxi. 1, 5; xxii. 1, 5. As we can not enter upon the glorious reward of eternal life, (Rom. ii. 7; vi. 23; Jno. iii. 14, 16; vi. 40; xvii. 1, 3; 1st, Cor xv. 51, 52; Col. vi. 7, 9; 1st Tim. vi. 12, 19; Titus i. 2; iii. 7; 2nd, Pet. i. 4; 1st, Jno. ii. 25; iv. 9; v. 9, 12) until Christ, who is our life, shall appear, what transcendent importance must ever attach to the blessed hope of Jesus' coming, Col. iii. 4; Titus ii. 11, 13. It is the Christians hope, joy and crown of rejoicing, 1st Thess. i. 9, 10; ii. 19. Is it your hope? We expect our reward then, but not till then. "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works," Matt. xvi. 27.

1. Who shall come? The Son of man.

2. How shall he come? In the glory of his Father with his angels.

3. What will he then do? And then he shall reward every man according to his works. The dead, (as well as the quick or living) shall be judged by Christ at his appearing and kingdom, and a judgment must precede reward, the reward is not till the appearing and kingdom of Jesus, Acts xvii. 31; 2nd Tim. iv. 1; Acts x. 42; Rev. xi 18. It is not at or in death, but beyond it, in the world (age) to come, Mark x. 23, 30. "At the resurrection of the just," Luke xiv. 14. We, like Job, must wait till our change come, Job xiv. 14. The waiting place is the grave. Job xvii. 13, 16. The change will be from death to life, from natural to spiritual, from mortal to immortal, from earthly to heavenly, Isa. xxvi. 19; 1st Cor. xv. 42, 55. May the Lord direct our hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ, 2nd Thess. iii. 5. May we be found to look for that blessed hope of seeing Jesus, and he made like him when he shall appear, Titus ii. 13; 1st Jno. iii. 2, 3.

AUSTIN CURTIS.

Little Things.

Some of the most noteworthy things in God's Book are, "little things." It was a "little oil" in the cruse of which the widow of Zarephi partook during many long months, without diminishing it. It was a "little cake," which she was about to prepare for herself and son when the prophet of God came to her house. Little was the cloud, at first, which answered Elijah's prayer, and from which came abundance of rain. "A little lower than the angels," was the Son of Man made in that he took upon himself the "seed of Abraham." It is Bethlehem "though little" among Israel's cities, that has given to the world a Redeemer and King. The righteous with a "little" of this world are richer than the wicked with many possessions. Paul thought it was sufficient that he should boast of himself a "little." The followers of Christ made, indeed, but a "little flock," but to what mighty proportions has that flock grown. D'Aubigne says: "A nest built among the craggy rocks of the Alps, may, perhaps, cut off a brood of inoffensive eaglets; but as soon as their wings grow, they will soar into the air, and with their piercing eyes discover their prey, and seize it from afar. The safer course, then, is for some strong hand to kill them in their nest while young." There are many eaglets which seem very attractive and charming in their young beauty, but developed into full maturity they are manifested as birds of prey. Strangle the eaglets of evil thoughts; for, "when lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin, and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." Strangle the eaglets of bitter, contentious words; for, "the beginnings of strife are like the letting forth of many waters." Thorough and manly discussions of principles, and comparison of views may always be good, but "bitter words stir up strife." Happy is he who wisely cares for the little things, to tenderly cherish, or promptly destroy.

Pagan and Papal Rome sought in vain the ruin of the "eaglets" of Christianity. Steady, constant and unobstructed, has been the growth of our holy religion, until its adherents are numbered by millions.

It is a "little leaven that leaveneth the whole lump." A "little fir" sometimes kindles a great conflagration. A Dutch burgher was plodding along one of the dykes which keep out the ocean from his beloved Holland, at ten o'clock one evening, and noticed it at a little water was trickling through it near the top. Without giving further thought to the subject, he passed on to his home and his bed, but in the morning the dyke was swept away, a vast track of country was covered with water, millions of property were destroyed, and hundreds of lives lost. Out of the little leakage came the mighty flood. Stop the leakage and you hold in check the flood. It is so in business, in church affairs, in denominational interests.

The smallest, most insignificant event may build up or overturn a kingdom if God so wills. We have a most striking instance of this fact in the following, taken from the Ohio State Journal:

"In 1850 Dan Stone, of Cincinnati, was a candidate for the State Legislature. Walking up Main street on the morning of the election, he overtook an acquaintance going to the polls who intended to vote the opposition ticket. Stone solicited his vote. 'We are old friends,' said he, 'and I know you will show a friend that mark of kindness.' Party spirit was then comparatively quiet. The voter replied: 'Well, Dan, you are a pretty clever fellow, I don't care if I do.' The vote elected Stone, and gave a majority of one in the Legislature, which made Thomas Ewing United States Senator. Mr. Ewing's vote on the question of confirming Martin Van Buren as Minister Plenipotentiary to Great Britain enabled the Vice President to give the casting vote against it, and made Mr. Van Buren first, Vice President, and then President, and determined the general political policy of the country for four years. One vote accomplished all this."

Let us give attention to little things and despise not the day of small beginnings. JUDEX.

Present and Future Life.

How quite lately interesting is the subject of "Present and Future Life," when presented in the light of God's word, and yet how widely different from the commonly received views.

Our "natural" or "soul-life,"—the life we now have, and which we derived from Adam, ends in death.

The sweet babe, with flower-like smile, the gifted maiden, dowered with beauty and worth, the talented youth, the calm-browed matron and the gray-haired sage, the righteous and wicked are all alike subject to death, must all alike go down to the tomb. No one can deliver his soul from death.

Not the riches of m. Astor, the [illegible] of a Stewart, nor the treasures [illegible] king scales to ransom a brother [illegible] "the specter of the pale[illegible] knocks at his door, he must die. [illegible] are dust and to dust we must ret[illegible] Adam broke the one law of para[illegible] and was driven out of Paradise, [illegible] tree of life was no longer within [illegible] reach, and without the life-giving pr[illegible] ciples it imparted, continual existe[illegible] to us was not possible.

Immortality and incorruptibility are the present or "soulual" life—immortal and deathless are never connected with soul or spirit throughout the whole word of God, but with a future life reached through a resurrection from the dead. Then are given incorruptibility, glory and joy, then we receive eternal life.

But wealth cannot purchase an incorruptible crown, man's boasted science can point to no fountain of perpetual youth, the laboratories of the chemist can compound no elixir of life.

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life."

We are to believe and obey the words of Jesus, if we would live forever beyond the sorrows of time in the beautiful mansions of rest.

S. ROXANA WINCH.

Each in His Own Way.

All great works are done by serving God with what we have in hand. Moses was keeping sheep in Midian. God sent him to save Israel, but he shrank from the undertaking. We sympathize with Jethro's herdsman, alone, a stranger, not owning a lamb that he watched. He had nothing but his shepherd's rod cut from the thicket, the mere crook-stick with which he guided his sheep. Any day he might throw it away and get a better one. And God said, What is that in thy hand? And with this rod, with this stick, thou shalt save Israel. And so it proved.

What is that in thy hand, stranger? An ox-goad with which you urge your lazy beasts? Use it for God, and Shamgar's ox goad defeats the Philistines. What is that in thy hand, David? My sling, with which I keep the wolves from my sheep. Yet with that sling he slew Goliath, whom an army dared not meet. What is that in thy hand, disciple? Nothing but five barley loaves and two little fishes. Bring them to me; give them to God, and the multitude is fed. What is that in thy hand, poor widow? Only two mites. Give them to God, and behold, the fame of your riches fills the world. What hast thou, weeping woman? An alabaster box of precious ointment. Give it to God. Break it and pour it upon thy Savior's head, and its sweet perfume is a fragrance until now. What hast thou, Dorcas? My needle. Use it for God, and those coats and garments keep multiplying and are clothing the naked still.

In prayer it is better to have a heart without words, than words without heart.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began. It also advocates a measure to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ a King of Kings, and its immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the possession of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked, eternal life only through Christ, and in no other known name. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Does Death End All?

Some one among earth's inhabitants, I know not who, has favored me with a copy of the Boston Advertiser, of Dec. 7, 1876, containing one of a series of lectures, (marked round with a pencil) delivered in Tremont Hall, one of the largest halls in Boston, by the Rev. Joseph Cook, on the question at the head of this article. The lecturer, evidently, is a man who well understands his work as such, as this was the fifty-fourth in a series, and delivered at the business hour of 12 o'clock m., before an audience of two thousand persons.

The lecturer divides his speech into three parts occupying about one-half in introduction, one-fourth in arrangement, and the remainder in deductions. In the argumentative part he wades largely into quotations from writers upon physiology, and deduces conclusions, many from traditional ideas formerly instilled into his mind instead of premises laid down in the propositions, as the following extract from the lecture will show to which we desire to reply.

G. M. MYERS.

THE LECTURE.

I hold in my hand an important and exciting book exactly waited for by me for years, and of which the spray of the grey sea has hardly yet been broken. It is a volume on "The Functions of the Brain," issued only last month by Dr. David Ferrier, fellow of the Royal Society and professor of forensic medicine in King's College, London; and it will need no recommendation to gentlemen of the medical profession, who are pertinacious to know something of living matters, and to form and express opinions after study as to the great controverted theories in biology, as no layman in science is—except the editor of the Nation! [Laughter and applause.] Professor Ferrier is a follower of two great German investigators, Fritsch and Hitzig, and his work and theirs undoubtedly constitute not only the freshest, but the most important of all recent contributions to the knowledge of the nervous system.

Let me now, in the name of the latest researches, put before you, step by step, an argument exclusively physiological, and leading up, as that of last Monday did, along the line of Wundt's wholly demoniac system, to the conclusion that the soul is external to the nervous mechanism, which it sets in motion:

1. Fritsch and Hitzig and Dr. Ferrier have proved that certain of the convolutions of the brain of a living animal may be electrically stimulated so as to produce in the animal various physical actions.

2. The stimulation of different parts of the brain produces different results which can be foretold by the experimenter.

3. The doctrine of the localization of functions in the brain is now, therefore, placed beyond dispute.

When you give a rabbit chloroform and then remove a portion of its brain, the animal suffers no pain, and consequently does not fall into such contortions as to cause the act of taking away parts of the skull to injure the delicate tissues of the brain. We have exercised at facts in surveying the brain, palpitating excitant stores without shrinking their delicate machinery; and we have done this by the use of chloroform, not known in the world as an anæsthetic until a few years ago. Using electrical currents that are just disagreeable by the tip of the human tongue, and employing bluntish electrodes that will not scarify the nervous web we touch, we try to imitate the exposed brain of a living animal, and assert as that the stimulation at different parts produces different movements. We may accurately foretell these movements after having had sufficient experience in such localized experiments. One particular part of the brain, for instance, will, it stimulated, produce the attitude of resistance in the animal; and another point, if stimulated, will cause the attitude of fear. In short, a large portion of the brain has now been localized in this way so thoroughly that we may tell at will what it is a keyboard on which excitement may play. The effect of galvanic currents on the appropriate nerve-mechanism is to turn fully evident on the heart or other muscular nerves. You stimulate a certain cell automatic nerve centering in the blackboard, and you will produce motion in the muscles attached to the correlated centripetal fibres.

Is there any proof at all that the whole brain is a keyboard that can thus be played upon by electrical stimulation?

A portion of it more closely connected with the spinal cord than the rest is a keyboard, but does the law of the automatic part extend to the whole mass of the brain? This question is crucial. The nervous mechanism is divided into the intellectual and automatic spec. Does this hold mental distinction hold good under the searching test of electrical stimulation?

4. It is proved that the frontal lobes are the seat of intellect.

5. But electrical stimulation of these highest parts of the intellectual nervous mechanism produces no motion.

When there are produced in them by electrically excitable papers as minute molecular impulses. If they are produced by electricity in the automatic area, no motion follows in the muscles. This is a fact of vast significance, but there is another of even higher import.

6. If one hemisphere of the brain be removed, paralysis of the powers of motion and sensation follows in one half the body.

7. But, even when one hemisphere of the brain is removed, all the mental operations may yet be duly performed.

8. These tests of electrical stimulation and of cerebral injury, being opposite in the two cases, prove that physiological centers such as are connected in the cells in the nervous mechanism are not to be found in operation in the intellectual nervous mechanism as it is represented by the anterior lobes of the brain.

9. The distinction between automatic and intellectual is made broader, therefore, by the most scientific research. [Applause.]

Let us examine a little keenly the basis of these propositions upon the great biological question of [illegible] the automatic and the intellectual portions in the nervous system. The important point to be removed (illustrated by the cases) is that you may stimulate with electricity an automatic area, and you do not produce any motion you see. On the contrary, touch the corresponding portion of an automatic area, and you move the muscles at once. Although the mechanism is called automatic, remember that it was made so by the biologists that wrote it, and that a considerable spirit was given to this movement due to the impulses that come both in and into nerve and pull the two together. Apply your electrode to the automatic area and you produce contraction, but apply your electrode to the intellectual area and you produce no contraction. There is, therefore, a difference between the structure of an intellectual area and that of an automatic area. We prove this tangibly when we lay point after point on the brain and of the great nervous centres connecting it with the spinal cord, and find that the lower powers of the nervous mechanism are reflex and automatic, but that these higher frontal lobes are ocularly demonstrable not to be of that sort. When we apply to them the electrical test which produces motion elsewhere, no motion whatever is produced.

If you take away one hemisphere of the brain, what is the effect? One-half the body is paralyzed. The sensation and the motion which belong to the side of the body opposite to the removed hemisphere are gone. But your mental powers remain, and exhibit as much force all their activities. Dr. Ferrier himself authority for the astounding fact that the action of the mind is not so bound up even with these fundamental axes, that it cannot show the whole army of its powers when you take away one whole hemisphere of the brain. If that can be proved, gentlemen, it has been proved tolerably well, I should say, that there is a difference between the intellectual and the automatic axes, or that between the two things there is as broad a contrast as between the two scientific names, since that has been proved beyond dispute. It is submitted by the latest evidence that you can take away one hemisphere of the brain, and have complete mental action yet remaining, although you cannot take away one hemisphere without paralyzing one half of the body. If I show this, I prove that there is a difference between the intellectual and the automatic, we made and abundant that all men ought to be able to see it, who can see anything as broad as a town hall! [Laughter and much applause.]

"The physiological activity of the brain," says Professor Ferrier, in a most significant passage, "is not altogether commensurate with its psychological functions. The brain, as an organ of motion and sensation, or perceptive and consciousness, is a single organ composed of two halves; the brain as an organ of intellect, or representative consciousness, is a dual organ, each hemisphere complete in itself. When one hemisphere is removed or destroyed by disease, motion and sensation are abolished on the opposite side—that animal operates as an [illegible] of being enabled on its own impressions through the agency of the one hemisphere. The individual who is paralyzed as to sensation and motion by disease of the opposite side of the brain may be right in and paralyzed in reality, for he can still feel, smell, see, and think, and mentally comprehend all in the one hemisphere. If these functions are not carried on with the same vigor as before, they yet have decided appeal to self as respect of completeness." [Ferrier's Functions of the Brain, p. 276, 280.]

A great fact this, even when standing alone; but add to it the fact of your ability to excite stimulation and you find that all that is implied in the distinction between automatic and anti-automatic is borne out by these two colossal circumstances, that of motion on the intellectual area will produce no motion, but that it does produce complete motion if applied to the automatic; and that half of the brain may be taken away, paralyzing the half of your body, while the mind continues all its operations. [Applause.]

10. Physiological centers do not act where they do not exist.

11. The action of the influential nervous mechanism is not, therefore, represented by the physical causes operating in the automatic nervous mechanism.

12. But the intellectual of the mechanism itself demonstrates that it must be set in motion by an external agent.

13. That agent must be either matter or mind.

14. It is demonstrated that the action of the brain in weaving the brain, and that, of the frontal lobes after they are worn, cannot originate in matter.

15. It originates, therefore, in an external immaterial agent.

16. This, which is in part immediately known to consciousness, is the soul the soul.

17. Modern neurological research therefore, proves that the soul is an agent external to the nervous mechanism which it sets in motion.

18. This being proved, it is demonstrated that the relation of the soul to the body is that of the rower to a boat, or of an invisible musician to a musical instrument.

19. But it has been admitted by some by materialistic themselves that if this is proved, then death does not end all.

Therefore, in the present state of knowledge, the case stands thus:

20. If death does not end all, what does, or can?

REVIEW OF MR. COOK.

It is evident from the second paragraph of the above extract that Mr. Cook has a [illegible] where fraud, unbelief will lead.

To sustain this much loved and cherished theory he lays down his premises, some of which we desire to examine and test before we are ready to advance to conclusions.

The lecturer's No. 1 we accept as correct, and call to notice the word "certain," which shows that not all, but only a part of the convolutions of the brain are susceptible of being thus stimulated. Now if the reader will drop to the lecturer's No. 5 he will see that Prof. Ferrier tells us of the parts that are not susceptible of being thus stimulated to muscular movement. Here he is speaking of the higher and frontal regions of the brain lying entirely above the medulla oblongata. This statement is corroborated by Prof. Dalton on page 430, than whom no author as a physiologist in the United States stands higher. Dalton says: "Neither the olfactory ganglia, the corpora striata, the optic thalami, the tubercular quadrigemina, nor the white or grey substance of the cerebrum or the cerebellum, are in the least degree excitable. Mechanical irritation of these parts does not produce the slightest convulsive movement in the muscles below. The application of caustic liquids and the passage of galvanic currents are equally without effect." Excitations to muscular action, or convulsions, must arise out of the parts of the brain lying below all these—out of the anterior surfaces of the medulla oblongata, the tuber annulare, and the lower part of the crura cerebri; that is, the lower and central portions of the brain, containing continuations of the anterior columns of the spinal cord. Therefore the stimulation and action referred to in the 2d paragraph under No. 2 must apply to these lower regions of the brain, as the lecturer seems to recognize two paragraphs below,

In No. 6 the lecturer says: "If one hemisphere of the brain be removed, paralysis of the powers of motion and sensation follows in one-half the body." This we will be under the necessity of pronouncing incorrect in every sense. 1. If, by the term "one hemisphere of the brain," the lecturer has referred only to half the cerebrum, then paralysis of the sensory and motor powers does not take place, from the fact that the seat of sensation and motion are entirely below this part of the brain—in the medulla oblongata—and remains untouched. Further, Dalton, on page 438, says: "When these ganglia (the cerebral hemispheres) are removed in the lower animals, the intellectual faculties are the only ones which are lost." Again, same page, "Injury to these ganglia, in the human subject, is followed by a corresponding impairment of the same faculties." And further, on page 435 he says: "The animal is still capable, after removal of the brain is pieces, of receiving sensations from external objects." 2. But if the phrase "One hemisphere of the brain," relates to one half of the entire encephalon brain, then we claim that the lecture is equally incorrect, for the moment the pneumogastric ganglia which lie imbedded in the medulla oblongata is touched life is at an end. Not only does motion and sensation cease, but thought and life itself must end. When this vital point, sometimes called the "vital knot," from which the pneumogastric nerve starts, is cut, this nerve is severed, the muscles by which it moves the lungs become inactive, breathing stops, and the result is death. This all physiological writers will corroborate. Dalton, on page 453, speaks to the same effect.

Therefore, such an idea as a soul remaining in the man, enabled to think and not to act, is entirely unsustained by physiology, but just the reverse is true, if a soul there at all. From the above quotations which we have made from Prof. Dalton, which all physiologists will sustain, it is to be seen that an animal or a man may be enabled to feel and to act, even after the intellectual part of the brain is removed. Also numerous cases of depression upon the cerebral functions to the extent of suspended consciousness, but not of sensation and action, sustains the same. How is this? If there is a soul in man from which life and its functions arise, then there are a few conclusions relative to it which we now are enabled to declare.

1. It must control and direct [illegible] thought after sensation and action are entirely gone.

2. It can remain and carry on action after thought, reason and consciousness are gone.

3. If yet in the body while consciousness is thus suspended, then it has ceased to think and to know.

4. If out of the body, and still continues to act, why, on its return to the body (as consciousness is in many cases suspended and then restored), does it not know something of transactions either here or in the spirit world while thus absent?

5. Comparison:—If the brain sustains the same relation to the soul that a key-board does to the musician, or a boat to a rower, as the lecturer seems to think, in Nos. 3 and 18, then thought, reason and consciousness will correspond to the music in the one case and the rowing in the other. Now remove the boat, and rowing must stop till another boat is obtained; remove the key-board and music must cease till another is obtained, and never can the musician make another strain of music without the chords upon which to vibrate the air. So with the soul; remove its boat, or key-board—the brain—and its action, whatever that be, must cease and remain closed till another be obtained.

But since it is generally conceded and demonstrated by physiologists that the frontal lobes of the brain—the cerebrum—are the seat of intellect, (see the lecture No. 4, and Dalton page 433), the question arises why is it that one hemisphere of this part of the brain may be removed and mental action still in all its parts on? This question is answered fully in a quotation made by the lecturer in paragraph 4, under No. 6, in which Prof. Ferrier says, "The brain, as an organ of motion and sensation, or presentative consciousness, is a single organ composed of two halves; the brain as an organ of intellect, or representative consciousness, is a dual organ, each hemisphere complete in itself."

This thought and fact, we may say demonstrable, proves true and is conceded by all physiologists and phrenologists. Therefore, where one lobe is removed the other carries on the work almost. If not entirely, complete. Hence we have not yet quite reached thought without brain, as the lecturer so much desires. But when we reach further back and cut into the posterior or cerebellum part of the brain, which controls the concert of voluntary action, then we may have a paralysis of some of the motor nerves, and upon the opposite side from the wound, as these nerves decussate in the medulla oblongata. It is not be to this part of the brain that Prof. Ferrier refers in the paragraph last quoted from, as we have seen that a removal of simply the cerebral lobes will not affect action, and the removal of half of the entire brain will produce death.

The lecturer's No. 10 we accept as true.

To No. 11 we object. When the brain is in the condition above described, the sensory nerves may carry impressions from without to their principal seat in the medulla oblongata, and these impressions for thought and reason may arise from these upon the nervous chord into the convolutions of the unmoved part just as readily as before the brain was impaired. And further, these impressions in some cases may come from the same side that is paralyzed in action as the sensory nerves decussate in the spinal column instead of the medulla oblongata. Therefore an impaired brain will not serve as a premise for such a conclusion as is drawn by the lecturer.

No. 12: To this statement a man is no exception; it it will require an external soul to set the organism of man in motion, can it require less to set that of the animal to work? or is his organism so much greater than that of man that the external power—soul—is not needed? But further; if the lecturer will study his works upon animal mechanism and chemistry a little closer, he will find that there is an external force, I care not what he may call it—soul, or spirit, if he pleases—deposited in the atmosphere that is breathed, which oxygenizes the blood and renders it positive and also generates an excitation in the nerves and nervous membranes of the lungs when breathed in. The positive blood is [illegible] by the positive nerves [illegible] and thus circulation starts. This magnetic-electric-spirit current by the radiating blood is imparted and carried to the nervous centres, there forming a nervo-vital fluid, thus preparing the brain for impressions. Now, as the extremities of the nerves pass through a cell of dead nerving back upon each other, they are thus, as it were, connected with two batteries and are ready for action. Then give us the external object and an impression is made and carried to the centre. A combination of two or more of these impressions we call reason. The power to call up, at will, past impressions, we call memory. And a knowledge of their presence we call consciousness. Therefore, whatever may be said of an operating external force upon the inert particles of the body, it is not a living thinking conscious force any more than the steam that propels a train of cars. But suppose it is such a force, and for thought not made dependent upon connection with the body, then following in train as results we have disembodied consciousness and pre-existence, to which last none but deluded spiritists hold. But suppose the lecturer or some one else thus believes, we ask what do they know of events in the spirit land, if such a place there be, which took place with their spirits two or three or ten centuries ago.

No. 14: We know not when such demonstration as is stated in this number was made, certainly not in this lecture. But we think that when the laws of digestion and assimilation are properly studied into, that it will be seen that cell life is carried by the same force, and the same in the animal that it is in man. Indeed, cellular pathology forever explodes the immortal soul theory, and gives us to see that there is no one centre from which all life radiates, as necessarily would be the case were there an immortal soul in man propelling him. So much for Hopkins.

Our remarks show we think conclusively that conclusions Nos. 15, 16 and 17 are without foundation.

We have already made our notes on No. 18 and No. 3 together, which leaves no foundation for the conclusion in No. 19. Therefore we will remodel No. 20, and make it read, "Death ends all and for more a resurrection must be had." Respectfully submitted,

G. M. MYERS.

The last music played by the orchestra of the Brooklyn Theatre just before the awful fire was "What shall the Harvest Be?" Those who make dancing tunes of these sacred melodies may meet with no such terrible accident, but sooner or later, unless they turn from the error of their ways, they will learn "what will the harvest be." It could only be German infidels, we suppose, that would dare to strike at such an outrage on public feelings.—N. Y. Witness.

Remains of an ancient Indian village have been discovered at Paragoonah, Utah. The houses, now covered with sage brush, were arranged in uniform rows and were about eight by nine feet in size. They were two-story, built of adobe, supported by pillars of sandstone rock. Rude implements for grinding corn were also found.

Like his brother Murad, he led a very jovial life, during his father's career, but his strong constitution enabled him to withstand those excesses which prostrated his brother and caused his deposition. He accompanied the late Abdul-Aziz on his trip to Europe, and contracted a taste for French clothes and French customs, many of which he has introduced to his own household. He has one wife and two children, of whom he is very fond, and is generally found poring over maps, military, geological and statistical. Though bitterly opposed to the Young Turkey party, he is no fanatic, and is said to be well disposed toward the Giaours, always excepting the Greeks, whom he cordially detests. The Restitution.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

☞Brethren and friends are doing something toward increasing our subscription list. Our number should be doubled as quickly as possible. Some articles may seem not to come up to the complete standard of revealed truth in all things. Where brethren discern a failure in this respect, will they please set forth the truth in affirmative teaching, sustaining the positions by Scripture proof, rather than by directly assailing the communications of others. We have been defeating our own purpose, so far as bringing learners to a knowledge of the faith and hope of the Gospel is concerned by sectarianous controversy. We will try our own hand on some of the great themes relating to the covenants of promise, and the kingdom of God, unless abler pens anticipate us in our purpose. We shall not directly controvert any one. In order to set forth truth in the best possible manner, let us write the best articles we possibly can, without personal allusions, and they will be read with interest. Belligerent communications, are very often left unread, and when read effect no purpose for good.

☞We give a somewhat lengthy article on the signs of the times, this week, from the work of Canon Hoare, on "Rome, Turkey, and Jerusalem." We have much desired to obtain this book, but have, as yet, been unable to do so. We take the article of this week from the World's Crisis. We also give a lengthy article from Brother Myers, on certain physical and mental phenomena, as manifested by experiments made on different portions of the brain in living animals. If the professor's argument demonstrates the necessary self-existence of a soul-force, —external to the whole nervous and brain system, and independent of it,— in man, he as conclusively demonstrates the same thing with regard to the lower animals on which he experiments. An argument proving too much, logically, proves nothing. Learned physiologists regard a certain point in the medulla oblongata, to which all the principal fibres of the brain converge, and to which all the nerves of sensation can be traced, and from which all the nerves that convey the emotions of the mind to the heart [illegible] proceed, as the phreno-conscious centre. A lesion of this portion of the nervous system results in a total cessation of motion, feeling, consciousness, and life itself. Our hope of an endless existence rests on a more substantial basis than philosophical deductions drawn from experiments made on lobes and portions of the brain remote from the vital centre. Death, indeed, ends all so far as "the life that now is," is concerned, "That life which is to come," is now hid with Christ in God, and is attainable only through the resurrection which gives the redeemed an incorruptible re-organization. Aside from this present, or that future organization, man has no self-existent soul-life, or spirit-life. Soul-life inheres in our present corruptible organization, and spirit-life will be manifested through the incorruptible re-organization. This latter life is attainable only through our Lord Jesus Christ, and belongs, not to the economy of nature, but to the higher economy of redemption. Does death end all with those animals on which he experiments?

The Times of Refreshing.

"Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts iii. 19-21.

Acts iii. 21. "Whom the heavens must receive until the times of the restitution of all things," &c.

The restitution of all things of necessity includes the restitution of all things contained in the Abrahamic and Davidic covenants—as well the things especially promised to the posterity of Jacob as those in which the Gentiles have a part. With this event the Saviour connects the future mission of Elias, Matt. xvii. 11; but his office and work, whatever they may be (like John the Baptist's,) will be confined, as we suppose, to Israel, after they shall have been restored to their land. With this event, we have seen, are also connected the second coming of the Lord, the resurrection and the glorification of the elect, and times of refreshing or relief from the effects of the curse. We will dwell a little upon this topic.

The various dispensations of God's government over the earth and man are among the grandest themes of the Bible. They are stages or parts of an infinite scheme which join on to others yet hidden deep in the divine mind. Eph. ii. 7. They were all appointed and arranged by God the Son; they are upheld and unfolded by his power for the ever increasing display of the divine attributes. Heb. i. 2, 3.

The first dispensation, of which we have only a brief notice, was characterized by the absence of all physical and moral evil, during which man had personal intercourse with his Maker. We may call this the dispensation of Paradise, or the dispensation of the kingdom of the heavens. Gen. ii; Lam. iii. 38; Rom. viii. 20. How long it continued we do not know, but at the fall of man it was closed, and the kingdom of the heavens was withdrawn. Gen. iii. 17, 18. This kingdom was brought nigh again when John the Baptist appeared, but not established, because rejected by the Jews to whom it was preached.

There is a remarkable expression of Moses, in Deut. xi. 21, which seems to allude to the physical change in the condition of the earth at that epoch. Gen. iii, 16, 19. The lawgiver exhorts the people to obedience by the motive, "that their days may be multiplied, and the days of their children, in the land which the Lord sware unto their fathers to give them; as the days of heaven (literally of the heavens) upon earth;" as if he had said days of blessedness and glory such as the world does not now enjoy—days of Paradise, such as the world enjoyed before the blastings of God's kingdom were withdrawn. The exhortation is not unlike that of Peter in Acts iii. 19, for the days of the heavens, understood in the sense of the prophet, would be days of refreshing in the sense of the apostle. However this may be, at the fall of man a new dispensation came over the earth; God withdrew his kingdom, and permitted the powers of evil to prevail, yet set bounds to them as he did to the sea, which they should not pass. Gen. iii. 17, 18; John xiv. 30; xii. 31; xiv. 11; Eph. ii. 2; Col. ii. 15; Heb. ii. 14. The earth was subject to vanity and corruption. Rom. viii. 20. In the bold and figurative language of Paul, the creature, that is, the whole fabric of physical nature, and man also, was made to groan and travail in pain together, under the displeasure of the Creator. Rom. viii. 22. The change was vast beyond our conceptions. Whether it came over the world suddenly, as the blight and withering of the fig tree the Lord cursed, Mark xi. 14, 20, 21; Matt. xxi. 19, 20; or gradually, as some have supposed, it would be unprofitable to inquire. But, however wrought, it was quite a different order of things. W[illegible] If the dispensation of the fal[illegible] curse, or of the kingdom of the heavens withdrawn. Rom. v. 12. This dispensation still continues, yet not without the hope of restitution. Rom. viii. 20. For God has purposed to repair the mighty ruin—and ruin it is, though it seem fair and beautiful to man who knows nothing better—and restore the former state.

Our Lord, with allusion to his first work of creation, calls this his purposed work of restitution, the regeneration (Palingenesia,) or second creation. Rev. xxi. 5. The apostle refers to the same restitution in Eph. i. 10, by the words "dispensation of the fulness of times," that is, the dispensation appointed to ensue upon the completion of the order of things now existing; as does the apostle Peter, in his second epistle, iii. 7, 13, and the passage under consideration. See Isa. lxv. 17-25.

These are the great dispensations made known to us, of which most commentators have not taken sufficient notice. Those which they have chiefly enlarged upon, are really subdivisions of the dispensation introduced by the fall, and the coming in of the curse. But these are subordinate and remedial in their nature, and subservient in their design, to the coming of the kingdom of God on earth, the expulsion of sin and the cause of every physical and moral evil. In their progress they display to all creatures in all worlds the attributes and the glory of God, in a manner which otherwise, so far as we can know, would have been impossible, consistent with the divine wisdom and goodness. The manifestation of the essential attributes of the Godhead thus made (considered relatively to the eternal well being of the universe), is a good immeasurably surpassing the evils resulting from the temporary and comparatively brief disorder permitted in this world.—Selected.

Editor Restitution:—I am now holding meetings in Argos. The attendance is good and the interest excellent. Have preached ten discourses upon the great questions of life and immortality, the kingdom of God and prophecy. Nine have been added to the congregation. Others are expecting to unite soon. The good work is moving on and the honest in heart are interested in the "word of the kingdom." My health is much better. Will report from time to time as to the success of the Gospel of Christ. Christian Conversion.—No. 3.

We have noticed the first case of Christian conversion, that is, the first that occurred after the Holy Spirit was given, Acts 2. In the same way, the Lord continued to "add to the Church daily such as should be saved." They had two daily public prayer meetings at the temple, one about 9 a. m., and the other about 3 p. m. The Holy Spirit came at the time of the morning prayer meeting, and about three thousand were converted. A few days after this, as Peter and John went to the afternoon prayer meeting, a cripple beggar "asked an alms." Peter had no silver nor gold. He had a church of three thousand members, who had "sold their possessions" and "had all things common;" yet this system of finance did not keep him even in pocket money. But the Master had said, "Give to him that asketh of thee." Peter can do it. "Such as I have, give I thee." It "pays" to "prove God." You can not get him in a corner. He always finds a way out and keeps himself consistent. Just when he seems exhausted, he opens new lines of infinite resources. "In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk."

A few mites would have satisfied the beggar, but Peter had not the money. He had something better, perfect soundness for him in the name of Jesus. How thorough God is in his work! What a thrill of excitement ran through the praying circle, and out into the city, as the healed man walked and leaped, and praised God for his new found strength.

The eager throng rushed into the royal porch. Peter is still equal to the occasion. This is no stratagem to get a hearing. He has acted natural; has moved in the line of duty, seeing scarcely a step ahead, but with steady, undoubting faith,—has seemed all the while, and perhaps felt,—an extremity. But he has learned that he can depend on God, and does not fear defeat.

First, then, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake."

"Why marvel ye at this, as though by our own power and holiness we had made this man to walk?" "The Lord of our fathers hath glorified his Son Jesus." That's the cause of it. You delivered him to Pilate as a criminal, and denied and refused him when he pronounced him innocent and would let him go, and preferred a murderer. Nevertheless, "the Holy One [illegible] of Life," but "God hath raised him from the dead; whereof we are witnesses." "Faith in his name hath made this man strong." Not the lame man's faith, but Peter and John's. If John did not say anything, he was a powerful faith-help for Peter.

The crucible has taken the harsh out of Peter. How promptly and with what tenderness he frames an excuse for his wickedly erring brethren and their rulers: "I wot that through ignorance ye did it." But don't be discouraged. God foretold this very thing by all his prophets. "Repent ye therefore, and be converted." This Jesus whom you killed, and God raised, and we preach, is in heaven, and God will send him again to bring in the times of refreshing and restitution. Remember the covenant with Abraham: "In thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed. Unto you first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities."

Forgiveness of sins is a blessing; it comes through Christ, the seed of Abraham, and is embraced in the covenant.

God honors the prayer meeting. Prayers and preaching go hand in hand. Preaching is easier and better, and the Spirit comes, and sinners are converted, when the church prays.

On both these occasions Peter preached what his hearers needed. All he preached was Gospel, but he did not preach all the Gospel, neither did he mutilate the Gospel. Jesus and his resurrection, and second coming, and the mercy of God stand out prominent in both sermons. These carry the whole Gospel. Believed, they give a Gospel faith. Then repentance prepares for baptism, and you are added to the church, a member in full and regular standing. Nobody can vote you into the church, nor vote you out; nor in any way take you in or turn you out. The Lord adds you to the church by your faith, repentance and baptism, and you can get out only by backsliding out. You will not die out; for those who sleep in Jesus, are all members of the church.

Peter, in his answer to the rulers and elders, preached the gospel in this way, Acts iv. 12: "This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved;" and Luke in V. 33: "And great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus." Under this preaching "great grace was upon them all," "and the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul."

Note how cautiously the number of believers is stated "about," Acts i. 15; ii. 41; iv. 4. They had their "names" —probably a written list. This would be a business convenience.

The Population of the Globe.

The most trustworthy estimate of the number of people on the earth for the year 1876, as furnished by German statisticians, is 1,422,017,000. This is an increase of over twenty-seven millions on the estimate of 1876, but the augmentation is not due entirely to the excess of births over deaths, but largely to the obtaining of more accurate information regarding the population of religions little known, and to more perfect census returns from other countries.

Asia is still the home of the majority of the human race, after having supplied off-shoots from which sprung great Western peoples. About four-sevenths of the earth's population is Asiatic, or 825,548,590; Europe comes next with over a fifth, or 309,178,300; Africa with about a seventh, or 199,921,000; America with less than a sixteenth, or 85,419,800; and finally Australia and Polynesia with the small fraction of 4,743,600 people. Europe is the most densely populated, having 82 persons to the square mile; Asia comes next with 48 to the square mile, Africa next with 17½, and America and Australia bring up the rear with 5½ and 1½ respectively.

There are 215 cities on the earth with a population of over 100,000; 29 of half a million or more, and nine cities containing a million or more inhabitants. Of these last four are in China. Including Brooklyn with New York, as we may rightfully do for purposes of comparison, and the greatest cities in the world stand in this order: London, 3,480,428; Paris, 1,851,102; New York, 1,595,022; Vienna, 1,091,909; Berlin, 1,044,000; Canton and three other Chinese cities, one million each. New York, therefore takes its place third on the list of great cities, without counting our New Jersey overflow.

Though there are not at hand accurate statistics upon which to base a [illegible] the opinion of all observers of the condition of civilized peoples that the average longevity of the human race has increased within a hundred years. Such reports of the death rate as we have go to support that conclusion, and it is thoroughly proved that the devastations of epidemic diseases are not so great now as formerly; while the medical art steadily advances in its mastery of the disorders of the human system and its ability to ward off and check maladies which threaten human life. In England for instance, the death rate has declined considerably during a quarter of a century. There and elsewhere in Europe, as also in this country, the subject of public hygiene has received great attention of recent years, and its difficulties are being steadily overcome. The probability is that men now on the average live longer than their ancestors and in better average health, and that our descendants will gain on us in those respects.

As to great cities, New York is easily third. If it took in all its children, it would press hard on Paris for the second place, and before the next century is reached, or before it has advanced far, will probably know no superior except marvelous London.

The Restitution.

Editor Restitution:—I wish to call the attention of our brethren to the importance of sending out copies of the RESTITUTION to those who do not know the reason of our hope. There are many honest-hearted people who would rejoice in the light and glory of truth, if it were only presented to their minds. The paper is a most excellent medium through which to let the light shine. If every brother can put his shoulder to the wheel and help, we shall be the means of doing much good and will discharge the duty now upon us. You may put me down for two new subscribers the coming year. I am a member of the "poor family," but will do what I can. Brethren, let us rally and work for the saving of men. Times are eventful, and soon we shall be ushered into the presence of the Judge of the quick and dead. Am in strong sympathy with Sister Wince's suggestion to pray for the prosperity of the RESTITUTION. But faith without works is dead. By their fruits ye shall know them. Send in as many as you can, for it is God who gives the increase. Your brother.

H. V. REED.

Righteousness delivers from the sting, but not from the stroke of death.

Sententious Paragraphs.

The human soul is a garden, and each day some beautiful and fragrant blossom should be planted there that will bloom in fadeless beauty forever; and when planted, warm it with the warm sunshine of smiles, and water it with the dew of tears; let the earth be loosened around it by diligent thought and by the innocent manifestations of pure affection; so shall we become adapted to the heavenly, and be fitted for the paradise of God.—L. Wood.

Man's love to God is like the changing sand; his is like the solid rock. Man's love is like the passing meteor with its fitful gleam; his is like the fixed stars, shining far above, clear and serene, from age to age, in their own changeless firmament.—Rev. J. M'Duff.

A LITTLE WHILE.

Be patient, yet a little while
The sigh shall be a psalm;
The shade shall vanish in a smile,
Earth's storm in heaven's broad calm.

Be patient, yet a little while
Your cross shall be a crown;
Glory shall all your grief beguile,
Your shame shall be renown.

Be patient, yet a little while
Your labor shall be rest,
Earth's frown shall change for Jesus' smile,
Earth's scoff for "Come, ye blest."

—Selected.

Lord Bacon: "There never was found, in any age of the world, either philosopher or sect, or law, or discipline, which did so highly exalt the public good as the Christian faith."

Lord Byron, whose writings, in the main, are in such conflict with the pure morality and spirituality of the Bible, never penned truer lines than when, speaking of the Bible, he wrote:

"Within this awful volume lies
The mystery of mysteries.
O happiest they of human race,
To whom our God has given grace,
To hear, to read, to fear, to pray,
To lift the latch and force the way;
But better had they ne'er been born
Who read to doubt, or read to scorn."

Sir W. Jones: "The Bible contains more sublimity, pure morality, more important history, and finer strains of eloquence, than can be collected from all other books."

SUNSHINE AT HOME.

Many a child goes astray, not because there is a want of prayer, or virtue at home, but simply because home lacks sunshine. A child needs smiles as much as flowers need sunbeams. Children look little beyond the present moment. If a thing pleases, they are apt to seek it; if it displeases, they are apt to avoid it. If home is the place where faces are sour, and words harsh, and fault-finding is ever on [illegible]dent, they will spend as many hours as possible elsewhere.

The Journey's End.

We have read of the caravans of pilgrims, who after months of weary travel, approach the Holy City. They have been drenched by storms, burned by blazing suns, pinched with hunger, and choked with dust of the desert. Their shoes were worn out, their garments soiled, and their tottering limbs can hardly sustain their steps. Through days of suffering, and nights of sleeplessness, and constantly assailed by merciless foes they have toiled along until now they approach the end of their pilgrimage.

The sun, breaking through the clouds of lurid day, is just sinking behind the hills of Lebanon. The pilgrims ascend an eminence, and lo, Jerusalem is before them! Its turrets, towers, pinnacles and domes all blaze in golden splendor, reflecting the rays of the setting sun. A scene of almost supernatural enthusiasm ensues.

"Jerusalem, Jerusalem!" is shouted from hot and blistering lips. "Jerusalem, Jerusalem!" is re-echoed through the long lines of the rear. The lame, the fainting, the dying are animated with new life, as they rush forward to catch a glimpse of that sacred city where the Savior bled and died.

Tears gush from all eyes. Some, overwhelmed with joyous emotions, prostrate themselves upon the ground and breathe a silent prayer of gratitude and thanksgiving. Some throw their arms into the air and wildly shout in the outbursting of their rapture, "Hallelujah!" All past fatigues, perils, suffering, are forgotten. The pilgrimage is ended, their goal is gained.

But O, when the pilgrim of earth, weary of the long, painful, perilous journey, arrives within sight of the celestial city,—a sight so brilliant that no mortal eye can look upon it,—as he gazes upon the splendor of the metropolis of God's empire, and listens to its choirs, and knows that in this city the Savior has a mansion prepared for him, with robe and harp and crown, and that there he shall repose in peace forever, can language tell his joy? The imagination sinks exhausted in vain attempt to compass such blessedness.—Messiah's Herald.

Eastern Items.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 8.—The inhabitants of Adrianople, both Greeks and Turks, have asked authority of the government to take up arms against their common enemy. The Sultan has ordered the Grand Vizier to thank them, saying he hoped to be able to preserve the peace, but, in case of war, he expected the co-operation of all his subjects, without distinction of race or religion. He would lead the army himself.

At a meeting of the plenipotentiaries, yesterday, Count Chaudordy, the French representative, is said to have declared that many of the motives alleged by the Porte for refusing the propositions of the Conference appeared to him very legitimate, and the plenipotentiaries would find difficulty in combating them. He added, "France would never give countenance to an unjust cause."

At to-day's meeting of the Conference Signor Corti, the Italian Ambassador, in the name of the other European plenipotentiaries, controverted the arguments adduced by Safvet Pasha at the last sitting. The Marquis of Salisbury supported Signor Corti's views. The Turkish representatives, nevertheless, did not withdraw their refusal to accept the conditions proposed by the powers. They, however, took part in the conversation on the guarantees, especially on that relative to an international commission. The discussion was animated, and at the close of the sitting was adjourned until Wednesday. It is generally believed in Constantinople that the Conference will only hold a few more sittings. Lord Salisbury will probably prolong his stay beyond the date for which he had engaged a steamer.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 9.—At yesterday's sitting of the Conference the European plenipotentiaries pointed out that several points of the proposals of the powers formed part of the Andrassy note, and the Turkish representatives indicated their willingness to enter into discussion on the basis of that note. It is believed that at the next sitting the plenipotentiaries will make a last appeal to the Turkish representatives to discuss the proposals of the powers.

Gen. Ignatieff, the Russian plenipotentiary, is said to have recently suggested that the reforms proposed by the powers be extended to Macedonia, Epirus, and Thessaly. It is understood Lord Salisbury, the English plenipotentiary, replied that such a proposal did not come within the scope of his instructions.

Roumania has declared to the Porte that article seven of the new Constitution violates her rights. She consequently declares herself released from her vassalage, throwing the responsibility of the step upon the Porte.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 9.—In semi-official quarters the fact that no decision was reached in yesterday's sitting of the Conference is regarded as affording further proof that the Porte seeks to use the new Turkish Constitution as a means of avoiding compliance with the demands of the powers. Russia has reached the limit of concession, and the other powers have declared their determination to uphold the programme of the Conference. Hitherto no pressure has been exerted upon the Porte, nor does the present action of the plenipotentiaries bear such a character. Nevertheless the powers, while couching their representations in most moderate terms, will firmly uphold their demands.

BERLIN, Jan. 8.—The National Zeitung says that Servia is negotiating for peace directly with the Porte on the basis of the status quo and the maintenance of the treaty of Paris. The Porte is favorable in this scheme. The National Zeitung says the German Ambassador at Constanople is about to be recalled, and no successor will be appointed.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—The Times to-day, in an editoral article on Indian affairs, says: "The Government of India admit that they have a task before them exceeding in many respects that in Bengal of 1874. The area of the present famine district is greater. It spreads into two Presidencies, and crosses the Deccan. The population affected is far greater. There are doubtless mitigating circumstances which must not be overlooked. If the population is greater, it is not collected in such dense masses as the famine-stricken people of 1874, and we may still hope there is not now such absolute dearth of food as then. Upon this point the evidence is still imperfect, but a small fraction of the harvest must have been saved, unless the reports of local officers are too favorable. It is something also to know that the experience of 1874 is not forgotten, and will guide the Indian Government in the present visitation."

New Songs.

We love the old, old songs,
And yet we love the new,
For change delights, and nature longs
To clothe in fresher words the true.

And so we sing, as David sang,
Our new sweet words of praise;
And as his voice in raptures rang,
So we, our voices raise.

Six Thousand Years.

Six thousand years the tide of sin
Has spread destruction far and wide;
Six thousand years the world has been,
To Satan's wicked cause allied.

From this dark age to Eden's prime,
The world has walked away from God;
Six thousand years of blood and crime,
Have cursed the earth and stained the sod.

Six thousand years! Ah, that will do!
To try the hateful rule of wrong;
"Ring out the old, ring in the new,"
The era of angelic song.

Then glory to our God on high;
Good will on earth and peace to men,
Will swell in song through earth and sky,
In sweeter strains, by far, than when

The shepherds watched their flocks by night,
And music sweet fell on their ears,
From choristers corobed in light,
And trained amid the upper spheres.

Correspondence.

Editor Restitution:—I felt last evening as if I had been to meeting and had enjoyed a rich feast. I sat down at lamp lighting, tired and depressed from a hard day's sewing, to glance over, casually, the newly brought mail. But there was the RESTITUTION, looking so fresh and bright that it invited more than indifferent scrutiny. And among the first things that caught my eye, were the beloved names of R. and E. S. Willard. I read their letter and felt so rested and comforted from the thoughts its evoked, that I must write and tell you all, all about it. "O praise the Lord," was the language of my heart, "for he is good, for his mercy endureth forever." "He knows just how to rest his children when they are weary, how to feed them when hungry, and how to fill their mouths with words of praise, when they are oppressed with the burden of heaviness. He has many ways of doing this, but each way is effectual. Sometimes the blessing comes in a stirring article from some dear saint of God, sometimes it is sent in a letter from a far-away friend; it is poured out upon us when seated in the house of God, or comes shadowing us with balmy wings when hidden away in the solitude of our chambers. It steals upon us when reflecting upon the merciful providences that surround our way; when reading the blessed word; when meeting with earnest souls around the table of the Lord.

I was but a wee bit of a girl when the kind hands of Brother and Sister Willard first rested in blessing on my head, and all my life I have felt their holy influence, shaping, training me for God. On into the silent hours of midnight we have talked together. Letters of cheer from them have brightened many a lonely desert march. Next to my own dear parents, I owe my love of spiritual things to them. Their home has ever been a Bethel to me. Holiness to the Lord is inscribed on its walls, and his presence seems to brood over every inmate of their dwelling. I felt that presence the last time I was permitted to visit them, when, in the early morning hours, the dear old Books were passed around, and all joined in reading two verses about from the blessed words of inspiration, sang a song of hope or praise and united in prayer; and, when ere the couch of rest was sought at night, the same thing was repeated.

This seeing others speaking to God every day, as to a familiar friend, referring all questions of doubt and perplexity to him, asking his guidance in perfect trust and confidence about the most simple duties of every-day life, leaves an indelible impress upon the mind. Our faith that God is, is strengthened. Our belief that he cares in a peculiar way for his children, receives a new impulse. We see the fact demonstrated right before our eyes. The petition goes up, and the request is granted. Who can tell how many have come and gone in this Christian household, to be saved in the day of the Lord's appearing through the awakening influence of those oft repeated lessons of prayer? God has the first place here. It is not business first, and then God, but first God and then business. The knees bow to him and the first greetings of the day are his. The little ones who oft find a temporary asylum in their home, are taught that "Piety is felicity," and that a knowledge of God and his will is the excelsior of all human attainment.

In prayer their hands are folded—
They flap "Our Father" to;
They sing of streets so golden,
And childhood's duty do.

How much I wonder that any Christian family should dispense with the altar of prayer, when its uses and blessings are so manifest to all. We leave our encampment open to the foe when we erect no bulwark of prayer. So armed and intrenched, he dare not attack, or, attacking, is easily repulsed. He fears the sword that is sharpened in heaven. None is fortified to meet opposition who has not had his armor well burnished at the altar fires. No one is fitted to give a reason for the hope that is in him with meekness and fear, or to take upon himself the simplest duties as a member of the church, until he has first sought strength from God. We can do a great many things that seem impossible, in our weakness, through God that strengtheneth us. We must first learn to trust and then to work. It is in this way that our dear brother and sister have been so blessed. And now, wherever they are, on steamboat, railroad or street cars, they are enabled to give testimony for God, and by question, tract, or solemnly uttered admonition, seek to save their fellow-men. They can speak for Jesus, because they are well versed in the language of Canaan, and so might we if we knew it as well.

Brother D. T. Taylor's "The threshhold," next attracted my attention, and brought tears to my eyes. O "let us depart;" there is sin and anarchy here. Let us press on with swiftly accelerated steps toward the golden threshold of our Father's home.

"Childhood and character" impressed me deeply, as to my responsibility in shaping the course and in forming the character of the child committed to my guardianship. May God aid me in sowing the blessed seeds of truth in her heart, that she may become what I so much desire her to be, a child of God. Let us not, like Lot, grasp for wealth in the midst of Sodom and so neglect and lose our child.

We read Brother O. R. L. C.'s "Organization" with profit, and Brother Hasting's little poem closed our evening's entertainment, and then I said, "we have been to meeting and have been fed, and not at a table filled with cold victuals either." My husband says, "Yes; who would do without a religious paper? I would not, I could not see the RESTITUTION die." And I think, after receiving such a blessing as we have through its pages, this would be the unanimous voice of the brotherhood.

To-day I took it up again, and was much pleased to hear again from Brother J. B. Cook, whose face I learned to know when a little child of six years. He it was who first led Brother and Sister W. into the truth on baptism. They were then living in Cincinnati. I looked over Brother Weethee's remarks with interest, found Brother Morgan's report full of good things, saw that Brother Hatch had been out fishing, and had been very successful, felt impelled to renewed watchfulness by B. T. T.'s "Solar Mutability," took home the closing admonition of S. J. H.'s "Paraphrase," looked over the article of Bro. Stephenson, and am longing, with our young Brother Harlan, for the returning of our absent Lord.

I bless each and all for their words of comfort and warning, and pray that a joyful "well done" may soon be accorded them for their efforts, in the now fast-nearing kingdom. Let us watch and pray. The coming of the Lord draweth nigh!

Editor Restitution:—I want to say a word through the RESTITUTION, in behalf of Brother C. F. Sweet's works that were published in the advertising columns of the RESTITUTION, a short time since. I have sent for a "set" of those books. I have read them and re read them, and I think that his solution of the parable of "The Rich Man," etc., is the most rational and reasonable exposition I ever read or heard given, and I think that Brother Sweet is entitled to more extended notice than what you have given him. I know Brother Sweet personally; he is a candid man, a close reasoner, and a careful Bible critic. Furthermore, he is very limited in this world's goods. Therefore, I want to suggest to the brethren generally, everywhere, to send Brother Sweet one dollar, and get a "set of those books," (they are worth the money) and get information that they cannot get (or do not get) through the periodicals of the day, and by so doing, they will accomplish a two-fold purpose, viz:

1. They will assist to relieve Brother Sweet's embarrassments.

2. They will increase their knowledge,—which I am confident they will never regret.

I am going to order five dollars worth of them, to scatter here. Come, brethren, don't read this and then throw it aside, and say, "I ain't able." I know of scores that are able, but by saying (and doing) "I ain't able," they are wealthy in this world's goods Who will respond to Brother Sweet's call? JOHN SISSONE.

Editor Restitution:—I am alive in this part of the country, surrounded by several kinds of people of the "professed Christian world." I can not hear the truth preached as it was by Christ and the apostles only as I read it through the RESTITUTION and in that blessed Book, the Bible. I am ever contending for the truth, and as I grow older, I grow stronger in the faith, looking for the glorious return of the Lord from heaven to reign upon the throne of his Father David. If any of the brethren, when passing by, can stop at my humble cottage they will be gladly received. Your sister in the Lord, believing in life only through Christ. JAPE HARLAN.

Oxford, Iowa.

P. S. I think if some preaching brother could visit this part of God's moral heritage good might be accomplished, but none need expect very much of this world's goods. I am a poor widow; but do all I can to help forward the cause. I live one mile west of Gifford.

Editor Restitution:—I prize the paper for the truth it presents on the coming of the Master. I hope the brethren will not waste their time in finding out merely the best way for a Christian union, but work for the general good of the brotherhood. I like Brother Myers' kind and Christian letter to the brethren; and I am pleased with Brother Stephenson's views on Christ as our intercessor and as being the antitype of the AARONIC Priesthood. He is not King till he comes to reign on David's throne. I hope to hear more on that and kindred subjects. I would like to have Brother Stephenson or some other good brother come down to Lebanon, Ills, and give us a few discourses on the gospel of the kingdom. Yours in the bonds of the gospel of the kingdom.

WHITFIELD TOWNSEND.

Lebanon, Ill.

Editor Restitution:—I will here state that I still receive the RESTITUTION weekly, and that I am very thankful to its contributors and the editor for the good and useful instructions I get, as it always comes with so much Christian food for the intellect to feast upon. May it live to carry the rich blessings, and glad tidings of salvation to many poor souls who are now in darkness. Darkness surely covers the land, and gross darkness the people. They [illegible] light lest their deeds should be reproved. When one either writes or speaks as God's word plainly teaches, the cry is made at once—"O, that is your hobby,"—in order to keep the people from reading to see whether these things are so. The world is full of speculation; but on this coast the first and the only inquiry is: "Will it pay?" All have an eye to business; going to meeting will not pay. This is what a large portion of the people in this section of the country say: "I have no time to read the Bible; it won't pay; I must read my newspapers, and that takes all the leisure time, unless I should not get my regular sleep."

O how I would like to have an able proclaimer of the ancient gospel come into this country that was able to awaken the people. They do not know how to take time to become Christians. The world and its fashions have them so enslaved, that they can not free themselves from their vain delusions. I can not find any persons in my travels that think it will pay to learn any more than their fathers or their preachers know. I will try to get all the help I can to aid the RESTITUTION, as I may travel more in time to come than I have during the year past. In hope of the kingdom, MAY he come whose might it is to rule.

Editor Restitution:—We have been cheered on account of the addition of six to our little body within the past three months, and who are now on their way rejoicing in the truth which has made them free. Verily the truth is the only satisfying portion—the word of the Lord which liveth and abideth forever, and which will raise us up at the last day. To God be all the glory. Yours in love of the gospel

Iowa Conference Report.

The first quarterly conference of the Church of God in Iowa convened with the brethren at their house near Colo, Story county, Iowa, on the evening of December 21, 1876, at which time Brother G. M. Myers addressed the congregation from Acts viii.

Friday morning we assembled at 10 o'clock, and engaged in the discussion of subjects suggested by the first paragraph of Acts ii., after which we adjourned until 5 o'clock for conference business.

At 5 o'clock p. m., our president, Brother A. J. Eychaner, being absent, Brother Wm. A. Webb was chosen temporary president. On motion the chair appointed Brethren Marsh, Carr and Lincoln as a committee of arrangements. The subject of organization and co-operation was then discussed until adjournment.

Brother R. J. Hill then preached from Ephesians iv. 10-20.

At 10 o'clock on Saturday we met again for conference business. A letter from Brother A. J. Eychaner was read relative to his absence, and the great work before us. The subject of a more thorough organization was then taken up, and the following resolutions were offered, fully discussed, and adopted:

1. That it is the sense of this conference that we need a more thorough organization, in order that we may successfully prosecute the work of proclaiming the unsearchable riches of Christ to a perishing world—also, that we are in favor of some plan of co-operation among the churches of the United States, that we may the more successfully prosecute the good work.

2. That the officers of this conference be, and they are instructed, in addition to their respective duties as as officers of this conference, to act as a missionary board, and be authorized to solicit and receive funds for missionary work, and out of the funds thus obtained pay for the same, as they may agree; also, that it be their duty to make a report of their doings at our regular quarterly conferences, and that such report be made a part of the conference business.

That, in the future this conference shall be composed of such brethren and sisters in good standing as may at any time attend said conference; and in addition to these, those brethren and sisters who are not able to attend, may be represented in the conference by delegates of their own choosing, at the rate of one delegate for every five [illegible] Brother J. J. Robinson then [illegible] his acts as solicitor, showing $16 subscribed and $14 paid in. Adjourned until 5 o'clock.

Met as per adjournment, and took up the subject of finance, and, after considerable discussion as to plans, the brethren manifested their plan by coming forward with their contributions, and laying them on the table.

The time for preaching having arrived, we adjourned until four o'clock next day, and Brother Myers addressed us from Christ's language to Nicodemus.

At 11 o'clock on Sunday, Brother Myers preached on the subject of the Spirit. At 4 o'clock we met for conference business. A resolution to adopt the ad valorem system of raising funds was discussed at length, and laid over until our next meeting, for final action.

The board was then directed to expend the means now on hand for evangelist labor, as they should deem best.

A motion was then carried that our next meeting be held at Belle Plaine, Benton county, as Brother Marsh and Brother Hollis may arrange.

On motion, the conference then adjourned, and Brother Myers continued his subject of the morning to a large and attentive audience.

This ended our meetings, and we hope measures have been started that will grow into a more perfect working order, so the end that the glad tidings of the coming kingdom may be heralded throughout the land, and the Brethren be more perfectly joined together.

Any communication in regard to evangelist labor, or any funds contributed for that purpose may be sent to A. J. Eychaner, Oilman, Marshall co., Iowa; Jas. Carr, Nevada, Story Co., Iowa; John Pitz, Irving, Tama Co., Iowa. We solicit correspondence with the brethren in all parts of the state, that we may know the wants of the cause, and that they may know what is being done to meet those wants.

JOHN FITZ, Secretary.

The Phare du Bosphore (newspaper) declares that inasmuch as all the articles of the Conference programme are framed with the view to the delimitation or establishment of a privileged province, therefore, even if the powers withdraw four-fifths of their demands, the Porte would still persist in its objections.

Quarrelsome persons are very dangerous companions.

Union.

Editor Restitution:—The Church of God at Volga Indiana, have authorized me to write a few lines to the RESTITUTION for publication, in the hearty approval of the union that was agreed upon, and that really took place between the two conferences at Bridgeport Ind., in September.

United we stand; divided we fall, are old proverbs but none the less absolute and true. In union there is strength in state or Church. My Dear Christian Brethren, Greeting. It seems to me that nothing is more needed at the present day, (viewing our surroundings and the near approach of King Jesus) than a union of co-operation between us as Churches of God, and strong believers in the great dispensational truth—the second coming of Jesus our Savior.

Dear brethren, the differences that exist between us are comparatively small and unimportant, when we take into due consideration the great amount of good we can accomplish united in our master work.

Let us be willing to fellowship all who believe on Jesus Christ and obey his commandments, and more especialy, all who not only believe on him and obey his commandments, but who are earnestly and anxiously looking for Jesus.

In conclusion I would say, my earnest and sincere prayer to God is, that all strife and contention may cease among us, and that we may all go to work in perfect harmony.

Yours in hope of eternal life,
THO'S V. PORTER.

Unsuccessful Workers.

Desponding christians do not make successful workers or valiant soldiers. "Feeble-Hearts," and "Ready-to-Halts," and "Little-Faiths," win no battles, and wear no crowns. They are so occupied with themselves, with their own experiences, their own evidences, their changing moods are feelings, that they have no time for manly, noble service. They are so busy in trying to perform "acts of faith;" and having performed them, they are so intent upon analyzing them, in order to ascertain whether they be all of the exact quality or quantity which will recommend them to God, that they leave no space for "joy in blessing," and no room for the free, large-hearted labor which such joy cannot fail to lead to. Tossed up and down on the waves of unbelief, like Paul's ship in [illegible] they are in fear of perpetual shipwreck, and have no heart to work. Shutting their eyes against the light, they grope their way uncertainly, and cannot run the race. Afraid to believe, but not afraid to doubt; afraid to trust, but not afraid to distrust; doubting themselves, and making that a reason for doubting God; putting away peace, and giving full scope to gloom; refusing light, but letting darkness reign within them; they are not in a condition to do hard work—nay to do any work at all. Strength comes from joy, and of that joy they have none. They refuse both food and medicine, and they become lean and sickly. They are fitter for the hospital than for the battle-field. They seem, too, to get more and more emaciated, though the food provided is abundant. Laboring under what physicians call atrophy, the more they eat the less they seem to be fed.—Bonar.

Anecdote of Carlyle.

The curious and "troublesome" style of Carlyle is said to be quite in contrast with his simple, straightforward way of talking. Hatred of sham is one of his notable characteristics. One evening at a small literary gathering, a lady famous for her "muslin theology" was bewailing the wickedness of the Jews in not receiving our Savior, and ended her diatribe by expressing regret that he had not appeared in our own time. "How delighted," said she, "we would all be to throw our doors open to him, and listen to his divine precepts! Don't you think so, Mr. Carlyle?"

The sturdy philosopher, thus appealed to, said, in his broad Scotch:

"No, madam, I don't. I think that had he come very fashionably dressed, with plenty of money, and preached doctrines palatable to the higher orders, I might have had the honor of receiving a card of invitation from you on the back of which would be written, 'To meet our Savior;' but if he had come uttering his precepts, and denouncing the Pharisees, and associating with publicans and the lower orders, as he did, you would have treated him much as the Jews did, and have cried out, 'Take him to Newgate, and hang him!'"—Sel.

The next meeting of the Conference has been postponed to Thursday, at the request of the Turkish Minister who will hold a Cabinet council to-morrow to draw up a new project on the basis of the Andrassy note.

DIED.

Of paralysis, after a lingering illness, at his residence, near Fawn Creek, Montgomery county, Kan., November 22, 1876, Joseph Bradley, in the 76th year of his age.

For nearly two years our father had been a helpless invalid, during which time his sufferings were very severe. But he sustained them all with Christian fortitude. Through all his sickness we never heard him murmur or complain. He was enabled to realize that these light afflictions, which are but for a moment, would work out for him a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. He constantly longed for the appearing of his Savior to change his suffering body like unto his own; but he often said, if he was not permitted to remain until the coming of the Lord, he would be satisfied when he awoke in his likeness.

It seems hard to part with our dear father; and while writing these lines our heart seems breaking with its great weight of sorrow; but by faith we are enabled to draw aside the dark mantle of grief and woe, and catch a glimpse of the golden hereafter where there shall be no more death, no more following our loved ones to the silent grave, there to mingle our tears with the dust that hides them from our view. There all tears will be wiped away. No aching brows, no painful limbs are there, but each loved form will be clothed with blessed immortality. Oh the glorious future that awaits God's children! Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.

May our bereaved mother and her children get their trust in him who has promised to be a husband to the widow, and a father to the fatherless. And though separated for a while from our loved ones, may we meet us embraced as family in the kingdom of God.

Yours, striving for the kingdom.

Valuable English Works.

Our readers are informed that we expect shortly to have for sale the works mentioned below. Orders and remittances for the same may be sent at once to this office.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Brannan, Congregational minister, and W. Kelloway, editor of Bible Echo, and minister of the Gospel. Both of Australia. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the soul dies in a literal, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by W. C. B. 2. That the Scriptures teach that men in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth, bevelled boards, well bound, 65c; postage 10c. Paper cover, 35c; postage 5c.

Duration and Nature of Future Punishment. By Rev. H. Constable, M. A., late Prebendary of Cork, Ireland. 300 pp. An elaborate argument touching the punishment of the unsaved. It is particularly due to its able critical chapters respecting the meaning of the Greek words used by the inspired writers to indicate the doom of the lost. Price 61; postage 10c.

"We hail this book with truly satisfaction. Undoubtedly the subject which it treats with such an attractive combination of learning and modesty, of power and reverence, has held hold of the minds of many of the most thoughtful Christian men of our day. Its growth, from a pamphlet in the first edition to a handsome volume of three hundred and thirty pages in the fourth, is conclusive proof that the question discussed is one of profound importance.... We must also compliment the publishers on the tasteful and handsome dress in which they present the book to the public, and express the hope that the necessary outlay will speedily be much more than recovered by the large sale of a work which must take a standard place in the painfully misunderstood department of Christian theology.—The Rainbow.

Hades; or, The Intermediate State of Man. Crown 8vo, 3d edition. Price $1.35; postage 15c.

This work presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection.

"Mr. Constable has, in a series of works, devoted much labor and research to establishing from Scripture and other sources the real nature of the future state; and the present book is the result of his more exhaustive labors on one special point. His argument is supported by no little learning, a keen logic, and a clear and available style. There is a good deal to be said for the general doctrines propounded."—Nonconformist.

"It is characterized by his usual vigor of thought and clearness of expression. To all sincere lovers of truth, rather than of tradition, we cordially commend its free line."—The Church Missionary.

Bible Echo. Volume I., May to December, edited by W. Kelloway. The only English weekly that advocates the Ancient Gospel. Bound volume of numbers of the Bible Echo, containing important papers and discussions on vital matters, and the news concerning the spread of the scriptural doctrine of immortality. Price $1.25.

Bible Echo. Vol. III. July to September, 1876. This completes the Bible Echo as a weekly newspaper, and contains 24 numbers. Price $1.00.

Bible Echo. New Series. Monthly. Started from October, 1875. The yearly subscription for this magazine, including the 3 months of last year, is 2s 6d.

New Facts upon all Subjects. By the author of "Enquire Within Upon Everything." Useful to the physician, the clergyman, the engineer, the manufacturer, the agriculturist, the gardener, and the housekeeper. 336 pp. Price 90c; postage 10c.

A New Work by Mrs. H. V. Reed.

Harvest Work for Home Reapers. Mostly 300 pp. Well printed on heavy toned paper, neatly bound in cloth. Price 90c; postage 10c.

"The book is one of the most satisfactory of its kind that could be written; indeed we know of none other in every way so pleasing to those who get the scattered leaves of the Bible as a revelation from God. We would be more than content, we would be proud, if the title page bore our name instead of that of the talented and talented lady, the authoress. Her "Bible Triumphant" was a good work, and it is, we know, warmly appreciated by many; but this work, so original, so forcible, so convincing, it would be hard to guess where its equal was still said. Every body should possess a copy."—Mr. Bible Echo.

Bible Triumphant. A new supply is expected. Price, paper covers, 50c; cloth 75c.

Brethren and Sisters—Greeting.

Dear Brethren and Sisters
Who love our blessed Lord,
Who're guided by His counsel,
His precious inspired word;
I wish that I could meet you
In these most "perilous times!"
But as I can't, I greet you,
With these few broken rhymes.

"How are you then," my brethren?
And you, my sister dear?
You who are truly pilgrims,
And ever strangers here?
Have you on the white armor,
In which the Christian fights?—
Is filth your mighty mantle
And "burning are your lights?"

While war, and tumult rages,
And Satan shows the strife,
And men receive their wages
For taking brother's life;
O strive to keep your armor
And wield the "spirit" sword,
"Twill overcome all evil,
For 'tis the Word of God.

Do trial- thicken round you,
My fellow-travelers-here?
Fight by the wheat with terror,
O, never, never fear;
If you would gain the kingdom,
"Your faith must sure be tried,
To prove if you are worthy
To be for Christ a bride.

We think we hear you saying,
O, these are fearful days!
When Christians should be praying,
"Keep us in wisdom's ways;"
Help us to calm the tempest,
And cleave unto the Lord,
For we would ever hold-w
The teachings of "thy word."

We're looking for a kingdom,
Where dear Christ will reign,
And have the whole dominion
Thrown 'earth's wide domain;
For all the Gentile rulers,
Who now possess the power,
Will be subdued or, perish
Before that joyful hour.

"The promise made to Abra'm,"
(Gal) will yet long fulfill,
Then, Christ, the Son of David,
Shall reign on Zion's Hill;
Then, Israel, and Judah
United, and returned,
Will serve their King and Sav'or,
Whose mercy once they spurned.

O, Brethren, now be faithful,
And you will share His reign;
Be Kings and Priests immortal,
When Jesus comes again—
Be willing then to suffer
For your rejected Lord;
Fear not the pound, nor scoffer,
But preach, O, "preach the Word."

Our hearts are sad and lonely,
We're sighing for a home,
With all the work, and holy,
Where sorrow will not come.
Then, friends, we hope to meet you
When Grace comes pardon's
God grant, we there may greet you,
On Canaan's peaceful shore.

The Consumption.

BY REV. H. HOARE.

I endeavored in a former lecture to bring before you the blessed hope of our Lord's return, and to show, from the great outlines of prophecy, that there is enough to justify the expectations of those who humbly trust that we shall not have much longer to wait. During the guided my reference to what are called "the signs of the times," and confined your attention exclusively to the great backbone of prophecy, i. e., to the prophetic history of the four mighty kingdoms which were foretold as holding the empire of the world. From that outline I endeavored to show that these four great kingdoms were to arise in succession, one after the other, and that they would fill up the interval between the time of the prophecy and the setting of the Ancient of Days. I hope, also, I made it plain from history that three of those kingdoms have long since fallen, and that, as far as the predicted periods enable us to judge, we must be drawing near the close of the fourth. The great outline, therefore, leads to the hope that the time of the glorious Kingdom of our blessed Lord may be near. But though we did not study the signs of the times then, I do not think we should undervalue them, for our blessed Savior foretold certain things that would take place, and added, "When ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors." If, therefore, any of these things are now taking place, it is clear that we ought to study them; and that we should not be really carrying out the teachings of the Lord Jesus if we were to neglect them.

I propose, therefore, in obedience to his words, to bring before you in this lecture what has long appeared to me one of the most conclusive signs that the time is not very far distant. I allude to the present position of the Church of Rome, and I earnestly hope that God has directed my thoughts in the study of it, and that whatever in what I may now say is according to his Word, may be written in all our hearts and minds by the teaching of the Holy Ghost.

There are three great historical prophecies, which, in the opinion of the majority of our best expositors predict the rise, the progress, and the fall of the Church of Rome.

The first of these we briefly noticed last Sunday. It is the prophecy of the little horn rising amidst the ten horns of the beast, or the Papacy rising in the midst of that cluster of European kingdoms which succeeded the power of the undivided Roman Empire.

The second is the prophecy of "the man of sin" in 2 Thess. 2. And I cannot but hear the mention of one illustration of a verse in that prophecy which I saw myself in Rome. Many people think that the description in the fourth verse is too strong for Popery; but there is a curious illustration of it in St. Peter's. You may there see what they call the altar in the usual place at the end of the chancel, and above it, surrounded by an elaborately decorated reredos, is what is called the chair of S. Peter, or the Pope's throne, the seat of Papal power. On the altar below, according to their own teaching, is the living person, of the King of Glory, perfect man and perfect God, and in front of that altar may be seen men worshipping the wafer because they call it God. But above it is the Pope's chair, and if he were to occupy it he would not there with that which they call God, and worship as God, beneath his feet. Can anything be a more exact fulfillment of the words, "Exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped?"

The third is the prophecy of the woman in Rev. xvii. The application of this to the Church of Rome is less disputed than that of either of the other two, for the seat of the woman is decided by the ninth verse to be the seven-hilled city, which is almost universally admitted to be Rome.

Now it is my object to study the details of these prophecies, and there is only one point on which I invite your earnest attention—one most important point common to all the three, viz., that the final overthrow will be preceded by a consuming process. It will not be a sudden destruction in the height of prosperity, but will be the final act after a period of wasting and defeat. If these three passages refer to Rome, as I fully believe they do then Rome will be first consumed and then destroyed.

In Daniel it says (vii. 26), "The judgment shall sit." It seems clear from the context that this does not mean the great day of judgment, but the commencement of judgment on her sins here upon earth. "And they shall take away his dominion to consume and to destroy it unto the end." There is, therefore, a consuming process before the end. The word here rendered "consume" conveys the idea of a gradual process, and not a sudden blow; and teaches us that there will be a wasting before the final overthrow.

In 2 Thess. ii. 8, exactly the same process is described, and in almost the same words; "Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy at the brightness of his coming." He will first consume him by his word, and ultimately [illegible] him at his advent.

It is just the same in Rev. xvii. There you meet with the old beast, the ten-horned beast of Daniel; and the horns still representing ten kings; and when we reach the close of the chapter we find these ten kings all armed against the woman; so that, instead of being ridden and governed by her, as they were when she was riding on the beast, they are now turned against her, and agree in consuming her. "The ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore and make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire." V. 16.

Without stopping to look into the details, which it is impossible to do in a short lecture, it appears clear that all these passages agree in predicting a period during which the Papacy will be consumed before its final fall. This will be brought about partly by the power of truth, and partly by the change of mind in the kings. But whatever be the agency, the result is the same. "They will take away his dominion, to consume, and to destroy unto the end." And this you mark is the last great process before the coming of our blessed Savior, for the final destruction will be the brightness of his coming.

And now comes the question, has this consuming process begun? I know that some faint-hearted people will say, "O's, no! Rome is making dreadful progress, and must soon triumph." But surely that opinion is contrary to fact. Surely it may be proved, from the great facts of European history, not merely that the consumption has begun, but that it has been going on for the last few years with peculiar and unexampled speed.

Let us look at a few great European facts, not at little things that happen to fall within our own observation, but at the great facts that are conspicuous before the world.

Rome has always claimed, as she does still, dominion over all the kingdoms of the world, and she used to exercise it over all those of Western Christendom. Her claim even went so far that, by the common consent and advice of his barons, the King of England once "resigned England and Ireland to God, to St. Peter and St. Paul, to Pope Innocent, and his successors in the Apostolic chair; and agreed to hold the said kingdoms as feudatory of the Church of Rome, by the annual payment of one thousand marks." Imagine anyone standing up amongst the barons of England, and making such a proposal now! That dominion of the Papacy is taken away, and taken away, as I believe, forever.

When the dominion was gone the Pope made concordats, or compacts, with the different states; in which, with varying conditions, it was agreed that he should uphold them by his spiritual power, and they uphold him by the secular arm. It is a most remarkable fact, that within the fifteen years ending 1873 almost all of these concordats were brought abruptly to a violent end; those with Naples, Tuscany, and the Italian Duchies in 1858; that with Austria, including Venice, in 1868; with Spain in 1868; with France in 1870; and with Bavaria in 1873. There may be others remaining in force, but I know of none. According to the best information I can obtain all are dissolved. The Papacy has lost all its political power. The ten kings have shaken off his government, and there is not one left that submits to his authority.

But more than that. The Pope of Rome used to be king over a considerable portion of Italy. But he is now deposed. The States of the Church are incorporated with united Italy, and the Pope is king no more. They have taken his dominion. His sovereignty is at an end. Five years ago it received its death-blow, and shall we not acknowledge that the consuming process is begun?

But further still. The Church of Rome used to have vast estates. The convents which used to swarm through Italy were richly endowed with landed property. But as soon as the kingdom of Italy was well established, thus convents were broken up and their property confiscated. And now that the Pope has been dethroned in Rome, a similar measure has been passed for all those within the city, and on the 20th of October, 1874, they received notice of their dissolution. It looks very much as if the kings were eating up the flesh of the woman.

But some will say, "Ah, but in religious matters Popery is making progress, for it is winning so many perverts to its errors." I know there are many perverts, and I am deeply grieved at it, but I doubt whether Rome's progress is as great as many think. It has been calculated that in the year 1801 there were in Great Britain and Ireland, twenty-seven Romanists out of every hundred [illegible] there were only eighteen. The proportion, therefore, has actually diminished from twenty-seven to eighteen per cent.

But take a wider range, and look at the great facts of European history. At the Lateran Council in 1513, after all the so-called heretics had been silenced, or burned, it was proclaimed, "No one now opposes, no one now objects," and then the orator addressing the pope said, "The whole body of Christendom is now subjugated to one head, even to thee." But it is calculated that there are now more than 95,000,000 Protestants in Europe, and 87,000,000 members of the Greek church, making together 182,000,000 who reject the Pope's authority, against 157,000,000 who profess to submit to it. Putting all these facts together, I may ask any reasonable man, any one who looks at great facts instead of infinite details, is there not reason to believe that the consumption has begun? What else is it that has taken away his dominions, broken up his concordats, overturned his throne, stripped him of his property, and thrown all but 95,000,000 in Europe alone free from his yoke? What else is it but the fulfillment of the prophecy, "Whom the Lord shall consume with the Spirit of his mouth," prophecy to the time when he shall "destroy him with the brightness of his coming"?

Now there are many lessons that we might learn, if we had but time, from this subject: I might spend all the time that remains in pressing on you the importance of keeping clear of all alliance with Rome. If God is consuming her, God's people must have nothing to do with her either in politics or religion, for if they do they will find themselves drawn into the vortex into which she must infallibly sink. The message to them is, "Come out her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

But it is not my point in this lecture, anxious rather that we should look on the whole subject as an encouragement to faith. Surely some amongst us are too faint hearted about the truth. It really seems as if they could trust the Lord Jesus for their own souls, but not for his church or for his truth; as if they had forgotten the text, "Are not thine eyes upon the truth?" They value their Bible, and are ready to contend for it even unto the death; but still they do not above half believe it. They are ready to go forth to battle, but they are not ready to begin, like Jehoshaphat, with the hymn, "Praise the Lord!" They would rather chant some plaintive lament, and go into the battle with the doleful expectation of defeat. But this is not faith. This is not trust in the Lord Jesus. Ah! but one says he cannot rely on Government, and another that he cannot trust in bishops. But what has this to do with it? I ask one asks you to trust in elders either in church or state, for the Scripture says, "Put not your trust in Princes." What I ask you to do is to trust the Lord Jesus Christ at the right hand of God. Trust Him, and all will be right though all other objects of trust fail you.

Now I see this great subject as a help to your soul. See how it exhibits him in his covenant and his own way, working out his own predicted purpose. It was utterly impossible for any man by private interpretation to calculate the course that things would take. But he foresaw it, and more than two thousand years ago he actually foretold what he would do. And now, after all these centuries have passed, after great empires have risen and fallen according to his prophecy, after every species of effort has been made in vain to silence God's Word, after every available means has been employed,—political influence, religious influence, priestly assumption, and fiery persecution,—to stamp out God's truth, we see the Lord Jesus with a mighty hand fulfilling his word, carrying out his purpose and preparing the way for victory. And is that the time to distrust him? If we are so faint hearted now, what should we have been before the Reformation? What should we have been after John Huss was burned, and when the Lord's own people were like the seven thousand hidden ones in the days of Elijah? If we are of faint-hearted now, that we have experienced that "which counsels of old are faithfulness and truth," what should we have done if we had lived before any prophecies had been fulfilled: if we had to trust to his bare naked word before it was confirmed by history? But now that we have this great confirmation, and now that we see the putting forth of his hand, this is not the time for faint-heartedness or misgiving: this is not the time to distrust him whom God has made the "head over all things to his church." It is true that "God moves in a mysterious way,

His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps on the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

But it is certain that he is riding on the storm, and will perform his own wonders, so that we may add, as in the next verse of the same hymn,

"Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take,
The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with mercies, and will break
In blessings on your head."

And not only so, but we may reverently hope that it will not be long before we behold his triumph. When the disciples were on the lake the night was dark, and the winds were contrary, but he came to them in his own good time, and all was rest. So we may meet with rough weather, but there will be a great calm when he comes, and I cannot but hope he will soon be here. We have long since known of him on the mountain-top, but now we can almost see him walking on the waves. It is high time, therefore, that we act on his own words; "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." He does not say, "Wait till they have all come to pass," but "look up as they begin." Now they must undoubtedly have begun, and for a long time have been in progress. It is high time, therefore, that we begin to look up in faith and hope, waiting for Christ, looking for Christ, longing for Christ, and meanwhile trusting in Christ; so that when he comes we may be found pardoned through his blood, accepted in his covenant, clothed in his righteousness, and with loving hearts waiting for his appearing.—"Rome, Turkey, and Jerusalem," London, England.

Exegetical.

In a former paper we gave a selected article bearing on the Elect church, in its triumphant and redeemed state as constituting the Bride of its glorious Redeemer: in this we will consider a lower application of the term as relating to assemblies or bodies of people, in the former dispensation.

The Greek word (ekklesia ecclesia,) occurs 115 times in the New Testament, and it is rendered by the word "church," either singular or plural, in every occurrence except 4 Acts xix. 32, 39, 41, where it is translated "assembly." The word church is derived from the Greek word kuriakon, signifying consecrated to the Lord; in Saxon, Kyrck; Scandinavian, Kirkia; Slavic, Cerkiew; Scotch, Kirk; the Romance languages, however, more nearly correspond to the exact original word, as the term eclisia becomes eclesia in the Latin, iglesia in the Spanish, and eglise in the French. The Greek word literally denotes "called out;" hence the church would be—a body of "called out ones." It is once applied to the body of the Israelites in the wilderness. Acts vii. 38. We may remark in passing that the words "assembly and congregation," so often applied to Israel in the Old Testament, are translations of a Hebrew word signifying "to call together—to assembly." Hence Israel is a nation "called out" from the nations. In the New Testament usage it often indicates a particular assembly of christians, meeting together in any one town or city. At other times it is applied to the whole body of professed christians, either throughout the world,—either in Judea, or among the Gentiles. Acts ix. 31. Rom. xvi. 4. 1 Cor. xvi. 1, 19. 2 Cor. viii. 1.

In the lower reception of the word, the church is contemplated as an outward and visible body of men and women, who have been called out from the world by the proclamation of the gospel, and separated both by ordinances and outward profession from the rest of mankind, and whose head, ruler, and lawgiver is the Lord Jesus Christ. Eph. i. 22-24. In this latter sense, the church is a mixed body, liable to include hypocrites and false brethren as well as true believers. This is evident from the fact that it is empowered to exclude from its fellowship certain disorderly walking and sinful characters. Matth. xviii. 15-18. 1 Cor. v. 11-13; and it is still further evident, from another fact, that the qualifications spoken of most unworthy characters as associated with the true believers. They warned night and day with tears as they contemplated the "grievous wolves and men speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them." Acts xx. 29-31.

They warned against contentions, strife, divisions, and marshalling under human leaders. 1 Cor. i. 11-16; iii. 1-7. Many so walked as to demonstrate that they were only low, carnal, worldly men, glorying in their shame, and whom the apostles declared with weeping, that they were "enemies of the cross of Christ." Some grievously erred in doctrine;—"declaring that the resurrection is passed already;" and thus "overthrew the faith of some." 2 Tim. ii. 18. Some said there would be no resurrection, and thus subverted the whole gospel scheme, 1 Cor. xv. 14. Jude's single chapter is almost entirely devoted to describing how sad a state of things had obtained even while inspired apostles were yet living and teaching; and he passes over to the last time to describe ungodly men. Some of these could only be saved by "pulling them out of the fire"—whose very touch was contamination.

This state of things often led the apostles to narrow their addresses only to the saints and the faithful in Christ Jesus, and to the "saints and faithful brethren in Christ." Eph. i. 1 Phil. i. 1. Col. i. 2. We must bear in mind that these narrow addresses were never directed to any association of persons who had separated themselves from other mere professors of the faith, for the purpose of maintaining sound doctrine, a pure discipline, or greater spirituality. The purpose of calling out the church then, in this dispensation is evidently, that men and women may be instructed in the things concerning salvation, embracing the pardon of sins, reconciliation to God, and an honorable degree of relationship to him in this world; and, in the world to come, eternal life, with all its attendant honors, in the Kingdom of God. 2 Pet. i. 1-11. Many are called into the church, in its present imperfect state, who will absolutely fail of being chosen to the higher honors of the finally redeemed church of Christ.

"Many are called, but few are chosen." Let us rejoice that God will eliminate a perfect church out of the poor imperfect organizations of this dispensation, the membership of which shall, individually, be conformed both morally and physically, to the image of his dear Son. In this chosen church, over which the gates of Hades shall not prevail, God will be glorified by Christ Jesus "throughout all ages, world without end." Into this heavenly family, to which we are called with a heavenly calling, may it be ours to enter at the glorious appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. Till then we must hold fast the word of life, contend earnestly for the faith, preach the Kingdom of God, render our bodies a living sacrifice holy and acceptable in his sight, strive to approximate the unity of the faith and knowledge of the Son of God, get along through the sins of the world, the darkness of professed christians, and the imperfections of brethren and sisters with whom we may be associated as well we can. Others have to bear with our imperfections and short comings. Soon that which is perfect will come then that which is in part will be done away. "Now to him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding great joy, to the only wise God and Savior, be glory, and majesty, dominion and power, both now and forever. Amen.

DAN. v. 25. MENE, MENE, TEKAL, UPHARIN. Each of these words admit of a two-fold meaning. Mene, is to count or and also to be complete. Tekal is in Chaldaic what Shakal is in Hebrew, namely, to weigh; but it also has the one idea of, too light.

U parsin is derived from the root parast breaking or dividing, and at the same time it points to the people by whom the breaking will be accomplished, viz., the Persians. The translation, therefore, is this: "Mene," God has numbered the days of thy reign, "Mene" and has completed them—He has concluded to end them. "Tekal," thou hast been weighed in the balance and hast been found too light, or wanting. "U-parsin," therefore thy power will be broken, and the Kingdom given to the Persians.—U. B., Ladder, in Bible Examiner.

The Time of the End.

"Shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end."

"Go thy way, Daniel, for the words are closed and sealed up till the time of the end. And at the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him, and the king of the north shall come against him like a whirlwind."

It evidently is a period of time.

The running to and fro, and the increase of knowledge, are the marked features of our times. If the king of Egypt is the king of the south, then the time of the end began probably before 1840, but this is not certain.

The scattering the power of the holy people—or people of the holy ones—is evidently finished. The Hebrew race occupies places of power in the governments. And they are the great bankers of the world, lending money by the millions to the governments of the world.

Their condition is evidently a providential one. With this the wonderful inventions of our times, communication across continents and oceans in moments of time—all of these wonders have come to pass since I was twelve years of age, and show that we are living in a marked period of prophetic fulfillment.

In 1843 A. J. Davis began his career as a spiritualist, claiming to demonstrate the natural immortality of mankind, and his influence is felt over the world. A leading spiritualist said to me at that time, "You Millerites are right on time; you were mistaken only in the character of events; we are ushering in the new dispensation; the Scriptures were to be superseded by these new revelations."

No immortality except through our Lord Jesus Christ began to be spread among Adventists about the same time. To me this is an important fact.

CHAS BOARDMAN.

Ready for the New Year.

The congregation here, at Irving, Iowa, met to business capacity Saturday afternoon, Dec. 30th, and after selecting a chairman, had the names of members read, which were fifteen in number. Then names were presented for membership, on which ten in number were in the regular order received, making our number now twenty-five, all in good standing and ready with clean hands and white aprons, and, we trust, hearts full of love and zeal for the work of the incoming year. After this we selected Brother Levi Marsh as Elder, to fill the vacancy made by the removal from our locality of I. T. Prime. Our meeting on Sunday morning and evening, was well attended. In the evening we had one confession, and on Monday—New Year's day—we consecrated the day by holding meeting and attending to the immersion. Other additions soon are almost certain.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates such means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with Christ as King of Kings, and his immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a firmly settled faith in the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

A King Shall Reign and Prosper.

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper." Jer. xxiii. 5.

The branch that will be raised up unto David, is the king that will reign and prosper. "There shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of his roots. He shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears; but with righteousness shall he judge the people." Is. xi. 1. The branch and the king are the same, "He is the child that was to be born, upon whose shoulder the government was to rest." He is the seed of Abraham, and the seed of David. Of him it is said, Thou shalt call his name Jesus, he shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end. And he shall perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and remember his holy covenant, the oath which he swore to our father Abraham. He is the nobleman who went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and return. And when he returns, having received the kingdom, he will share it with his saints, and he will sit upon the throne of his father David, and begin to reign over the house of Jacob. And in the days of his reign, the righteous shall flourish, and abundance of peace, as long as the sun and moon endure.

Thus, the king to which the above descriptions refer, is the king that will reign and prosper over the house of Jacob forever. He is called by many other names, but they all designate the person of our Lord Jesus Christ.

After the resurrection of Christ, he went to heaven to receive for himself the kingdom and return. He is now in heaven waiting to receive the kingdom. When he receives it, he will come again, and as he approaches the world, he will stop in the region of the clouds before his feet stand upon the earth; and while there he will judge the dead, and as a result of that judgment, the dead in Christ will rise first, then we which are alive and remain shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so ever to be with him. This resurrection of the dead, and the change of the righteous living, will fashion their vile bodies like unto Christ's glorious body. Then the Lord will come and all the saints with him, and his feet will stand upon the mount of Olives; and the Lord will be king over all the earth. From that time onward a King shall reign and prosper for ever and ever.

Some Things which will Contribute to the Prosperity of the Kingdom.

When the Lord comes to reign over the house of Jacob, the twelve tribes of Israel will be scattered among all nations as foretold in the Scriptures, "And the Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from the one end of the earth to the other. And among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest; but the Lord shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind. And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life." Deut. xxviii. 64, 66. With this agrees the experience of the Jews since the destruction of Jerusalem, in the year A. D. 70. And with this also agree the words of Christ. "For there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke xxi. 24. Immediately after this tribulation upon the Jews, during their captivity, and during the times of the Gentiles, and while Jerusalem is trodden down of them, there shall be signs in the sun and in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; and then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. Such will be the condition of the people when the Lord comes. In order to reign over them prosperously, he will gather them to their own land, and make the new covenant with them, and thus restore the kingdom to Israel.

Isa. xi. 10 13. "And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek; and his rest shall be glorious. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the Islands of the sea. And he shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off; Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim."

The gathering of Israel and Judah, the cutting off the adversaries of Judah, and the healing of the envy between Israel and Judah all will take place after the coming of the Lord to reign.

Isa. lx. 20. "And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the Lord out of all nation, upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the Lord, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel into the house of the Lord."

This gathering of the people of Jerusalem out of all nations will also take place after the Lord has come to reign.

Jer. xxiii. 5, 8. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely. Therefore, the days shall come, when they shall no more say, The Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt. But the Lord liveth which brought up the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them, and they shall dwell in their own land. This gathering of Israel to dwell in their own land, will be after the Lord has come to sit upon the throne of David and reign over the house of Jacob for ever. He will reign and prosper.

Jer. xxxi. 31, 34. The new covenant will be made with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah, after they have been gathered to their own land. See v. 27. The covenant is this. After those days (the days of their dispersion), saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and will be their God and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying know the Lord, for they shall all know me from the least of them unto the greatest of them, for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.

When this new covenant shall be made as above, the city of Jerusalem shall not be pinched up, nor thrown down any more for ever. vs. 40.

Jer. xxxii. 37, 42, Behold, I will gather them out of all countries whither I have driven them in mine anger, and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely. And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them to do them good, but I will put my fear in their hearts that they shall not depart from me. And they shall be my people, and I will be their God.

In this passage the people of Israel will first be gathered out of all countries where they had been driven, and then the everlasting covenant will be made with them, and then the assurance is given that the Lord will not turn away from them to do them good, and that they shall not depart from them.

Jer. xxxiii. 15, 16. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel, and to the house of Judah. In those days, and at that time, will I cause the branch of righteousness to grow up unto David, and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. In those days Judah shall be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely.

The good thing that the Lord has promised to the house of Israel and to the house of Judah is, that they shall be gathered back to their own land, and that he will make the new covenant with them, and that they shall be saved, and that they shall dwell in the land of Israel safely, and that the Lord will not turn away from them to do them good, and that they shall no more depart from him.

This good thing will be performed to Israel, when the Lord, the grown up Branch of David, shall come to reign over the house of Jacob for ever. This good thing, which is to be accomplished by Jesus Christ the seed of David, surely can have no application to any of the gatherings of Israel before Christ was born.

Eze. xxxvi. 24, 36. In this passage we have the same gathering of Israel from among the heathen, and out of all countries, into their own land. The same covenant is made with them. The same prosperity, with the assurance that they shall receive no more reproach of famine among the heathen. Thus saith the Lord, In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities, I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be builded. And the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by. And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced and are inhabited.

Eze. xxxvii. 15, 28. The two sticks in this passage, represent the house of Israel and the house of Judah. When they are joined together into one stick, they represent that the two houses of Israel will be gathered out of all lands into the land of Israel, and be made one nation upon the mountains of Israel, and that one king shall be king to them all, and that they shall be divided into two kingdoms no more at all. Neither shall they any more defile themselves with any of their transgressions. The everlasting covenant shall be made with them, and God will be their God, and they shall be his people. And the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them for ever more.

Amos ix. 14, 15. And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them, and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their own land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God.

In this passage we have the same gathering of Israel, the same prosperity, and the assurance that they shall no more be pulled up out of their land, which the Lord had given them. This will be fulfilled when the Lord comes to reign over the house of Jacob. "They shall build houses and inhabit them, and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. Isa. lxv. 17, 25. This is in the new earth. James, in referring to this passage, says, God at the first did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name. And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written. After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down, and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up, that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called." The sense of this passage seems to be this. The Lord is now taking out of the Gentiles a people for his name. After this work is accomplished, the Lord will return, to sit upon the throne of his father David, and to reign over the house of Jacob forever; and finding the land of Israel desolate, and in ruins, and his people scattered among all nations, he first gathers his people to their own land, makes the everlasting covenant with them, and then establishes them in their land of Israel. He will then cause the tabernacle of David to be built, and the ruined and waste places to be built up, and restore again the Kingdom to Israel, that all men might seek after the Lord.

James application of the passage in Amos, to the times of the Gentiles, and to the return of the Lord to restore the kingdom to Israel, limits all the testimony I have introduced, to a future coming of the Lord, and to a future gathering of the people of Israel, who are now scattered among all nations, to their own land, that he may reign and prosper. I will quote two passages from the New Testament to show that the application made of the testimony which I have introduced is correct.

Luke i. 32, 33. The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever.

Matt. xix. 28. Peter said, we have left all and followed thee, what shall we have therefore. And Jesus said unto them, "Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

As the faith which was once delivered to the saints, and the promise made of God unto the fathers, and the gospel which was preached to Abraham, include all the details of that faith, and that promise, and that gospel, so the promise that Christ shall sit upon the throne of David, and reign over the house of Jacob forever, and the promise that the twelve Apostles shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel, include all that has been said upon those subjects which is necessary to their fulfillment. If Christ is in heaven, he must come again; if the Apostles are dead, they must be made alive; if the twelve tribes of Israel are scattered abroad, they must be gathered; if the tabernacle of David is broken down, it must be set up. Whatever events or conditions are necessary to produce the house of Jacob, in the land in which their fathers have dwelt, are contained in the promises made to Christ and the twelve Apostles. The fulfillment of these promises will restore the kingdom to Israel.

HE WILL THEN EXECUTE JUDGMENT AND JUSTICE IN THE EARTH.

"He shall reign and prosper, and execute judgment and justice in the earth." "He shall bless them that bless Abraham, and curse him that curseth Abraham." "He shall judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth." "He shall judge the poor of the people, and shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor." "In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth, and his enemies shall lick the dust." "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth, even for ever." "He must reign till all things are subdued unto God that God may be all in all." "All nations shall come and worship before him, for his judgments are made manifest." Such an administration will secure a prosperous reign.

In conclusion let me ask. Have the following events transpired since the destruction of Jerusalem? or at that time?

Has the Lord come to reign on the throne of David, over the house of Jacob for ever?

Have the saints been raised from the dead to sit down with him in his throne?

Have the children of Israel been gathered out of all countries and brought into their own land?

Has the new covenant been made with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah?

Has the kingdom been restored to Israel?

Do they dwell in the land in which their fathers have dwelt, they and their children, and their children's children for ever?

Have Israel and Judah been made one kingdom upon the mountains of Israel, to be divided into two kingdoms no more at all? Has Christ been king over them?

Have the heathen known that God's tabernacle and sanctuary have been in the midst of them for ever more?

Have the heathen known that the land that was desolate has become as the garden of Eden, and that the wastes have been builded?

Have the adversaries of Judah been cut off?

Have judgment and justice been executed among the nations?

Has a king reigned and prospered as is affirmed in our text?

Then let us wait, and hope, and pray, "That thy kingdom may come and thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven." JOEL A. SIMONDS.

The Heavenly Wonder.

That "Chariot of God" noticed in the Chicago Inter-Ocean, and supposed to have passed nearly over Jacksonville, is shown by its direction here to have entered our continent not far from Astoria, on the Pacific, and passed over the Atlantic not far from New York City. Consequently its height, according to the observation at Jacksonville, must have been nearly six hundred miles above the earth. The descriptions given of it are as variable as they are numerous, much depending upon the standpoint of observation.

I give the description of an intelligent observer who saw it from its first appearance in the West to its final disappearance in the East. He describes its form as that of a vast ship with a long V-shaped prow, the whole composed of a net work of exceedingly brilliant stars sailing sublimely through the sky, as a vessel upon a calm sea. Some say it was composed of twenty, thirty or more balls of fire, but our observer says hundreds.

In about a minute—some say several minutes—rumbling, thumping noises succeeded, resembling that of a train of cars bounding along on the ties. Houses being lighted at the time of its passing, but few had the pleasure of witnessing the grand and awful phenomenon. Many heard the noise, and those having horses stabled ran in haste to their barns, supposing their horses were kicking the boards from the barns. Buildings were jarred, and windows clattered. Some say the ground trembled.

Its direction toward the Holy City, adds interest to the heavenly phenomenon.

Many observers suppose that an explosion took place as it passed nearly out of sight, but the clattering, continuous noise, which, from its great height would require many seconds, or even minutes, to reach us, was the occasion of that deception.

I understand that meteors are unorganized bodies, single in their composition, and belonging to our atmosphere, which is at most not over forty-five miles in depth.

The lapse of time between its passage and the report shows conclusively that it was far beyond our atmosphere.

The wise of this world may give a satisfactory solution of that heavenly wonder, and had our modern philosophers seen Elijah go up in his chariot of fire, they would explain the phenomenon to the satisfaction of their adherents.

"The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels. The Lord is among them as in Sinai." And since the world has been favored with a sight of one of his chariots, it is not improbable that more of them may be seen—perhaps in the display of those "fearful sights and great signs from heaven," which follow the placing of the "abomination that maketh desolate" "in the holy place," "in the midst of the week," and immediately preceding the coming of the Son of Man. O. T. HOBBS.

The great French publishing house of Firmin Didot, which dates back into the seventeenth century, has 250 female compositors, and its collection of Greek classics has been entirely set up by them.

Sententious Paragraphs.

Benevolence is a law of the universe, and is one of the grandest and most distinct characteristics of the gospel. Its fountain-head is in the bosom of the Deity. "God so loved the world that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." And the Son of God said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." This declaration, this law, is absolute—it appeals to all, men, angels; and to God himself it is more blessed to give than it is to receive. This blessedness can never be experienced by the covetous soul, for it is "the liberal soul that shall be made fat," and "there is a withholding more than is meet and it tendeth to poverty."

If we would have powerful minds we must think; if we would have faithful hearts we must love; if we would have strong muscles we must labor. These include all that is valuable in this life.

Of all the riches that we hug, of all the pleasures we enjoy, we can carry no more out of this world than out of a dream.—Bonnel.

Look into the life and temper of Christ described and illustrated in the gospel, and search whether you can find anything like it in your own life. Have you anything of his humility, meekness and benevolence to men? Anything of his purity and wisdom, his contempt of the world, his patience, his fortitude, his zeal?—Doddridge.

There is a great deal of preaching which resembles that of the angel of the church of the Laodiceans. It is neither cold nor hot,—it is not even warm,—it is lukewarm. If it were too cold it might be intellectual; if it were too hot it might be redeemed by its emotional mesmerism; but it has none of the merits that believe in these two extremes, nor any that belong to any mean between them, and is therefore extremely unsatisfactory.

Oh! the heinousness of many of our thoughts! How few would be willing to have a glass placed on the forehead through which all the most inmost thoughts could be read. We fear to have them known to man. God knows them all.

Spare moments are the gold dust of time; and Young was writing a true as well as a striking line, when he taught that "dauds make the mountain, and moments make the year." Of all the portions of our life, spare moments are the most fruitful in good or evil. They are the gaps through which temptations find the easiest access to the garden of the soul.

Those who see a great lack of charity in others seldom have any to spare themselves. Their cloak would not come half way down.

The man who degrades his friends to win his enemies will not have many friends in a few years. There are few friends who will stick as close as a brother under such treatment; and any enemy will laugh in his sleeve at such silliness.

The great distinction between the religion revealed in the gospel and all other religions known to the world is that it comes as precious balm to the broken-hearted.

Those who quit their proper character to assume what does not belong to them are, for the greater part, ignorant both of the character they leave and of the character they assume.—Burke.

A man who shows no defect is a fool or a hypocrite, whom we should mistrust. There are defects so bound to the qualities that they announce them—defects which it is well not to correct.—Joubert.

Cheerfulness is always to be kept up, if a man is out of pain; but mirth, to a prudent man, should always be accidental. It should naturally arise out of the occasion, and the occasion seldom laid for it.—Steele.

Baron Von Mandorf, the responsible editor of the Ultramontane Austrian journal, the Vater Land, has been sentenced to four months' imprisonment and a fine of 500 florins for publishing an article abusive of the Jews of Austria, and declaring them the cause of all the misfortunes of the country, and asking why they were allowed the right of suffrage.

The Restitution.

E. A. WHAYLAN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JAN. 21, 1877.

To Our Subscribers.

It has been decided to omit two numbers of the RESTITUTION in 1877. This will give each subscriber fifty numbers instead of fifty two, as heretofore. It was thought, that, in view of a pressure of business, and as a matter of economy, this would be our best course. Our brethren will, without doubt, approve of this course when we inform them that it is the very best we can do under existing circumstances. The next number will be issued on the 14th of February, and regularly thereafter.

BY ORDER OF THE DIRECTORS.

☞Brother Reed has sold his interest in The Farmer's Monthly, and will hereafter give his entire attention to the proclamation of the Word.

☞The wedding:—On Sunday, Jan. 14, 1877, we had the pleasure of solemnizing the marriage of Brother L. W. Carey, and Sister Cynthia Measlmore. Most of the members of the little band of believers, with whom our esteemed sister had met and worshipped, were present to witness the celebration of the nuptials. We improved the occasion in addressing them for a short time on the transitory nature of this present world, and the importance of setting our affections upon the things of the glorious and enduring future. The little band united in singing several selected and beautiful hymns, after which we united our brother and sister in Christ in the bonds of wedlock. An interesting letter from Brother Carey was given in the paper of Jan 3. On Monday they started for their distant home in Iowa. We much regret to lose the society of our sister from her old home and church. We trust, however, that she will labor jointly with her companion for the promotion of the cause of Christ in her new and distant home. May God's blessing attend them.

☞We give an article on the great Pyramid this week, furnished by Brother A. B. Musgrave, which we hope will prove interesting to our readers. We have no copies of the paper containing the long article on the same subject published nearly two years ago. An article in this number from Brother Simonds on Christ's reign being in the future, is well calculated to place this matter in its proper light, as presented in the Scriptures, before all inquiring minds. A brother has asked for something on the Sabbath question; we hope Brother Stephenson's article will meet his wishes on this topic. We are attending to all business matters, and placing everything on book, the mailing list and receipt columns, as fast as possible. Some two or three brethren have forwarded some extra help for the RESTITUTION, in order to clear it from indebtedness, for which they have the thanks of the Association. This burden must not be borne by the few; but let it be distributed and it will be light and hardly felt. We find on return from an interesting meeting at Argos, that our paper is nearly full, and therefore leave unsaid several things that we thought of presenting this week. The signs of the times are indicative of a rapidly approaching crisis. Let us live right, prevent the truth in love, and prepare to meet our Lord. Our readers are desirous of articles of a practical nature, illustrating the Christian life. Will not some of our good brethren write on these themes? The subject of prophecy as unfolded in the history of the world is too much neglected. We want a greater variety. Man become tired of the same thing all the time in every paper. If we can, we will try to furnish an article giving a little variety if nothing more in our next.

Meetings at Argos.

Editor Restitution:—Our meetings, of which mention was made last week, closed last Friday night. The interest was excellent, and increased until the close. There were twenty-six additions to the congregation. In some cases whole families became believers in the gospel of the kingdom of God. Our brethren feel much strengthened, and are working in earnest for the spread of truth. May the truth prosper, is our earnest desire. During our meeting we delivered sixteen discourses upon the great themes of life and immortality. A goodly number have become deeply interested in the things of the kingdom and reign of Christ. More anon.

Your Brother, H. V. HIRD.

Stephenson on the Sabbath Question.

The Sabbath question has wrought its way to the attention of very many people in the United States, so that a goodly number are honoring the true "Lord's day," turning from the traditions of man to the worship of God according to his own appointed ways.

We clip the foregoing from the Sabbath Advocate of Oct. 17th. There are two perversions of Scripture in the foregoing extract:

1. The Lord's day is not the seventh day of the week, but the thousand years, or day of the Lord to which John was carried in vision. Rev. i. 9, 10; 2 Peter iii. 8, 10; 2 Thess. v. 2; Rev. xx. 4, 5, 6.

According to the first quotation John was in the kingdom and in the day of the Lord, in the same sense, viz, in vision. According to the second quotation, "One day with the Lord," and "the day of the Lord" are used synonymously. The definite adjective "the" in the tenth verse refers back to the day spoken of in the eighth verse. The third quotation represents "the day of the Lord" as being ushered in at the close of the present dispensation. The fourth quotation defines the time and duration of the day of the Lord, i. e., beginning with the first resurrection and ending with one thousand years.

This is the day which God has appointed for his Son to "rule the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained." Acts xvii. 3.

Will the editor of the Advocate follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of. 2 Peter ii. 2. The Gospel is the only way Christ has appointed of faith, right eousness and salvation in this dispensation. Rom. i. 16, 17; Gal. iii. 8; Mark xvi. 15, 16.

The editor of the Advocate not only fails to give my language, but misrepresents my positions. I commenced with a criticism of the assumption of Sabbatarians that the Sabbath was made for man at the creation. I call this assumption, because the bible no where says so.

The editor says, "the Advocate has repeatedly shown the giving of the Sabbath at creation, and its sanctification for man." Nothing is said about the giving of the Sabbath at creation, or its sanctification for man. Such language is not between the lids of the Bible. Christ does not say the Sabbath was made for man at the creation. This is a tradition of man. If the Sabbath was given at creation, then it must have been given to some one.

Will the editor of the Advocate give us the text in which it is affirmed that the Sabbath was given to man at creation? There is no such record. I reaffirm, and challenge my reviewer to meet the issue, that God blessed and sanctified the seventh day because he had rested that day, and not because he designed man to rest. We read, "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth * * and rested the seventh day; wherefore (for this reason) the Lord blessed the Sabbath (rest) day and hallowed it." Ex. xx. 11.

1. His blessing and sanctifying the seventh day did not make it his Sabbath, because it was his Sabbath before he blessed and sanctified it.

2. The only reason given why he blessed and sanctified the Sabbath was because he had rested that day.

The word Sabbath signifies rest. God made the seventh day his Sabbath by resting on that day, and not by requiring man to rest. But our reviewer says, "When Jesus said the Sabbath was made for man, he used the term man without any limitation, and therefore it is naturally inferred that it was made for the whole human family." Thus, the whole issue turns upon an inference. He admits that the same unlimited word man is applied to the very people whom God brought out of Egypt, and to whom he gave his holy Sabbath, Psa. lxxviii. 24; D ut. v. 24.

Thus, his premise and inferential conclusion fall together. No one denies that the Sabbath was made for man. So were the annual Sabbaths, and all the feasts for man. They were not made for angels or brutes; but when were they made for men? We will give a thus saith the Lord, when we come to the point, and not an uninspired inference.

He says that the sanctification of the seventh day because God rested on that day is lowering and depreciating the work of the Lord. Then the Lord lowered and depreciated his own work; for he gave as the only reason why he blessed and sanctified the seventh day. If it was lowering and depreciating the Sabbath to bless and sanctify it because God rested that day, what shall be said in defence of its having been sanctified for man?

But he says, "J. M. S. overlooks the definition of sanctify, to set apart for sacred use." He should have said I overlooked his definition of the word sanctify. He gives the third definition of the word. He overlooks the word hallow which is God's own explanation of what he meant by the word sanctify (Ex. xx. 11,) viz: Hallow, holy, consecrated. To all eternity the seventh day will be God's rest day. An historical fact it is changeless as God himself. God having rested the seventh day made it memorable. It is not necessary for God to repeat the work of creation every week to make the six days of the creation week memorable. No more is it necessary that he should rest every seventh day to make that day memorable. We say with our reviewer such an idea is absurd. Equally absurd is the idea that man must rest to make the seventh day memorable.

It is not enough to show that Abraham had laws to prove the existence of the Sabbath. Nor will it do to show the existence of sin. Adam sinned, and did he have the ten commandments? Cain sinned, and did he have the ten commandments? Please give us the word of God. Abram's flocks and servants would be in great danger of violating the Sabbath every week, and yet no note of warning against Sabbath breaking, no commandment to keep a day as sacred time, no reproof for Sabbath breaking. But no sooner was the Sabbath given than it was interwoven with every ordinance and institution in the Scriptures, and repeated more frequently than any other commandment, because of its frequent occurrence. Something more than the brevity of the sacred records, or the indefinite phrases, laws and commandments, is necessary to account for the absolute silence of inspiration in reference to any Sabbath for 2,500 years.

He only repeats my quotations of Ex. xvi. 4, 5, and then adds, "In this connection we fail to see the precepts by which God told the peoples' loyalty before giving them the Sabbath."

Did not God test Adam's loyalty by giving him his law? Did not God test the peoples' loyalty by commanding them to gather a certain rate every day, and twice as much the sixth day? Did he not test their loyalty by commanding them to abide in their tents and not go out, because they should find more in the fields? And were not some disloyal? And did not God give the reason why he gave them twice as much manna the sixth day? And what was that reason? Was it because he had given Adam the Sabbath 2,500 years before? Listen to the language of God, "And it came to pass that there went out some of the people on the seventh day for to gather, and they found none. And the Lord said unto Moses, how long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws? See for that the Lord hath given you the Sabbath, therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days." Ex. xxvii. 28, 29.

1. The reason God gave the children of Israel twice as much manna on the sixth day was because he had given them the Sabbath, and not because he had given it to Adam or their fathers.

2. This is the first account in the history of man in which the Sabbath is associated with him, or obligatory upon him. And this record harmonizes perfectly with the primary and only reason why God commanded man to Sabbatize. We will notice in its proper place the reason why the Sabbath was located on the seventh day. Nearly two columns having been filled in mixing and covering up my arguments from this point onward, we will reproduce them, requesting our reviewer if he should consider them worthy a reply to repeat my language at sufficient length that his readers may appreciate his replication.

We repeat that the first and only reason why God commanded the children of Israel to keep the Sabbath was because they were delivered from Egyptian bondage. We read, "And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." Deut. v. 15.

Our reviewer denies that "therefore" gives the reason why God gave the children of Israel the Sabbath. Will he give the chapter and verse where God commanded any other people to keep the Sabbath? God said, "It is a sign between me and Israel." The only reason God commanded any body to Sabbatize at all, was because he had delivered Israel from Egyptian bondage. But why did he require them to keep the seventh day instead of any other day of the week? It did not follow because they must keep a weekly Sabbath, that therefore they must keep it on the seventh day. What reason did God give why he required man to keep holy the seventh day? Answer, because he had rested on that day. But little discrimination is needed to understand the difference between the reason why God commanded the children of Israel to keep a Sabbath, viz: Because he had brought them from the house of bondage, and the reason he located that Sabbath on the seventh day. As has been abundantly proven the Sabbath was not made for man until the grand reason for its origin existed. We need no inferences to establish the origin of the Sabbath at the wilderness of Sin. "And he said unto the them, this is that which the Lord hath said, to-morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath unto the Lord. And Moses said, eat that to-day; for to-day is a Sabbath unto the Lord. Six days ye shall gather it; but in the seventh day, which is the Sabbath, ye shall find none. See for the Lord hath given you the Sabbath, therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days. Ex. xvi. 23-29.

When and where had the Lord said to-morrow is the holy Sabbath? Answer, through Moses at the wilderness of Sin. To whom did he say it? Answer, to the children of Israel, and to no other people. Why did he give them twice as much manna the sixth day? Answer, because he had given them the Sabbath. What sense is saying to that people, for see that the Lord gave Adam the Sabbath, therefore he gave you twice as much manna on the sixth day?

Will the reader please place these plain Bible statements against our friend's inference, that because the Sabbath was made for man, that therefore it was made for all mankind at creation? But not feeling satisfied with this fallible inference, he makes a special plea in favor of Christians being Israelites. But seeing that this limitation would leave Father Abraham out, whom he had affirmed had the ten commandments, he includes in this special arrangement Abraham and his seed, leaving all the rest of mankind without a Sabbath. If the Sabbath is binding upon all mankind from creation, then why this special pleading for the few who through faith and obedience have been adopted into the family of God.

Gentile Christians are not Israelites. The Gospel takes Jews and Gentiles and unites them into one new man and gives him a new name, calling him Christian. Gal. iii. 26-29. This special plea concedes the whole issue that the Sabbath was made for Israelites, and not for Gentiles. This harmonizes with Ex. xxxi. 18. J. M. S.

Exegetical.

If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. Gal. iii. 29.

The nature of our future inheritance is a subject of paramount interest. The passage above makes it plain that christians are entitled to some inheritance covenanted, or deeded to Abram. It becomes then our single purpose to search the inspired records to ascertain what our portion is, and where located, and not only this but also to look into the validity of the title. The deed is recorded in Gen. xv. 18-21, and being both short and specific we give a copy:—"In the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abraham, saying, unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates, the Kenites, and the Kenizzites, and the Kadmonites, and the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and the Rephaims, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, the Girgashites, and the Jebusites."

Covenant deeds are ratified in modern times by official seal and acknowledgement, but the ratification of this most important instrument, guaranteeing, as we shall see it does, eternal rights and immunities to a countless number of individuals, was made in the most solemn way and manner between the high contracting parties. Impressive covenants were anciently ratified as follows:—A sacrifice was first provided, its throat cut, and its blood poured out. The selected victim, or victims, was divided into two equal parts, following the direction of the spine so exactly as to divide the spinal marrow into two such equal parts, that the one half of it might remain on each side; these parts were then placed opposite to each other, and at such a distance, that the contracting parties might have sufficient room to pass between them. The contracting parties entered this passage at opposite ends, met in the middle and there took the covenant oath, then the parties were considered most firmly and sacramentally bound to carry out the covenanted stipulations. The division of the sacrificial animals also typified the two-fold character of the covenant, and the meeting, the union or alliance, of the two parties. The great scene of this solemn covenanting with Abram began in the night under the beautiful canopy of a clear oriental sky, gemmed with its countless stars; the victims were provided and carefully watched by the father of the faithful till the going down of the sun on the following day; then, when darkness again mantled the earth, Abraham's physical strength [illegible] per darkness shrouds his mind; but, at length, the grandest covenant made with man, the most far-reaching in its provisions, and involving the sublimest destinies of unborn millions, is formally ratified, the smoking symbol of the Lord God, as his representative, passed between the pieces under the semblance of a burning lamp, or rather flame of fire, through which faithful, patient, wearied Abram had passed hours before, and gave divine attestation to this wonderful contract; in other words, the heavenly deed to an inheritance was sealed. This covenant was re-published and its provisions more definitely stated, as embracing nations and kings, in Gen. xvii, where the rite of circumcision is enjoined as a seal-token of the covenant. In chap. xxii, this covenant is confirmed by the oath of Jehovah, and embraces all the nations of the earth.

Now we wish to ascertain the heirship, or to whom this inheritance of right descends. Paul, after informing us that the provisions of this covenant deed embraced the world, Rom. iv. 13, proceeds to show us in whom the title lyeseth. It is explicitly stated by him thus: "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promise made. He saith not, and to seeds as of many; but as one, and to thy seed which is Christ." He then shows us that the law did not disannul the promises which was 430 years older than the law, for were it by law that the inheritance comes then it could not be by promise—"but God gave it—the inheritance—to Abraham by promise." This settles the question of direct heirship; the title vests in Abraham and his grand heir, our Lord Jesus Christ. One single point is now to be made out;—how can any others rightfully inherit any share of this estate? The apostle answers this, to us, most important question. "And if children then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." Rom. viii. 17. God has arranged that all his children shall be treated as joint heirs to the estate deeded to Abraham and his great royal heir, the Christ. We now come to the question as to who are children, and the text we placed at the head of our article answers—"And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." The final question now is, "how do we become the children of God, and heirs of his promises in Christ?" "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."

God then has made a covenant deed to give to Abraham, and to Jesus Christ, who is both the Son of God and the son of Abraham,—hence heir in every sense of the word—the whole land of Canaan in the narrow acceptation of the covenant promise, and the world in its wider limitations. Psa. ii. 8; lxxii. 8. Christ never promised his followers an inheritance in any other part of God's universe. "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth," is his own positive declaration. In the prophets, in the Psalms, in the gospel, and in the writings of inspired apostles, there is no other inheritance pledged to the children of God. God did not make out a deed of heaven to Christ, as Israel heir both to himself and Abraham, but he did deed and promise the earthly territory; hence the joint heirs have no right and title to an undeeded heaven. Hence the grand and glorious visions of the earlier and later prophets embrace a re-genesis of this our earth, at the "restitution of all things"—a new heaven and a new earth, in which dwelleth righteousness—or righteous persons.

This renewed state of things is the heavenly country that Abraham and the ancient worthies desired; and they died in faith of finally coming into possession of it as a promised inheritance. Heb. xi. 13-16.

Genuine faith has respect to something God has promised. Abraham and the saints of old believed God, and therefore pleased him. Now we say in all kindness to our friends of the differently organized denominations of our own times, who are singing about "reading a title clear to mansions in the skies," will you for your own sake, examine the inspired books for the record and ratification of this supposed title.

We set up the claim to be of the Abrahamic faith; and we have, in this exegetical communication, kindly endeavored to give you a reason of the hope that is in us with meekness and fear. God studied the covenant deed made with Abraham and Christ, and embracing all that are Christ's as joint heirs, in the most solemn, circumstantial, ceremonial, and sacramental manner. He binds himself both by promise and oath to fulfill it. The ancient worthies sojourned as pilgrims and strangers in the very land promised, in its present condition under the curse, and died in the faith and hope of inheriting it in the heavenly renewed state—and will a God of truth and righteousness, who cannot lie, disappoint their sublime confidence in his covenanted promise! never! no never! Is the title to a home in heaven should not be found among the things recorded as something covenanted and ratified, and thus not be among the things that are "be clearly read," would it not be far better to embrace the Abrahamic faith and be baptized into Christ and thus become Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise? The Days of Noah.

"As it was in the days of Noah," when once the long-suffering of God waited a hundred and twenty years for the preparation of the ark, the time of rain came. The sin of the world was ripe for judgment. The cup of their iniquity was full. Divine patience, grieved by the continued and increasing licentiousness of mankind, returned to the court of heaven, and wrath came forth wrapped in a misty cloud and armed with thunderbolts, to avenge the insulted majesty of God. His footsteps shook the earth, and broke up the seated fountains of internal seas; his voice reverberated through the sky, and opened the windows of heaven. The teeming clouds emptied their buckets on the mountains; the swelling tide covered the plains. Waters met waters, rushing swelling, rising, and cleaving mass and beast from steep to higher steep, and swallowing up all that had life, until the highest hills were covered, and none remained but Noah and those who were with him in the ark. It was a fearful doom to the ungodly of that age, and a warning to all who, in every subsequent age, have lived ungodly; it is a warning to this aged. It foretasts another day of wrath; for "so shall the coming of the Son of Man be."—Selected.

The University of Oxford sent an expert to examine the collection of Hebrew manuscripts collected from Karaite synagogues in Egypt and Mesopotamia for the Imperial Library of St. Petersburgh, and he reports that the manuscripts are of the greatest value, and contain older texts of the Hebrew Bible than any heretofore known.

Four wars within the last fifteen years have cost Great Britain upward of £16,000,000 sterling. The Persian expedition cost £800,000. The outlay on the Chinese war amounted to £3,114,000. The New Zealand war, which did not extend beyond the year 1866, was covered by £705,000; and the Abyssinian war entailed the expenditure of £3,000,000 or £9,000,000.

The number of pilgrims who assembled last year at Mecca, is stated to have been 140,000. Of these 40,000 were conveyed by sea, and the remainder by caravans across the continent. The whole number is below the average of former years, the falling off being accounted for by the French government having forbidden the pilgrimage from Algiers, in consequence of the prevalence of cholera in Syria.

Referring to the extraordinary storms lat prevailed lately in Spain and Portugal, the Manchester Guardian says: "For nine days a pall of black cloud hung over Madrid, and the darkness by day was like the darkness of night, and the rain poured in torrents night and day. On the coast and in the interior the storm raged with a violence almost without parallel. From Lisbon accounts of the same tenor have been received."

A London correspondent states that the first fruits of Mr. Bassan's mission to the East have already been received in England. They include two brass plates which represent the figures of tribute bearers to an Assyrian king, probably Shalmanuser. One of these, about twelve inches by four, shows the figures of a one thirteen men, Tyrians and Sidonians, as they are called in the cuneiform legend of the plate, but almost certainly including Jews, laden with skins of the wine of Aleppo, with baskets or cases of fruit and flowers, while two of them in the middle are the bearers of trays on which figots of bullion are placed. The other plate is chiefly occupied with about twenty-four figures, who march in couples, while each pair of couples support a cedar of Lebanon.

A writer estimates the total cost to France of the war with Germany at ten milliards of francs, (about $2,000,000,000); the war indemnity alone was five milliards of francs ($1,000,000,000); the war contributions of Paris, two hundred millions of francs; requisitions in other departments, over three hundred millions. And all this besides the hundreds of thousands of men's lives destroyed, women and children made widows and orphans, and the horrors of the communism of Paris following this almost motiveless war.

A New Year's Hymn.

As shadows, cast by cloud and sun,
Flit over the summer grass,
So in Thy sight, Almighty One,
Earth's generations pass.

And while the years, an endless host,
Come in—sing swiftly on,
The brightest names that earth can boast
Just gild—ish, and are gone.

Yet doth the Star of Beth'lem shed
A lit—re pure and sweet;
And still it leads, as once it led,
To the Mes—iah's feet.

O Father! may that holy star
Grow every year more bright,
And send its glorious beams afar
To fill the world with light.

Correspondence.

Editor Restitution:—I appeal to you and said, of the brethren as are competent, to give us a series of articles on the authenticity of the Bible. Not that I am doubting the Scriptures, but as it was in the days of Noah, I am surrounded by a wicked and perverse generation. Many are assailing the Bible, and are calling on the clergy of the land to defend it. The only reply of the clergy is, that they consider it degrading for them to discuss with men who deny the Bible. But so far as I am concerned, I consider it a fair question, and so far as it is possible, I shall defend it at my earliest opportunity, to the best of my ability; and I now call on my brethren to assist me by writing a few articles on the subject. Among the many questions I am called upon to discuss, this is the last; and when I am deprived of access to the Bible for proof, and not having all the history I should like, I appeal to my brethren for help.

Your brother,
G. W. SMITH.

Emporia, Kan.

Editor Restitution:—I would like to give the brethren scattered abroad a short account of our meeting that held over the 3d and 4th Sundays in October, as noticed through the RESTITUTION. Brother Kinney was on hand on Sunday, punctual as usual. Brother Pierson of Mo. was sick. Brother Clever was not heard from, Brother T. E. Adams's health being poor, he did not get there till Thursday night. After that time those present spoke alternately.

I would like to give you a synopsis of their discourses, but space forbids, except to say that they were in exulting,—drew in large audiences. Preaching was continued each night, the second house being occupied in the day. On the following Saturday, nine persons demanded baptism, of whom seven lived in the immediate vicinity, and two were from a distance, one of these being Truman Cunningham of Claud county, and the other, Pamelia T. Wright of Atchison City, who owes a part of her knowledge of the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, to the columns of the RESTITUTION. The meeting closed the night of the 23d, with much interest. Yes we might give more good news; several more persons were almost persuaded to turn their backs upon the world, and follow Him that is Heir of the world to come—who offers a crown and a kingdom.

Yours in love,
J. P. BIRXEN.

Christian Conversion.—No. 4.

The gospel had been preached in Jerusalem and Judea. Samaria is to be taken next. Acts i. 8. But the apostles and disciples were so attached to one another, they preferred to remain together at Jerusalem. People had to come from the surrounding cities to Jerusalem to hear the gospel. A terrible persecution broke them up and scattered them abroad, and they "went everywhere preaching the word." Philip, one of the seven deacons, went to Samaria, "and preached Christ unto them."

"When they believed Philip, preaching the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." Chapter viii. 12.

This is the standard text of illiberalists to prove that conversion is spurious if baptism does not follow a distinct and correct perception, and belief of the organic elements and achievements of the Messiah's kingdom in the age to come.

Does it necessarily, or fairly, serve that purpose?

If not necessarily, those who so use it, are doing a terrible wrong and inviting upon themselves a fearful curse by the schism they force on its authority.

If not fairly, they wrest the Scripture. Then—

1. Who "believed Philip?" Answer: "The people with one accord." Verse 6. "They all from the least to the greatest," in verse 10, is the antecedent to "they," in verse 12. Is it likely that all the Samaritans, from the least to the greatest understood the age to come kingdom as these brethren claim is necessary? That would be a miraculous understanding. We have no account that God ever wrought such a miracle, there or elsewhere.

2. Jesus never preached the kingdom these brethren do. The apostles had not preached it so, and there is nothing to show that they understood it so. The Jews did not understand it so; they understood the Messiah's kingdom to be a temporal power, very much like that of the Romans, and then about to supplant the Roman. They knew not "the voices of their prophets." Acts xiii. 27. How did these Samaritan children get so much better understanding of the Messiah's kingdom in the future age, than anybody else had in those times?

3. None of our brethren claim to understand the kingdom any to well, though some of them have made it a special study for thirty years; yet they insist that every convert, however young or ignorant, shall understand it as well as they do.

4. You will hardly find two of these ultra brethren whose views of the kingdom are alike in all particulars. All know this to be a fact. The condition is obvious.

5. "Righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost," (Rom. xiv. 17,) are "things concerning the kingdom of God." These the Samaritan children could understand. These Jesus preached more than anything else, and the apostles understood better than anything else. Philip's miracles did more than his teaching. These also concerned the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, showing its beneficence, and his power.

Peter and John returned to Jerusalem. Philip went toward the south, and intercepted a man who seems to have been prime minister of Queen Candace of the Ethiopians. He was reading the 53d chapter of Isaiah; and knew so little of the Jewish Scriptures that he thought the prophet spoke of himself or of some other man of that time whom the prophet knew. Philip preached Jesus to him from that chapter, as they rode together a short distance. The Eunuch, seeing water, requested baptism. Philip said it was his privilege if he believed with all his heart. The Eunuch answered, "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." That was sufficient. Philip baptized him. The Spirit was satisfied with that conversion, for it hurried Philip away to other work; and the Eunuch went his way rejoicing.

Here is the same promptness, and less probable knowledge of the kingdom future, than in the other cases. But the Eunuch made the same profession of faith that Peter did. (Matt. xvi. 16:) "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." That satisfied Jesus, and this the Holy Spirit, but it does not satisfy our brethren. God grant them more humility and more faith. They are in more need of the charity that edifies, than of the knowledge that puffs up.

Their kingdom condition is indefinite and impracticable; nobody knows when he has complied with it, and many cannot comprehend it. Hence it is an endless source of annoyance to the timid and scrupulous who respect it, and of spiritual pride to those who exalt it over other men's consciences. We have no right to block up the way of salvation with our "forbids."

The "age to come" has been perverted and degraded to schismatic uses. It came into quite general acceptance among our people in the whole country outside of New England, about twenty-five years ago, when I was in the Harbinger office at Rochester, N. Y. It was not a test of fellowship among us any more than it is and always has been among the English Millenarians of the Episcopal Church. After awhile John Thomas and a few others, run wild on the subject, and made it the Alpha and Omega of their religion. They have drawn many into their preternatural blaze, like moths into a night fire.

Please remember that the Jews killed the King in their zeal for the kingdom. I fear some of our good brethren do so now. Not that I love the kingdom less, but that I love the king more. Paint the kingdom in the brightest colors you can. Let it heaven the nations till it fills the earth with righteousness. Put in it all the power and on it all the adorning of the prophets. Still Jesus is greater and better than his kingdom. He will make the kingdom.

Now, dear brethren, do let us try to preach as Jesus did, and as his apostles did. Jesus, and his resurrection, and his kingdom; he's cradle, cross and crown,—and not forget that nothing is of value in the Christian system that is not sanctified by the love of God. O that we may get down into the sweet power of Jesus' new commandment; "That ye love one another."

Baptism.

BY O. H. MYERS.

Baptism became a religious ordinance by divine authority in the day of John the Baptist as is supposed A. D. 30. It appears to have been engrafted on to the Mosaical institution of religion, sustaining to that institution about the same relation that a codicil does to a will. It was incorporated by Jesus of Nazareth into his system of religion and there, to those who become his followers as the following Scriptures show was by them to be observed as

A COMMAND.

"Go ye therefore, and teach (Matthew—disciple) all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." Matt. xxviii. 19.

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Mark. xvi. 15-16.

"Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Acts ii. 38.

"Then answered Peter, can any man forbid water that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Spirit as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." Acts x. 46-48.

A re-reading of the above Scriptures in connection with the following list which we give, will aid us greatly in settling the very important question which is now occupying much attention,

WHO ARE COMMANDED TO BE BAPTIZED?

The first Scripture given above shows that it was those those who were taught. The second shows us that it were those who heard and believed the proclamation of the Gospel.

The third in connection with its context belongs to our view that it was those who had heard and did believe Peter's discourse.

And likewise the fourth teaches us that it was those who heard and believed Peter's words, see Acts x. 5, 6, 32, 33, 34, 43. We add,

"But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women," (no children.) Acts viii. 12.

"Then Simon himself believed also; and when he was baptized he continued with Philip." Ver. 13.

"And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water; and the eunuch said, see, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest." Ver. 37.

Further, the Philippian Jailor's household were all baptized because they all believed in Christ. Acts xvi. 20. Lydia's household were all baptized because they were old enough to be brethren. Acts xvi. 40. Stephanas' household were all baptized because they all were old enough to enter into the ministry. 1 Cor. xvi. 15.

But after this much has been said upon this subject another very important significant question arises, which is,

FOR WHAT ARE PERSONS TO BE BAPTIZED?

We answer,

1. To become disciples:—"Go ye therefore, and teach (Matthew—disciple) all nations, (how) baptizing in (eis—into) the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." Matt. xxviii. 19.

2. To be saved:—"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Mark xvi. 16.

3. For the remission of sins:—"John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." Mark i. 4. "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Acts ii. 38.

4. To wash away sins:—(Not by the water of baptism, but by the blood of Christ,) "And now why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Acts xxii. 16.

5. For the answer of a good conscience:—"The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." 1 Peter iii. 2.

6. To get into Christ:—"For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Gal. iii. 27.

7. To reach the death of Christ where his blood may be found:—"Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death." Rom. vi. 3.

Preach the Word.

"Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine." 2 Tim. iv. 2.

The apostle Paul, knowing the extent of Timothy's knowledge of the Scriptures—having known them from childhood—he answers him, that they are able to make him wise unto salvation, for they are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect thoroughly furnished unto all good works. He also knew Timothy's unswerving diligence in behalf of the Gospel. Whom among all his brethren could he select more competent to fill his place, than his own son in the faith? Hence he gave him this charge a short time before he was offered upon the Roman block. What was it that so interested the mind of the apostle, as to call forth this strict injunction? His reason was this: "The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears. And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and be turned unto fables."

Such was the prophetic utterance of the apostle Paul, concerning the future degeneracy of the church, and the general darkness that would prevail in the minds of the people at that time. The fulfillment of this prediction, was to be accompanied by a period of unparalleled wickedness, manifested in every conceivable manner, as the same apostle in the preceding chapter, narrates in detail.

Would that every sceptic in our land could be induced to read these two chapters carefully, and compare them with the present state of affairs, we thinks this alone ought to be sufficient to convince any reasonable mind of the divinity of the Bible.

Rome, once the Mistress of the world, only sought to blind men, to her abominations, and any departure from her iron will, and the subject received the most cruel punishment. Even then, in the dark days of Papal dominion, man sought to be free. And not a few ventured to look into the perfect law of liberty, and drank deep from the well of knowledge in Christ, though it cost them their lives. We see the same spirit manifested to day in the bosoms of her various daughters. Professing as they do, to be the followers, of Jesus, they have unfaltered his spirit and inhaled the impure breathing of their sin-polluted Mother. To bind the understanding and keep men in darkness upon the truths of the Bible, is but to build myriads of individuals in their rooks. Hence the cause of Christ is hindered, and that too often by designing men. Any growth in the knowledge of Truth is usually followed by the cry of Heresy. Methinks it often needs but a breath to fan a flame, that would sweep from our land, every layer of Truth. Infidelity is but the outgrowth of this babble of tongues, which has long endeavored to drown these words of the apostle: "Preach the word."

I would that this word could be sounded as with a trumpet voice, to the sleeping millions, who are dreaming only of peace and safety. Many among that number love the light, but the veil has never been removed from their eyes, for their ears have never been saluted by the sounds of the grand old gospel of the kingdom of God. "Come out of my people," is the solemn warning given by the Spirit of God. "That ye partake not of her sins and receive not her plagues."

Dear Brethren, you who have given yourselves to the ministry of the Word, think not that this dying charge of the apostle Paul, is confined to a Timothy; but watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of Evangelists, make full proof of thy ministry; for soon the last opportunity will be given you in this age of telling the glad tidings to a wicked and rebellious race. The last King and Priest will soon have been gathered, and the door of admission thereto will be forever closed.

Would that each member of the Church of God could but realize the high position they occupy even now, and resolve, if possible, to be the means of bringing one individual into the Body of Christ. They would "save a soul from death, and hide a multitude of sins." Is there any time to grow weary, when the reward is so sure and so soon? Even should we fall in death. Have we any time to dully over unlearned questions? which seem only to chafe the good feelings of brethren. However, a growth in knowledge is necessary to a growth in grace, so let us investigate together, but let brotherly love continue. Oh, let nothing mar the general harmony of that select Body, who is soon to take upon herself the nature of her immortal spouse, and wear a crown upon her brow more brilliant than all the diadems of earth. And with Him enter upon the glorious coronation of the world.

SALLIE BLACK.

Eufaula Ala., Dec. 25, 1876.

Leonard Harper Johnson, of Virginia, has devised a new religion, based on a new Bible of his own composition. This pretended revelation of divine will constitutes him a high priest with a right to claim one-tenth of the income of his followers, and to have as many wives as he can get. He has secured three wives, but no other followers as yet, although he preaches his doctrines eloquently.

THE OLDEST AND THE BEST.—These are the claims which the publishers of the New York Observer make for their paper in their prospectus of the fifty-fifth volume. And, while history bears them out in the fact, an unadvisable course in sending out a large, 10 page, double, readable family newspaper, gives them at least a right to the second. In the great multitude of papers that are published, the Observer holds its own position, and an enviable position it is. No paper reaches us that we can recommend more heartily. It is published at $3 a year, post paid, and the premium pictures and chromo lithographs are left for those who have nothing better to offer. R. L. Pelton & Co., 37 Park Row, New York.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

There will be a quarterly meeting of the Church of God, to be held with us in Frederick county, Maryland, to-wit:—Saturday, Friday night before the second Monday in February, 1877. All of the One Faith, One Lord, One Baptism, in the one only name of Jesus Christ, and all those who believe the truth, are respectfully invited to attend.

S. J. MORRAY.

The first quarterly conference will meet on Friday night, the 26th of January, 1877, at 7 o'clock P. M. at what is known as the Hooker school house, on East Indian river, Carroll county, Ill., to continue over Sunday. A general invitation is given to all who wish to attend.

By order of the conference.

J. B. ARNOLD, Pres.

Valuable English Works.

Our readers are informed that we expect shortly to have for sale the works mentioned below. Orders and remittances for the same may be sent at once to this office.

Discussion on the Nature of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Bradnack, Congregational minister, and W. Reilloway, editor of Elder Echo, and minister of the Gospel. Both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a literal, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by W. C. B. 2. That the Scriptures teach that men in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever, and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth, jewelled bands, well bound, 350 pages large. Paper cover, 300 pages large.

Doctrine and Duties of Future Punishment. By Rev. H. Constable, M. A. Late Prebendary of Cork, Ireland, 320 pp. An elaborate argument touching the punishment of the unsaved. It is particularly due to its philological chapters respecting the meaning of the Greek words used by the inspired writers to indicate the doom of the lost. Price $1.25; postage 10c.

"We hail this book with lively satisfaction. Undoubtedly the subject which it treats with such an attractive combination of learning and theology, of power and reverence, the fall flesh of the minds of many of the most thoughtful Christian men of our day. Its growth, for as a pamphlet in the first edition to handsome volume of three hundred and thirty pages in the fourth, is conclusive proof that the question aroused is one of profound importance.—We must add the compliment the publishers on the tasteful and handsome dress in which they present the book to the public, and express the hope that the necessary outlay will speedily be much more than recovered by the large sale of a work which must take a standard place in this painfully difficult controversial department of Christian theology."—The Rainbow.

Hades; or, The Intermediate State of Man. Crown 8vo, 2d edition. Price $1.25; post free 1.35.

This work presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection.

"Mr. Constable has, in a series of works, devoted much labor and research to make Bibles from Scripture and other sources the real nature of the future state; and the present book is the result of his more exhaustive labors on one special point. His argument is supported by no little learning, is keen logic, and a clear and available style. There is a good deal to be said for the general doctrines propounded."—Newcastle.

"It is characterized by his usual vigor of thought and clearness of expression. To all sincere lovers of truth, rather than of creeds, we cordially commend the treatise."—The Church Messenger.

Herald's Law. Volume I., May to December, edited by W. Kellaway. The only English weekly that advocates the ancient doctrines. Bound volume of numbers of the Bible Echo, containing important papers and discussions on vital matters, and the whole completing the spread of the scriptural doctrine of immortality. Pp. 424. $4.50.

Bible Echo. Vol. III., July to September, 1876. "This completes the Bible Echo as a weekly publication, and will be found to be complete. Price $1.50.

Bible Echo. New Series. Monthly numbers from October, 1876. The yearly subscription for this magazine, including the 3 months of last year, is 43 60.

Nine Facts Upon all Subjects. By the author of "Exquisite Words to Utter Everything." Deals in the Physician, the artist, the chemist, the engineer, the manufacturer, the mechanician, the minister, and the housekeeper. 2.0 pp. Price 30c; postage 1c.

A New Work by Mrs. H. V. Reed. Sacred Words for Sacred Readers. Nearly 700 pp. Well printed on fine y tinted paper, neatly bound in cloth. Price $2.00; postage 15c.

"This book is one of the most satisfactory of its kind that could be written. Indeed we know of no other work in the way of a volume to which we can so unreservedly commend the Bible as a revelation from God. We could be more than content, we would be proud, if all the title page have on hand instead of that of the estimable and talented lady, the authoress. Her "Bible Triumphant" was a good work and it is, we know, warmly appreciated by many; but this work is delightful, so fascinating, so exact also, it would be hard to say on where to increase still more. Everybody should possess a copy."—The Bible Echo.

"The Signs of the Times."

What if I see in harvest time
The smiling earth looking fair,
And the warm breath of summer days
Spread beauty everywhere?
Oh Lord, it is thy open hand
Which scatters plenty through the land.

The promised harvests surely come,
With gladness and with food;
And so in patience Thou dost feed
The evil and the good.
Winter and summer thus remain,
And fruits are gathered in again.

But in the joy of such a scene
Am I forget thy word,
Which promises, with sweet truth,
The coming of the Lord?
Each season brings the day more near,
When He in glory shall appear.

Till then, though harvests ripen on,
What solemn sounds I hear;
Does not a distant muttering note,
Blank darkly on the ear?
The clash of arms, the shout of war,
Bespeak that coming from afar.

The oracles of God are they,
Which tell the things to come;
To warn the thoughtless, whilst the song
Of their fresh harvest home.
Yet men go on, and bury self,
Enthralled, as by a mighty spell.

So, as I pass on field and flower,
Set in a soil-clothed hill,
And in the calmness, soft south wind,
The restless sea is stilled—
Ere evening close, the Bridegroom's voice
May bid his waiting ones rejoice.

How futile, then, the wealth and pride,
Of earthly power and power;
When sure destruction, long delayed,
Just in the final hour!
The sun may in the morning rise,
But on what ruined destinies!

Lord, may I live, freed in my heart
From all men's schemes of bliss;
Dependent for my happiness
On no such world as this!
I would not have my portion here,
Where glories fade and changes are.

Midnight in the Heart of the Great Pyramid.

We concur with the Central Presbyterian, says an exchange, in saying that we have been so interested and instructed by the perusal of Dr. Field's letter in the N. Y. Evangelist about an excursion into the heart of the Great Pyramid, that we give a large portion of it, that our readers may also be thus pleased and profited:

In recalling this memory of Egypt, my object is not merely to furnish a romantic and poetical description, but to call the attention of the most sober readers to what may well be a study and an instruction. This Pyramid was the greatest of the Seven Wonders of the world in the time of the Greeks, and it is the only one now standing on the earth. May it not be that it contains some wisdom of the ancients that is worthy the attention of the boastful moderns; some secret and sacred lore which the sciences of the present day may well study to reveal? It may be, (as Piazzi Smith argues in his learned books), that we who are now upon the earth have an inheritance in the Great Pyramid; that it was built not merely to swell the pride of the Pharaohs and to be the wonder of the Egyptians, but for our instruction, on whom the ends of the world are come. Without giving our adhesion in advance to any theory, there are certain facts clearly apparent, which give to this structure more than a monumental interest. For thousands of years it has been supposed to have been built for a royal tomb, for that and that only. So perhaps it was, and perhaps not. At any rate, a very slight observation will show that it was built also for other purposes. For example:

Observe its geographical position. It stands at the apex of the delta of the Nile, and Piazzi Smith claims, in the centre of the habitable globe! He has a map in which its point is fixed in Africa, yet between Europe and Asia, and which shows that it stands in the exact centre of the land surface of the world. This, if it be an accident, is certainly a very singular one.

Then it stands exactly on the 30th parallel of latitude, and it stands four square, its four sides facing exactly to the four points of the compass—North, South, East and West. Now the chances are a million to one that this could not occur by accident. There is no need to argue such a matter. It certainly was done by design, and shows the old Egyptians knew how to draw a meridian line and to take the points of the compass, as exactly as the astronomers of the present day.

Equally evident is it that they were able to measure the solar year, as exactly as modern astronomers. Taking the sacred cubit as the unit of measure, there are in each side of the pyramid just 365.¼ cubits, which gives not only the number of days in a year, but the six hours over.

That it was built for astronomical purposes seems probable from its very structure. Never was there such another observatory in the world. Its pinnacle is the loftiest ever placed in the air by human hands. It seems as if it were built, like the tower of Babel, that its top might 'touch heaven.' From that great height one has almost a perfect horizon, looking off upon the level valley of the Nile. Who can doubt that the priests and astrologers of Egypt often climbed to that point and there sat all night long, looking at the constellations through that clear and cloudless sky; watching Orion and the Pleiades as they rose over the Mokattam hills on the other side of the Nile, and set behind the hills of the Libyan desert.

So apparent is it that the construction of the pyramid had some reference to the stars, that Professor Proctor, when in the city last winter, argued in a lecture that it was erected for purposes of astrology.

There is another very curious fact in the pyramid, that the passage by which it is entered points directly to the North Star, and yet not to the North Star that now is, but to the Alpha Draconis, which was the North Star four thousand years ago. This is one way in which the age of the pyramid is determined, for it is found by the most exact calculations that 2,170 years before Christ, a man placed at the bottom of a well, and looking upward through the shaft, as if he were looking through the great telescope of Lord Rosse, would fix his eye exactly on the North Star—the pole around which was revolving the whole celestial sphere. As is well known, this central point of the heavens changes in the lapse of ages, but that star will come around to the same point in 25,800 years more, when, if the pyramid be still standing, the observers of that remote period can again look upward and see Alpha Draconis on his throne and mark how the stars return again to their places in the everlasting revolution of the heavens.

As to the measurement of time, all who have visited astronomical observatories know the extreme and almost infinite care taken to obtain an even temperature for clocks. The slightest increase of temperature may elongate the pendulum, and so affect the duration of a second, and this, though it be so infinitesimal a portion of time as to be almost inappreciable, yet becomes important to the accuracy of computations, when a unit has to be multiplied by hundreds of millions, as it is in calculating the distance of the heavenly bodies. To obviate this difficulty, astronomical clocks are sometimes placed in apartments under ground, closed in with thick walls, (where even the door is rarely opened, but the observations are made through a glass window,) so that it can not be affected by the variations of temperature of the outer world. But here in the heart of this mountain of stone the temperature is preserved at an absolute equilibrium, so that there is no expansion by heat and no contraction by cold. What are all the observatories of Greenwich, and Paris, and Pulkowa, to such a rockbuilt citadel as the Great Pyramid?

But not only was the pyramid designed to stand right in its position toward the earth, and the heavenly bodies; but also, and perhaps chiefly, (so argues Prof. Smith,) was it designed for metrological (not meteorological) purposes—to furnish an exact standard of weights and measures. The unit of lineal measure used in the pyramid building is found to correspond not to the English foot, nor to the French metre, but to the Hebrew cubit. This is certainly a curious coincidence, but may it not prove simply that the latter was derived from the former? Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and may have brought from the valley of the Nile weights and measures, as well as customs and laws.

But this cubit itself, wherever it came from, has some very remarkable correspondences. French and English mathematicians and astronomers have had great difficulty to fix upon an exact standard of lineal measure. Their method has been to take some length which had and exact relation to one of the unchangeable distances or spaces of the globe itself. Thus the English inch is one five hundred millionth part of the axis of the earth. But Prof. Smith finds in the great pyramid a still better standard of measure. The cubit contains twenty-five of what he calls "pyramid inches," and fifty of these are just equal to one ten millionth part of the earth's axis of rotation. He finds in the pyramid a greater wonder still in a measure for determining the distance of the earth from the sun, which is the unit for calculating the distances of the heavenly bodies. That which scientific expeditions have been sent into all parts of the earth within the last two years to determine by more accurate observations of the transit of Venus, is more exactly told in the Great Pyramid erected four thousand years ago.

It is a very fascinating study to follow this learned professor in his elaborate calculations. He seems to think the whole of the exact sciences are contained in the great pyramid. The vacant chest of red granite in the King's chamber, over which Egyptologists have puzzled so much, is to him as the very ark of the Lord. That which has been supposed to be a sarcophagus, with no other interest than as having once held a royal mummy, he holds not to be the tomb of Cheops, or of any of the kings of Egypt, but a sacred coffer intended to serve as a standard of weights and measures for all time to come. He thinks it accomplishes perfectly the arithmetical feat of squaring the circle!—the height being to the circumference of the base, as the radius is to the circumference of a circle.

But the Great Pyramid has, to Prof. Smith, more than a scientific—it has a religious interest. He is a Scotchman, and not only a man of science, but one who believes, with all the energy of his Scotch nature, in a divine revelation; and as might be supposed, he connects this monument of scientific learning with One who is the source of all wisdom and knowledge. However great may have been the wisdom of the Egyptians, he does not believe that they had a knowledge of geodesy and of astronomy greater than the most learned scientific men of our day. He has another explanation. He believes that the Great Pyramid was built by the inspiration of Him who led the Israelites out of Egypt, and who, as He shone upon their path in the desert, now shines by this lighthouse and signal tower upon the blindness and ignorance of the world. He believes that the pyramid was constructed by divine inspiration, just as much as the Jewish tabernacle; that as Moses was commanded to fashion everything according to the pattern showed him in the Mount, so some ancient king of Egypt, working under divine inspiration, builded better than he knew, and wrought into enduring stone that which he perhaps did not himself understand, but which were to be revealed in the last time, and to testify to a later generation the manifold wisdom of God. As to its age, he places it somewhere between the time of Noah and the calling of Abraham. Dr. Grant even thinks it was built before the death of Noah. But mankind could hardly have multiplied in the earth in the lifetime of even the oldest of the patriarchs, so as to be capable of building such monuments. The theory is that it was built by an Egyptian architect. There is a tradition mentioned in Herodotus, of a shepherd who came from a distant country, from the East, who had much to do with the building of the pyramid, and was regarded as a heavenly visitant and director. Prof. Smith thinks it probable that this visitor was Melchisedec! He even gives the pyramid a prophetic character, and thinks that the different passages and chambers are designed to be symbolical of the different economies through which God educates the race. The entrance at first descends. That may represent the gradual decadence of mankind to the time of the flood, or even to the call of Abraham. Then the passage begins to ascend, but slowly and painfully, which represents the Jewish dispensation, when men were struggling towards the light. After a hundred and twenty-seven feet of this stooping and creeping upward, there is a sudden enlargement, and the low passage rises up into the grand gallery, just as the Mosaic economy, after groping through many centuries, at last bursts into the full glory of the Christian dispensation.

Believing in its inspired character, he finds in every part of this wonderfull structure signs and symbols. Taking it as an emblem of Christian truth, where is the chief corner stone? Not at the base, but at the top—the apex! At the bottom, there are four stones, which are equal,—no one of which is above another—the chief corner stone therefore must be the cap stone!

It will be perceived that this is a very original and very sweeping theory; that it overturns all our ideas of the great pyramid; that it not only turns Cheops out of it, but turns science and revelation together into it. We may well hesitate before accepting it in its full extent, and yet we must acknowledge our indebtedness to Prof. Smith. He has certainly given a new interest to this honry monument of the past. Scientific men who reject his theory are still deeply interested in the facts which he brings to light, which they recognize as very extraordinary, and which show a degree of scientific knowledge which not only they did not believe to exist among the Egyptians, but which hardly exists in our day.

So much as this we may freely concede, that the pyramid has a scientific value, if not a sacred character; that it is full of the wisdom of the Egyptians, if not of the inspiration of the Almighty; and that it is a storehouse of the ancient knowledge, even if it be not the very ark of the covenant in which the holiest mysteries are enshrined.

Leaving out what may be considered fanciful in the speculations of the Scotch astronomer, there is yet much in the facts he presents worthy of the consideration of the man of science, as well as the devout attention of the student of the Bible, and which, if they are duly weighed, will at once enlarge our knowledge and strengthen our faith.

Such are the lessons we derive from even our slight acquaintance with the Great Pyramid; and so, as we looked back that night and saw it standing there in the moonlight, its "chief corner stone," pointing upwards to the clear, unclouded firmament, it seemed to point to something above the firmament—to turn our thoughts to heaven and to God.

Future Judgment.

It would seem that men, in their mad rush for wealth, fame and prosperity, have forgotten the "judgment to come." Anciently, men like Felix, "trembled" when Paul "reasoned of . . . judgment to come." Paul knew "the terror of the Lord," for he says, "We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." 2 Cor. v. 10, 11; Rom. ii. 1–11; Col. iii. 24, 25; Rev. xxii. 12. The reason the wicked man trembles in view of the "judgment to come," is that Christ will judge "with righteousness," and "reward" him "according to his works." Isa. xi. 1–5; Psa. lxxii. 1, 2, 3; Matt. xvi. 27. "The day of wrath," "day of destruction," or "day of judgment," will surely "come." Rom. ii. 5; Job xxi. 30; 2 Peter iii. 7. For God "hath appointed a day, in the which He will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom He hath ordained; whereof He hath given assurance unto all men, in that He hath raised him from the dead." Acts xvii. 31. In view of this "judgment to come," "God commandeth all men everywhere to repent." Verse 30. They should "flee from the wrath to come." Matt. iii. 7. If we are "justified by his blood," Jesus will "deliver us from the wrath to come," Rom. v. 9; 1 Thess. i. 9, 10; v. 9; Rom. i. 18; Eph. v. 5–6, Col. iii. 5, 6.

Since Christ "was ordained of God to be the judge of quick and dead," "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son," "And hath given him authority to execute judgment," (Acts x. 38–42; Jno. v. 22, 27,) let us ascertain, if possible, when this executive judge of "quick and dead," will exercise his divine prerogative. Turning to Paul's "charge" to Timothy, as solemn a charge as was ever conferred by "mortal man," we there read: "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom; preach the word." 2 Tim. iv. 1. "Behold, (says Enoch,) the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." Jude xiv. 15; Matt. xxv. 31–46. When "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ," (which will be synchronous with the "appearing" "of Jesus," 2 Tim. iv. 1,) then it will be said: "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth." Rev. xi. 15, 18.

Now, to the point. If men are not rewarded until they are "judged," and not "judged" until "the appearing and kingdom" of Jesus. Is not all future "reward" suspended upon the "appearing" of Jesus, as upon a pivot? Will not all God's children, who have "died in faith," from Abel, down to the "appearing" of Jesus, be perfected together? Heb. xi. 13, 39, 40. Will they not be "judged" and "rewarded" at the "appearing and kingdom" of Jesus? If it is "at" that time, is it possible, nay, is it not preposterous to talk about their being rewarded, prior to that time? Will the "wicked" "be punished," before "the day of judgment?" God reserves "the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." 2 Pet. ii. 9. "The day of judgment" is connected with the "perdition of ungodly men." 2 Pet. iii. 7. "Where is the house of the Prince? and where are the dwelling places of the wicked? Have ye not asked them that go by the way? and do ye not know their tokens, That the wicked are reserved to the day of destruction? They shall be brought forth to the day of wrath." Job xxi. 28–30.

Not only are wicked men, but fallen angels "reserved . . . unto the judgment of the great day." Jude 6; 2 Pet. ii. 4. "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; But know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment." Eccl. xi. 9. "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil." Eccl. xii. 13, 14. Think often of "judgment to come."

Editor Restitution:—Perhaps it would be gratifying to the brethren in other parts to learn that the congregation known as the Church of God near Severance, yet lives, and we have been refreshed by a visit from our much loved brother, J. C. Kinsey, who has just closed a meeting of days, during which we have been strengthened by his discourses upon prophecy and history. Brother Kinsey visited us last October, and continued with us over two Sundays, commencing on Saturday. He was assisted by Brother T. E. Adams. This meeting resulted in the immersion of ten persons. May we hope that they may continue steadfast in the faith, walk worthy and receive a crown of life. J. D. SMITH.

Severance, Kas.

Editor Restitution:—I am here for my health; my lungs trouble me so in Minnesota that I came to Florida to winter. My cough has nearly left me. I preach once every Sunday, and people are getting waked up to the truth. Some of the best people of this country have come out from the Methodist and Baptist churches. They say I give the best explanation of Scripture they ever heard, and they are so anxious to learn that they come to my boarding house to hear me converse on the Scriptures. I expect to return home in the spring if the Lord wills it so to be. The people of this country have never heard the doctrine of Christ's reign on the earth with his saints, in the restitution; but have supposed that mankind either went to heaven or hell when they died. When I came here one year ago, and showed them from the Bible that God had never promised to take them to heaven above, but had promised to restore all things by Christ, and to recompense the righteous in the earth, and, much more, the wicked and the sinner, they commenced to read for themselves to see if these things were so, and the result is, some of the best of the community have come out in the truth. From your brother in the One Faith.

Editor Restitution:—I have spoken to several concerning the RESTITUTION; perhaps, ere this, you may have received their subscription. We have given our copies a wide circulation. When the paper contains an extra good piece, suitable for interested persons, I shall send remittance for additional copies.

You have our prayers and best wishes for success in your new work. With Christ for your Mediator, and the love and respect of friends in the truth, you can not fail. Your essays in the two or three numbers were just to the point. I like to send them to acquaintances of inquiring minds. The people of to-day need to see their position. How little time they have for pleasure! O, may our paper remain to herald his soon coming! Be content, respected brother; you are certainly letting your light shine. Again wishing you success, and sincerely hoping your valedictory may remain unwritten—I am your sister in Christ.

Editor Restitution:—Our little meeting gets along much as of old;—quiet though still holding forth the word of life, and inviting all to come to him who came to call, not the righteous, but sinners to repentance;—urging all by the mercies of God, and by his goodness, to be reconciled to him, and, by obedience, to become heirs of his kingdom and glory. We are patiently waiting, looking, and praying for his kingdom to come. It seems that there never was a time when it was more desirable than now;—corruption everywhere, in the old world and here;—every avenue in politics blocked up by corruption, thereby paralyzing industry and commerce, and bringing want, starvation, and crime in its train. O, that the Sun of righteousness would arise with healing in his beams. Yours in the one hope. JAMES FOREMAN.

Editor Restitution:—I drop you a few lines to let you and the rest of the brethren of the One Faith, who are scattered abroad over the world, know that we are still looking for the coming of our King, who is to redeem the world from under the curse of sin and death, and make it the blessed home of all who believe in Jesus and the promises of his future reign on the earth. We are a band of brethren and sisters at Dunkirk, few in number, but rich in faith, and, as we trust, heirs of the kingdom. We should be glad to have a call from any of the brethren when they can; we will give of our means as much as we are able. May the Lord bless all our brethren and sisters, is my prayer. In hope of eternal life, yours, C. DAKIN.

Editor Restitution:—I think the two last numbers of "If the best numbers of the year. The paper is a great treasure to me, though others seem unable to appreciate it. I have been loaning and distributing nearly all that I have had, still people seem not to see the truth as the Bible teaches. I am giving the Bible my study, and believe its teachings; but my fellow beings have been taught lies so long, that they cannot discern the truth when they read it. It appears wonderfully strange that folks can't see; but they seem as blind now as when the Master was here.

We have some sixteen or seventeen different sects here in our city; but none appear to realize that Christ is to come to this earth again to rule and govern as he has promised, if I read correctly. They all think they are going to a sky-kingdom, there to stay and rule with him.

We have a Baptist preacher here, who said, when he came, that he would not preach anything unsanctified by a "Thus saith the Lord." I attended his meetings for some months. He taught the Bible mostly, and claimed that there was no future life only in Christ. He claimed that Christ was the Father, but, during all this time, he did not speak of immortal soul even once. All at once, he spoke of going up yonder to heaven, and stated that he believed that it was the mind of man that sinned, and that the mental man would be punished. I was greatly mortified by his discourse, and have not been to hear him since. There are but few here that seem to take any interest in the Bible—even so much as to read it. Of the church-goers, there are very few that have any time to talk about the Word, and all that I come across appear to think that heaven must be beyond time and space. When the Master does come, it will surely be as a thief to this city, as well as to these churches. With my best wishes. Yours very truly.

The Bengal Storm Wave.

In an area of some 3,000 square miles, out of 1,002,000 persons suddenly thrown into more or less danger, 215,000 must have perished. This, of course, is only an estimate; the exact number cannot be known yet awhile, perhaps never will be known. We found in some villages 50 per cent. of the inhabitants lost. In others 40 per cent., in some even 10 per cent. There was a severe cyclone in the Bay of Bengal on the night of the 31st of October. But it was not the wind which proved so destructive, though that was bad enough; it was the storm wave, sweeping along to the height of from ten to twenty feet, according to different localities; in some places, where it met with any resistance, it mounted even higher than that. In the evening the weather was a little windy and hazy, and had been somewhat hot; the people, a million or thereabouts of souls, retired to rest, apprehending nothing. But before 11 o'clock the wind suddenly freshened, and about midnight there arose a cry of "The water is on us," and a great wave burst over the country several feet high; it was followed by another wave, and again by a third, all three rushing rapidly southward, the air and wind being chilly cold.

The people were thus caught up before they had time even to climb on to their roofs, and were lifted to the surface of the water, together with the beams and thatches of their cottages. When the storm burst there was an abundant rice crop ripening for the harvest,—the well-known deltaic rice crop, which is much beyond the needs of local consumption, and affords quantities (measured by thousands of tons annually) for exportation to distant districts. A part is lost, that in which the plant had not advanced beyond the stage of flowering, and a part is safe still, that in which the grain had formed or began to form. If even one-third is saved, that would suffice for the population now on the land.

The wealth lost was almost entirely agricultural—crops or cattle. To this, however, there is one noticeable exception, namely, Dowlutkhan, a rich trading town, clean destroyed, with loss of miscellaneous property and valuable records. It had 8,000 inhabitants, one-fourth of whom perished, perhaps more.—Gazette of India.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the Immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and Immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Baptism—No. 2.

BY G. M. MYERS.

From the testimony we adduced on the points to which we referred in our last article, we trust that he who runs may read and understand us as to the subject and design of this ordinance Our enquiry next in order is,

WHAT IS BAPTISM?

As the word Bapto and all its family are foreigners to our language, and as yet hardly half naturalized, it might be well enough to make some enquiry of those of their own native land, and of those who are well acquainted with them as to what they are and what they were understood to be in the days of old.

1. Strabo, a geographer born at Amasea in Pontus, about B. C. 60, says: "Around Agrigentum, in Scicily, are marsh lakes, having the taste indeed, of sea water, but a different nature; for even those who cannot swim are not baptized—floating like pieces of wood."

2. Polybius, born 204 B. C., in his description of the manner of taking the sword fish, (with a headed spear or harpoon) says: "And even if the spear falls into the sea it is not lost; for it is compacted of both oak and pine, so that when the oaken part is baptized by the weight, the rest is buoyed up and is easily recovered."

3. Josephus, born at Jerusalem, A. D. 37, and educated as a Jew, in the Hebrew and Greek, in describing the contest of the Jews with the Roman soldiers on the sea of Galilee, says: "And when they ventured to come near, they suffered harm before they could inflict any, and were baptized along with their vessels.....And those of the baptized who raised their heads either a missile reached or a vessel overtook."

4. Lucian, born A. D. 136, in his satire on the love of the marvelous, pleasantly describes men walking on the sea (having cork feet,) and says: "We wondered, therefore, when we saw them not baptized, but standing above the waves, and traveling on without fear."

5. Gregory, bishop of Neo-Cesarea, about the year 240 A. D., describing Origen as an experienced and skillful, guide through the mazes of philosophical speculations, says: "He himself would remain on high in safety, and stretching out a hand to save them as if drawing up persons baptized."

The above examples we quote, and others equally well to the point we might quote, but these will have to suffice, as we desire to hear from the lexicons upon this family of words.

LEXICOGRAPHICAL TESTIMONY.

1. Scapula, of 1579 on Bapto: to dip, to immerse; also to dye, because that may be done by immersing. Baptizo, to dip, to immerse; also to submerge, to overwhelm, to wash, to cleanse.

2. Henricus, of 1572. Bapto and Baptizo: To dip, or immerge, as we dip things for the purpose of dying them, or immerge them in water.

3. Robertson's Thesaurus, of 1676, containing a definition of 30,000 words. Baptizo: To immerse, or wash.

4. Schleusner, Glasgow ed., 1822. Baptizo: Immerse, dip, immerse in water, wash or cleanse in water.

5. Pasor, London ed., 1650. Bapto and Baptizo: To dip, immerse, to dye, because it is done by immersing.

6. Parkhurst. Baptizo: First and primarily mean to dip, to immerse or plunge in water.

7. Donegan. Baptizo: To immerse repeatedly into liquid, to submerge, to sink thoroughly, to saturate.

8. Dr. John Jones, of England. Bapto: I dip, I stain. Baptizo: I plunge, I plunge in water, dip, baptize, bury, overwhelm.

9. Greenfield. Baptizo: Immerse, immerge, submerge, sink, wash, cleanse. baptize.

10. Rost, German. Bapto: To plunge, to immerse, to submerge.

11. Bretschneider, 1829, German. Baptizo: Dip or bathe frequently, bathe, wash, immerse, submerge.

12. Bass, English. Baptizo: To dip, immerse, plunge in water, to bathe one's self. To be immersed in suffering or addictions.

13. Stoklus, Leipsic ed., 1752. Baptizo: Properly means to dip or immerse in water.

14. Pickering. Baptizo: To dip, immerse, submerge, plunge, sink, overwhelm; to steep; to soak;

15. Walderus, ed. 16 1687. Baptizo: I immerge, I immerse.

16. Stephens, ed. 1679. Baptizo: Immerse, submerge, bury in water, wash, bathe.

17. J. C. Suicer, ed. 1682. Baptizo: Immerse, wash.

18. Schevelius, ed. 1667. Baptizo: Baptize, merge, bathe.

19. Hei-der-i-cus, ed. 1772. Baptizo: Merge, immerse, bury in water, wash, bathe, baptize.

21. Leusden, ed. 1674. Baptizo: Baptize, merge, bathe.

23. Robinson. Baptizo: Immerse, sink, wash, cleanse by washing, wash one's self, bathe, baptize.

24. Ewing, Glasgow ed. 1827. Baptizo: In its primary and radical sense, I cover with water or some other fluid.

25. Wahl-Clavis, of N. T., Leipsic ed. 1820. Baptizo: From Bapto, to immerse often, to immerse in N. T.

26. Trommius, ed 1718, Concordance of the Septuagint. Baptizo: To baptize, to immerse, to dip.

27. G. J. Vossius, ed. 1648. Baptizo: To baptize, signifies to plunge. It certainly, therefore, signifies more than spi potazein, which is to swim lightly on the top, and less than dunein, which is to sink to the bottom so as to be destroyed.

28. Booth, quoted by Calvin, 1536, says: Baptize signifies to immerse, and the rite of immersion was observed by the ancient church.

29. E. A. Sophocles, ed. 1870. A native Greek defines the word from B. C. 146 to A. D. 1100. Baptizo: To dip, to immerse, to sink. Metaphorical—to be drowned; to plunge a knife; bathed in tears, as though plunged in them.

30. Groves' Greek and English Lexicon, p. 110. Baptizo: To dip, immerse, emerge, plunge; to wash, cleanse, purify; to baptize; to depress; to humble; to overwhelm.

31. Bagster and Son's Analytical Greek Lexicon. Bapto: To dip, to dye. Baptizo: To dip; to immerse; to cleanse or purify by washing; to administer the rite of baptism, to baptize.

32. Professor Stuart, of Andover Theological School, in Biblical Repository for 1833, on page 298, says: "Bapto, Baptizo, mean to dip, plunge or into any liquid. All lexicographers and critics of any note are agreed on this."

For much of the above lexicographical testimony we are indebted to the Campbell and Rice Debate, Campbell on Baptism, and L. B. Wilks, of Columbia, Mo.

SYRIAC LEXICONS.

1. Michaelis Gottengen 1768. Amad: To bathe, baptize, immerse.

2. Schaaf, Lyons, 1708. Amad: To bathe one's self; to bathe, dip, immerse into water, baptize.

3. Guido-Fabricius—Syriac-Chaldric, of Antwerp—Polyglott, 1592. Amad: To baptize, dip, bathe.

4. Schindler—Pentaglott—Hanover, 1612. Amad: To baptize, immerse into water. Dip, bathe.

5. Buxtorfs—Chaldaic and Syriac Lexicon—Basle, 1622. Amad: To baptize, dip, bathe, bathe one's self.

The house in which Milton resided in London while he was Latin secretary under the commonwealth is in course of demolition. The laths and rafters recently have been seen, open to the sky, of the room in which Cromwell must often have discussed with Milton the affairs of state, and that more interesting chamber where the poet saw his late espoused saint

There Milton went blind, there he married his secon wife, Catherine Woodcock, and there she died. There he commenced to write Paradise Lost. In later years the house belonged to Jeremy Bentham, who inserted a slab with this inscription:

Here lived Milton,
The Prince of Poets.

William Hazlitt also resided there.

A wide spread association, under the name of Federation and Liberty, has been discovered in Moscow, whose aim it is to make Russia a Federal Republic. The empire is to form five separate states, united by a federation. The dynasty is to be set aside, the aristocracy abolished, and communal and republican institutions to be introduced on the most democratic basis. Numerous arrests have consequently been made.

An old Menomonee Indian, known as Joe Williams, died lately at the residence of a colored man named Riley, a mile and a half from Oconto, Wis. He had the reputation of being the oldest person in the state, his age being variously stated at from 110 to 120 years.

And this army "has been created only to preserve our rights. The heroic Mussulmen will sacrifice all they possess to save their country, and those who have not already enlisted will rush to the standard the moment they hear that the empire is to open its festival of glory. We shall perform miracles of valor, and we possess arms and provisions in abundance. We have 500,000 needle guns, and 150,000 others of the latest invention, without counting the last order given in America, half of which is already on the way. We have thus a multiplicity of arms, both for our regular troops, and for the clouds of volunteers who will not fail to gather for their country's defence. Allah will protect the faithful and give them victory."

Exegetical.

"We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord."—2 Cor. v. 8.

To rightly understand the Scriptures due regard must be given to the context. An isolated statement may be made to signify something directly contrary to the intention of the writer if taken by itself alone. To ascertain precisely what the apostle teaches in the passage above, we must have reference to its entire connection with the chapter in which the verse stands, and also with the preceding. By so doing, we shall see that he contemplates the members of Christ's redeemed church in three very different states, or conditions, personally considered, and in these different personal conditions as connected with three very different constitutions of things, as regards their habitations. He considers them both in their diverse natures, and in their equally diverse abodes. The three states brought to view are, the present mortal state in this world, as an abode, exposed to numberless afflictions, with death continually impending, then the death state with all its privations, and, lastly, the glorified state in the world to come. The present state, in the mortal flesh, or, our present body, in which, while we live, we carry inherent death about with us continually, is first set in strong contrast with the resurrection state, when the life of Jesus will be manifested in this same body, or mortal flesh. While we are living in this dying state, in the present corruptible body, or mortal flesh state, we are the inhabitants of an earthly abode, which is destined to be dissolved; not only is our body mortal, and tending to dissolution, but our earthly home, this present world, in which we pass our mortal existence, is doomed to destruction. The things seen are all temporal. In the resurrection state, when the life of Jesus shall permeate our entire being, we shall not only have the deathless constitution of being, but a building of God, a house not made with hands in which to live, and which will be eternal, and destined never to be dissolved like our present earthly home. This is a development of the idea that the things that are not seen, are eternal. In this mortal body, and inhabiting this earthly tabernacle, our present abode in this world, that is "reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men,"—when the very heavens that curtain this temporal tent shall be dissolved, and depart like the shriveling parchment scroll in the devouring fires of the the day of God,—we are absent from the Lord. The idea of the original is, we are away from our home; we are expatriated.

When God, who raised up our Lord Jesus Christ from the dead, shall raise us up also, to present us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, he will have a dwelling place every way adapted to our changed and deathless natures. This abode will be a building of God, a house not made with hands, a city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God; not of temporary duration, but eternal in the heavens, or heavenly country as paraphrased by Macknight. This abode will be the heavenly Jerusalem, the city of the living God, which the saints, who have had no continuing city here, have sought for as the one to come. In this eternal house we shall be present, or more literally, we shall be at home with the Lord. But in order to be at home with the Lord in the heavenly house, that building of God, we must be divested both of our present mortal body as well as of our present earthly home. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God. Hence there is to be both a dissolution of the body and a dissolution of the world.

The chief difficulty has grown out of the terms unclothed and clothed upon. The primary meanings of the two Greek verbs ekduo and enduo are to go in, and to go out, and they are so rendered by Macknight in the chapter under consideration. The verb duo, the simple uncompounded form of the word, means "to go into, or under," as to go into a city, into a house. It is used, according to Schleusner, especially of what evanishes from the sight, and most particularly of what sinks in water. Hence, as the ancients thought that the sun merged itself into the ocean when it went down, the word was applied to sunset. The only two occurrences of the verb, in the New Testament, in its simple form, are applied to the going down of the sun. Mark i. 32; Luke iv. 40. The verb ekduo, enduo, is used twenty-eight times in the New Testament, and is applied to putting on raiment, to being endued with power, to putting on armor, to putting on the new man, to putting on Christian graces, to putting on the Lord Jesus Christ, and to putting on incorruption, and immortality at the resurrection, and, finally, to entering into, or being invested, endued, or endowed, with a heavenly home, or house, in the resurrection state. Doddridge admits that the word is used in this figurative sense here. To invest anyone with household, or freehold estates is no forced figure. To indue, a word derived directly from the Greek, is used in the same way in our own language. Ekduo, eduo, has directly the opposite meanings of enduo. It literally signifies to go out; hence to put off clothing, to be divested of possessions, or of house and home. It is used five times in the New Testament, and is applied to depriving of raiment, three times; to being spoiled by robbery, once; and to being divested of existence in this world, and of the world as a home—to go completely out of life and out of the world—once, in the text above.

Some lines that we learned in our childhood give the precise idea:

We lay our garments by,
Upon our beds to rest;
So death will soon disrobe us all
Of what we here possess.

Our present existent state, in our mortal body, and in our earthly home, this world, which must be dissolved, is one condition, or investment. Our future state, when the life of Jesus shall be manifested in our body, after we have been raised up by him, who raised up the Lord Jesus, by which resurrection we are indued with immortality and incorruptibility, and then enter into—become invested with—our heavenly home, that building of God, is the existent state, or condition, when we shall be present with, or, rather, at home with the Lord. This is the heavenly investment. Between these two invested states, or conditions, is a homeless, unclothed state, where we are divested of this life, and of this world; through which the dread pathway to the future life, the heavenly house, the desired home with the Lord, leads. This unclothed state the apostle did not desire. And no living man or woman desires it. We instinctively cling to this mortal life when confronted by death; earth, under the curse, becomes desirable when we look into the desolations of the grave. But still in this life, and in this earthly house, we are away from our Lord, and away from home. We are denizens of another world, the world to come. Our citizenship is in heaven; our enrollment is there; our Savior is there; and there is the tabernacle of God, the New Jerusalem. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, we also shall appear with him in glory. He has gone to prepare a place for us, but he is coming again to receive us unto himself, that where he is, there we may be also. The New Jerusalem will come down from God out of heaven. The heavenly house will be with men. Then we shall ever be with the Lord, when God shall make all things new. Nothing can be more fallacious than to interpret the earthly house, and the heavenly house, of the body as a habitation of the soul. If the soul puts off this mortal body, as an earthly house, and then puts on a body from heaven, as a heavenly house, where is the unclothed state? and also, what is to be done with the resurrection body raised from the grave? To adopt this popular interpretation would be to give the human soul the heavenly body, and the spirit-life from Jesus the mortal body, when raised up. This would be duality indeed. It would result in two distinct beings. The human soul-life would be manifested in a heavenly body, or organization, and the divine spirit-life in the earthly body, or the raised up organization, and thus be one man of this world, would become two men in the world to come, leaving each of us to ask—which shall I be? Paul is talking of persons going out of, and into homes, not of souls going out of, and into bodies. We may die and our bodies be dissolved; our earthly home may perish in the fires of the day of God; but our life will be restored when our bodies shall be raised in the likeness of our Redeemer. This world will be superseded by a new heaven and a new earth in which dwelleth righteousness. On the taking away and the restoration of our life, we quote Macknight's paraphrase of Col. iii. 3, 4: "For ye must die, and leave all the things which are on earth. Nevertheless, your bodily life will be safely laid up with Christ by God, to be restored to you at the resurrection of the just. So that when Christ shall appear to judge the world, with whom our life is hid, then shall ye also appear with him, raised to life in glorious immortal bodies." Our precious life-treasure is in safe keeping, to be restored to us at the revelation of our Lord. Our bodies are safe in that dreary, unclothed, non-existent state between the life that now is, and that which is to come. This earthly home will perish, but we shall be forever at home with the Lord, in our new life, in that world to come. Let us then set our affections on heavenly things that the exceeding great, and eternal weight of glory may be ours.—[EDITOR.

We Fly Away.

"The days of our years are three score years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be four score years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away."

The expression, "We fly away," has led some to infer the soul is conscious after death. Those who thus interpret the expression, claim that it is the soul or spirit which flies away. If the reader will notice the text again, he will perceive that not one word is said about the soul or spirit. This idea has to be put into the text. The Hebrew word rendered "fly away," is gooph, and is translated in a number of different ways. It is rendered weary also to faint. In Job xx. 8, it occurs in connection with dreams. "He shall fly away as a dream, and shall not be found; yea, he shall be chased away as a vision of the night." The expression occurs in Hosea ix. 11. "As for Ephraim, their glory shall fly away like a bird," etc. The sense is of vanishing. So Gesenius renders it when applied to human life. Indeed there is not the least reference to the flight of the spirit from the body. It bears strictly upon the passing away of man into the realms of death. It can only be used in connection with the frailty of human life, of passing away from its joys and activities.

H. V. REED.

Suggestive and Exhaustive.

To me a discourse on an article in a religious paper is valuable, if it is suggestive of thought. I have heard long discourses and read long articles whose value to me were a few suggestive thoughts; communications of this kind are more apt to be remembered, and do more good leading persons to think and study for themselves.

The account of the death and raising of Lazarus from the dead has as much, perhaps more influence in confirming me in the belief of the unconscious state of the dead than even those positive texts of Scripture, "The dead know not anything," or all the lengthy discussions of friend Geo. Storrs and all his able contributions. The fact that Jesus did not intimate that Lazarus was alive. Friend Lazarus sleepeth; plainly, Lazarus is dead. We know that the religious teachers of our day would have made the chief topic of their conversation under such circumstances his living in the unseen. Not a word about the soul of Lazarus being alive, "but thy brother shall rise again." "I know he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day."

CHAS. BOARDMAN.

It is stated that the cold has been more severe the present winter at St. Petersburgh than for 153 years previous. On the 20th of December the thermometer in that city fell to thirty-two degrees Reaumur below zero, (equal to forty degrees Fahrenheit.) Several cabmen were found frozen to death on their seats, while cats, pigeons, and even sparrows were found dead in the streets. At night large fires were kept burning in the public squares for the benefit of the police. In the town of Vologda, in the interior, the thermometer rank as low as forty-four degrees (Reaumur) below zero, or fifty-eight degrees Fahrenheit.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEB. 14, 1877.

THE long article from Brother Wiley Jones is worthy of careful perusal. It treats on matters having a very significant bearing upon the close of the present dispensation. Let all read it carefully. Articles having a bearing on the fulfillment of prophecy are specially important to this passing generation. We have some good selections for future numbers.

IF some communications fail to set forth the faith and obedience of the gospel in their full and definite light, let those, who have carefully looked into the plan of redemption, and the covenants of promise, give us some communications on these themes. Our readers have become perfectly tired of reviews and personalities. They do not want to be told that some one is wrong, but to learn what is the truth.

ON SUNDAY, at 3 p. m., Brother H. V. Reed lectured in Plymouth, on "MAN'S PLACE IN CREATION," to a large and appreciative audience. The design of his lecture was to show,—that there is no conflict between Science and Revelation when the teachings of both are rightly unfolded and understood. Geology demonstrates not only that man had a beginning, but that a flora and fauna antedated his existence. The Bible teaches the same lessons. The rocky leaves of nature's volume are liable to the same mis-interpretation as the pages of the living oracles. Brother Reed set these matters forth in his happy and eloquent manner, and the audience seemed both pleased and instructed.

SEVERAL of our brethren and sisters have responded to the appeal for help in assisting the Association in bearing the burden of publishing the RESTITUTION. Deficiencies, that have, in times past, been made up by the few, should be shared by the many. Several considerably in arrears have paid up and advanced for the paper in future. Many brethren are letting dues remain unpaid. Will all take an interest in the success of the RESTITUTION? By consulting the labels, all can see at a glance the state of accounts. Slips explaining this have been sent to many, and, in some instances, to those who had forwarded subscriptions all right. Some mistakes are unavoidable. We shall do our best to make the RESTITUTION an instructive and welcome visitor to the homes of all its patrons; and we will do it at any sacrifice we can make on our part. Let all in arrears pay up past dues, and renew subscriptions, and let those who can, make some little sacrifice and we shall get along with the paper and its indebtedness. To enlighten the world, so far as we can, in this grand crisis of its history is obligatory on us all. Jesus is soon coming to reward every man as his works shall be.

New Year's Day, 1877.

What a day. Friends from the city, children from the village, neighbors from the other road, talking, reading, spreading the new carpet, getting the dinner, receiving the new opake glass dishes and entertaining their cheerful donor; boys on their skates in the field in full view of the house, and all just as happy as happy can be.

Everything adjusted, and dinner over, we all assemble upon the new carpet for a sip of the good wine at the last of the feast. The Bible read, the hymns sung, the remarks made, the prayers offered, hymns again, and our company of eighteen disperse.

The presentation, at the hands of our beloved Christian brother and sister, of this beautiful and durable carpet, woven expressly for us in the looms of the donors, we accept as a token of their regard for the sincere and urgent efforts of their aged brother in Christ in behalf of some precious truths in God's word heretofore unseen by them. May they be rewarded an hundred fold while we are encouraged to faithfulness and humility as we see all these things added unto us.

To the RESTITUTION we say a most successful New Year, and to its new editor the same. Its first number is more than satisfactory; it is decidedly pleasing. We congratulate him and all his readers, while we invoke rich blessings upon him who has vacated the chair. Many years have we been interested in their pens, and hope still to be thus favored.

Co-operation in Gospel Union.

While the great luminary of day goes forth in his strength, enlightening the darkness of the broad universe with his shining rays, none object to the little twinkle of the stars as they silently fulfill their humble mission of lesser light in the canopy above us. Thus, while stronger minds and abler pens have recently touched the subject of Christian union among God's people, permit me also, "Elisha like, to shew mine opinion." I have just been reading some excellent articles in our valuable paper, the Advent Christian Times, and also in the RESTITUTION, and feel, after reading many good articles in both papers, as I do in our social meetings after hearing the brethren and sisters give in their cheerful testimony of their love for Christ, and willingness to work in his cause, like gathering up "seven basket's full (at least) of fragments" or spiritual food, on which to feast like good old Elijah, for many days to come. One good sister, that I love in Christ, talks about "the prayer of Jesus for the church," and says, in conclusion of her article, "Let us be one, that many may believe and be saved." My heart and humble pen, repeats, union; and if any little words of mine can help on the fulfillment of our blessed Savior's prayer, in promoting the oneness of Christians, they shall not be wanting. Another brother, who is not ashamed of being called "an Adventist," in which I fully harmonize with him, says: Let us unite on the great central "truth," "Life only in Christ." Here, again my heart says, Let Jesus who so freely gave his life a ransom for us, be exalted as a Prince and Savior, the great and glorious life-giver to all his saints at their resurrection. And next, I concur with our venerable brother who has long "borne the heat and burden of the day," that if any one believes on the Lord Jesus Christ, and keeps his commandments, he is a Christian, entitled to recognition and fellowship by all Christians throughout the world. Yes, dear brethren and sisters, you, who are loving and longing for the appearing of Jesus to give us the long promised inheritance, let nothing in this, our tarrying time, divide our love for each other, or our efforts to co-operate in the blessed work left by the church to accomplish, that of "getting a people ready for the Lord." Then, in this coming year, let us pray more, and watch more against the utterance of a single word that would weaken the labors of any who desire to become one in Christ, who may not understand all the truth that some possess and enjoy, bearing with each others infirmities, cheering and helping our good editors with words of encouragement and material aid when we can; having our lamps trimmed and burning, so that we may be ready to enter into the "marriage supper of the Lamb."

Association.

Editor Restitution:—I have just read Brother D. S. Morrow's "Where the Shoe Pinches" in the RESTITUTION of Jan. 3, and wish to say a few words about that and some others things which have appeared on the same subject.

While as the editorial note says he has hit the point, in saying that the brethren East desired, rather than oppose concert of action, at the same time he widely mistakes the object contemplated in the paper of which he speaks. He, with many others who have written in opposition to it, seem to suppose that it was a plan for a church organization. Nothing could be further from its intention. It left the churches with their Bible named officers, their faith, and their worship, perfectly independent of any outside legislation. It recognized these churches as feebly striving to perform their appointed work, viz., the "holding forth the word of life." Their labors were scattered and their success but small. Crediting the universally admitted truth, that combined action is more effectual than individual action, it aimed to propose a plan by which these feeble churches could combine their energies and their means and thereby secure more efficiency in their work.

There was no intimation of a "plan seeking to lay on bonds;" "give license or permits to teach or to take away the same;" "or create officers with power to admit or exclude."

It did contemplate the power to contract with Evangelists of its own selection, and send them out under pay for their services; but contemplated no interference with the ministerial labors of any one else. The local churches were expected to provide for their own teaching.

The plan recommended provided no "fat places" for any body; and the paper—RESTITUTION—is owned and managed by a body entirely distinct from the proposed association; hence all fears of a monopoly in this direction were groundless. No one engaged in getting up the plan of association ever dreamed that it could ever become owner of the paper.

I have been much surprized that such intelligent brethren as have written, opposing the proposed association, should have spoken so wildly about it. Most of them are unaccustomed either to oppose or commend without a better understanding of what they speak of. Brother Weethe, in your issue of Dec. 6, gives the proposed plan of Association an intelligent and candid review. I would thank him for it.

The effort to secure combined action in the body has, for the time, failed; still I do not regret that it was made. Although the proposed plan was rudely rejected as an attempt at Papal domination over the body, instead of a kindly effort to prune the somewhat unwieldly scheme of its useless or harmful branches as we hoped; still it is to be presumed that the discussion may have enlightened some. At least to their discernment of the distinction between the churches independent in their organization and discipline, and an association of such churches, in order to greater efficiency in their common work.

Hard and Dangerous Times.

Editor Restitution:—The brethren say these are hard times. They say the truth, yet they might be worse, and for aught we know will be far worse, and that soon. As yet, there is plenty of life sustaining commodities in the country. How thankful we should be.

That money does not circulate so freely now as at other times is true, yet it takes money us yet to make the RESTITUTION go, and let no brother or sister cry hard times and let the RESTITUTION go down, until they have let their coffee and tea, and especially their tobacco and snuff, go down, being slaves to the old man no longer. But be the Lord's free men and women, and thus his servants.

I will enclose you a small pittance, as we cannot think of letting our paper go down, until the Lord comes and begins his restitution, and we walk by faith in those precious promises no longer. Yet, brethren, do we really appreciate our situation, amid the last day dangers? We are in the midst of perilous times, far worse and more fatal than our financial troubles (and why? Because the masses of people and many brethren are being carried quietly along by the popular current down to destruction.

Crime and corruption are on the increase; misery and death's dark pall brood over the land. Religion and politics are both fearfully corrupted, and to-day our own beloved land is boiling hot, ready to burst out in deadly strife and war. Fathers, sons, neighbors and friends are drinking freely at this corrupt fountain, and even some who claim to have been called out from the world by the good news of the coming kingdom, who are required from on high to become dead to the rudiments or elements (politics being a principal element) of this world, are, I am sorry to say, fearfully mixed up in the corrupt mess.

Oh, brethren, how can you so far lose sight of our meek Savior? who preferred doing his Father's will, and pleasing him that sent him, to his own glory and that of the corrupt creature, man, as to applaud and worship with money, head and heart either one of the little creatures on the public stage. Be patient, brethren; stand aloof, and "wait for the Lord and keep his way, and he will exalt thee to inherit the land, when the wicked are cut off thou shalt see it." Then is the crown, the glory, the time of reward, and the time to reign or rule! Not now.

T. E. ADAMS.

Writing from Kischeneff to the Politische Correspondenz, a correspondent says that all the reports circulated, especially by the Polish papers, touching the poor condition of the Russian army of the south, are entirely groundless. With its reserve it numbers 224,600 infantry, has 246 cannon, and 13,330 cavalry. There are large stocks of ammunition in Choten, Giorgejeff, Akkermand, Bjeliitza, and Kischeneff. The passage of the Pruth could be deferred for political motives, but the health of the army will suffer no detriment in any case. In a week, continues this correspondent, the Russian army of the south could raise four additional armed corps, and in case of emergency could be re-enforced as early as the 15th of February, with 120,000 men.

It is not in our open, exposed deeds, that we need the still voice of the silent monitor, but in the small, secret, every day acts of life, that conscience should prompt us to beware of the hidden shoals of what we deem too common to be dangerous.

Eastern Items.

The Turkish question, as between the Porte and the Provinces, is still unsettled. The London Times dispatch from Belgrade on Sunday says that the peace negotiations between the Servian agent and the Turkish Embassador at Vienna have been broken off in consequence of the Porte's persistence in demanding guarantees, the nature of which it refused to specify. If peace is not made with Servia before March 1, the Turks intend to march in converging columns on Kragujevatz, the former capital, and call together a Servian Assembly there, which shall overturn the present government and make a satisfactory treaty with the Porte.

Midhat Pacha, the Grand Vizier of the Porte, has been deposed and Edhem Pacha appointed in his place. This is regarded as an indication that Turkey is growing more and more stubborn in her determination to reject all attempts at foreign intervention. Edhem Pacha was one of the Turkish representatives at the Conference, and was noted for his determined opposition to the demands of the Powers. Midhat Pacha was ordered to quit Constantinople, and has left for Syra.

It is announced that Servia refuses the guarantees which Turkey demands as a condition of peace. These guarantees, it is understood, are of such a nature that Servia would be entirely at the mercy of Turkey if they were agreed to; but the negotiations are not entirely broken off.

A despatch from Ragua says: "The Prince of Montenegro sent a despatch to the Porte yesterday, stating that he accepts the proposals of the Grand Vizier to open peace negotiations, and is willing to treat directly with the Porte."—N. Y. Observer.

CONSTANTINOPLE, February 6.—The Turkish Ambassador in Rome has notified the Porte that arms for Crete are being purchased in Italy. The Turkish garrisons in the island have consequently been strengthened.

RUSSIAN FLEET.

BERLIN, Feb. 6.—It is said that a formidable Russian ironclad squadron will enter the Mediterranean in the spring. The Grand Duke Constantine will command, and Admiral Popoff will be his Chief of Staff.

SERVIA.

London, Feb. 6.—The Servians declare it impossible to discuss the stipulation for granting privileges to the Jews and Armenians equal to those enjoyed by other Servian subjects. The opposition is actuated by trade jealousy, and comes from a combination of Belgrade merchants who influence the clique which furnishes the Ministers for both political parties. Servia does not seriously object to any other of the Turkish conditions.

AN OPINION.

BRUSSELS, Feb. 10.—Le Nord says: "If Europe renounces its right of action under the treaty of '56, Russia will be justified in assuming the attitude she held before that treaty."

Sententious Paragraphs.

Labor is life; from the inmost heart of the worker rises his God-given force, the sacred celestial life-essence breathed into him by Almighty God; from his inmost heart awakens him to all nobleness—to all knowledge, self-knowledge, and much else, as soon as work fitly begins.

Build not thy nest on any tree of earth, seeing that God hath sold the forest to death; but rather soar upward to the sure and immutable refuge in the Clefts of the Rock.—Rutherford.

What can be more foolish than to think that all this rare fabric of heaven and earth could come by chance, when all the skill of art is not able to make an oyster.

One ray of light from the eternal sun is an infinitely better guide to man over life's mysterious sea than the most ingenious system of fog bells ever invented.

Slavery degrades the entire man. The fetter that eats into the flesh eats also into the soul. God made every man free, yet doubtless in the foresight of mischiefs that would result from the abuse of freedom.

Oh! would that peace might ever rest

PRAYER.

A breath that floats beyond this iron world,
And touches him that made it.—Tennyson.

I heard the voice of Jesus say,
I am this dark world's light.
Look unto me; thy morn shall rise
And all thy days be bright.

I came to Jesus, and I found
In him my Star my Sun;
So in that light of life I walk,
And glory is begun.

A. D. 1880.

This is the epoch of Wm. Hales, D. D., the distinguished chronologer, and is based like that of 1843 and 1847, on a supposed connection of the 70 weeks and 2300 days. The arrangement of Dr. Hales is as follows, speaking of the vision in the 8th of Daniel. He says;

"And he was astonished at the vison; but none understood how the daily sacrifice should be taken away, or when the period of 2300 days should begin or end.

"Three years after a further insight into the last mysterious vision was given to the prophet, immediately after his admirable prayer and confession of his own sins, and the sins of his people, and supplication for the holy mountain of his God; that his people might be restored from the Babylonish captivity, now drawing to a close, and the city be rebuilt; yea, while I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel whom I had seen in the foregoing vision (8:16) fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation, and informed me, and spake to me, and said O Daniel, I am now come forth to give the understanding, and information. At the beginning of thy supplications the oracle came forth; and I am come to tell thee (his response); for thou art greatly beloved. Therefore consider the matter and understand the vision.

THE PROPHECY OF THE SEVENTY WEEKS.

"Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city; to complete the transgression and consummate sins; to expiate iniquity and introduce everlasting righteousness and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Saint of saints. Know then and understand, from the going forth of the oracle to restore (thy people) and to re-build Jerusalem, until the leader, shall be seven weeks and sixty two weeks.

"Thou shalt return (and thy people at the end of the vision of 2300 days), and Jerusalem, shall be re-built; both the street and the breach (of the wall) even in straitness of times.

"And after the sixty-two weeks, shall Messiah be cut off; and (thy people) shall not be His; a people of the leader to come shall destroy both the city and sanctuary; and its end shall be in a deluge, and until the end of the war desolations are decreed.

"But one week shall establish a (new) covenant with many; and half of the week shall abrogate the (daily) sacrifice and oblation. And upon the pinnacle (or battlement of the temple shall stand) the abomination of desolation, even until the consummation (of the 2300 days), but then the decreed (desolation) shall be poured (in turn) upon the desolator."

This chronological prophecy (which I have attempted to render more closely and intelligently, supplying the ellipsis necessary to complete the sense of the concise original), was evidently designed to explain the foregoing vision, especially in its chronological part of the 2300 days; at the end of which the predicted "desolation of the Jews" should cease, and their "Sanctuary be cleansed," or their temple be finally re-built, by determining a certain fixed point, or epoch within it, namely, the destruction of the city and temple of Jerusalem by the Romans, A. D. 70; for counting backwards from these seventy weeks of days, or 70× 7=490, years, we get the begining of the period B. C. 420; and, this being known, the end of the period, also, A. D., 1880; for 420×1880=2300.

The destruction of Jerusalem, therefore, divides the whole period into two unequal parts; the former, consisting 490 years, beginning B. C. 420; the latter, 1810 years, ending A. D., 1880.—Selected.

In the Field.

Editor Restitution:—Since my last report I have been busy in proclaiming the Word of Life. Large numbers of people have attended our ministrations, and much interest is taken in hearing of the coming reign of peace. Since my last report, eight more have accepted the invitation to become Christ's. During the present year I have preached forty-one discourses, and have had thirty-four additions. The good work is moving on, and we hope to see others rejoicing in the light of the gospel of Christ.

Russia has at last adopted a policy in its relations with Turkey—that which is known in history as the Fabian policy. The present state of things is neither peace nor war, and by prolonging this inactivity and indecision, Russia believes that Turkey will suffer a financial collapse, owing to the strain on her material resources, caused by the continued keeping of troops on the frontier to watch those of Russia. The Bear is exceedingly tenacious, and very loth to let go his grip of the situation, which he thinks is his advantage and continually becoming more so by delay.

Editor Restitution:—We are very glad that we have the privilege of sacrificing a little for the support of our noble paper. We wish we were able to do more than we are doing for the cause we so much love, believing as we do, that what we do, must be done quickly. We would earnestly urge all lovers of the truth, advocated in our excellent paper, to assist all they possibly can in advancing the cause of our Master. The RESTITUTION is all the Bible preaching we get in Walker, excepting that once last fall Brother D. T. Halstead came out here and preached Saturday evening and Sunday forenoon. We are always glad to hear from our brothers and sisters.

Editor Restitution:—I have been very much interested for the past three or four years in trying to do good, both by precept and example. I have been scattering tracts, books, and back numbers of the RESTITUTION. I lend them and then gather them up and lend them to others who will read them. We have no preaching here, the times are so hard. Elder J. T. Ongley has been with us seven or eight times, but he is so far off, and it costs so much to get him here, that we can not do it. He is the nearest to us of any one that we know of. I am sixty-nine years old, am getting blind so that I can't follow the rilling, and am a poor speller; so you must bear with me.

Editor Restitution:—I am not a member of any church or sect, but would love to be a Christian—how can I be one? I imagine I hear you say, "believe on Christ." Now I will tell you my difficulties. I have prayed until I have felt a warm, loving feeling for Jesus who has done so much for me, and a determination to live a better, purer life, and for a while would feel happy; then a feeling of mistrust in Christ would creep into my heart, causing me to think it may be as the Jews say—that he was not the true Christ. In fact, whole clouds of evil thoughts and unbeliefs would worry and frighten me so, and only leave me when I would pray to have them removed—but still liable to return again at any moment. Now, what shall I do? Do you suppose that if any one trying to be a Christian, but having no decided peace, should die, such a person would be lost? Please do not publish my name. I want your advice, for I have no one here to go to. If I am troubling you too much, it will not offend me for you to lay this aside. I would like to be a member of your church, but there is none here, nor do I feel worthy. Although writing confusedly, it is not half what I would like to say, but will stop for fear of tiring you too much.

MRS. J. B. ———.

In a brief reply to our inquiring correspondent, we would say in the language of the Redeemer, whom we would regard as addressing her, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Our friend should yield the "obedience of faith" from her reconciled heart in putting on our Lord Jesus Christ by baptism. We are to believe from the heart, "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness," and then we are to "obey from the heart that form of doctrine" enjoined upon us. Rom. x. 10; vi. 17. Our friend has become acquainted with the character of the Savior as Prophet, Priest, and King, and now should submit in obedience to that holy ordinance that brings her into the family and household of God. Jesus Christ has "become the author of eternal salvation unto all that obey him." Heb. v. 9. "He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved." We have another interesting letter from our correspondent of a later date. She is a reader of our paper. Will probably give her last in the next Letter Drawer. May the Lord guide her in the way of life.—EDITOR.)

Editor Restitution:—I subscribed for your paper in August, and think I have read the different numbers with great interest. Although the doctrine it advocates is not very popular, yet to me it is very interesting, and its reading matter affords me much pleasure. I love the truths it advocates, because they first caused me to read the Bible, and that teaches me to love Christ, and why I should love him; and because I love him, I believe what he taught. He left word that he would come back again, and it is pleasant to wait for him, and look for such a friend. I am, as ever, a friend to the RESTITUTION and its writers. J. H. WELCH.

"Hold Fast Till I Come."

Yearning, fainting, following,
With doubtings, and cold tears;
Ere long the "one more sorrow"
Of everlasting years.

Sighing, struggling, soaring,
"Still upward" hour by hour,
Each treasured drop of blessing
Foretells another "shower."

Trusting, thanking, carrying
In His Almighty arms,
Who yields to earth her beauty,
Who gives to heaven its charms.

Seeking, serving, suffering
For "yet a little while;"
Then home—within the portal
One glad eternal smile.

Longing, looking, listening,
To hail the coming day;
To welcome "my Beloved"
Along "the shining way."

Praying, pleading, pausing,
The archangel's voice to hear;
The King in all his beauty
Is quickly drawing near.

Working, watching, waiting,
Soon, soon, Lord, shall I see
The fullness of thy glory
Throughout eternity.

Correspondence.

Editor Restitution:—With us joy; we have at last a name and a place in Pierreton! Bro. Hatch came here on Monday and that evening our meetings began. Very few were out. Another meeting was in progress. A theatrical troupe attracted many. We felt discouraged. The tears were rolling down Sister Quackenbush's face. My husband says, "It is a failure; what shall we do." I said, "the Lord is but trying us now, to see if we have the courage to stand up for him; let us go on." "We will go around and tell the folks to-morrow of the meeting." "To night, we must pray." The cross weighed heavily upon us when we retired for the night, but at eight o'clock the next day I started out. Sister Quackenbush was to go with me, but could not leave until afternoon, so I went from house to house alone, and found myself strengthened and blessed, as here and there I dropped an encouraging word. The cross was gone—the burden laid upon Jesus. The latter part of the day many more were visited, some thanking us for our invitation and promising to come, and others refusing for various reasons. More came out that evening and thereafter, and, though the attendance was not large, there was the listening ear.

The Lord was with our brother, and enabled him to present the truth in all kindness and charity; yet, like Paul, he dare not keep back any part of the Gospel, nor labor as pleasing men, knowing his accountability to God. For he to whom the word of life is entrusted may not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, because the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, and therefore in meekness must he instruct those that oppose themselves, that God may give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth, that they may hold fast the form of sound words, and lay hold of the hope set before them, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of their faith. "There is but one God," "One Lord Jesus Christ," "One faith, one baptism."

Saturday night we organized ourselves into a little church of eight members, and now feel as if we were ready to go to work in earnest. We never felt so glad before. Though but few in number, the Lord is our defence and the God of Jacob our refuge, and with him on our side we can battle with a thousand. We belong to each other, and can exhort, uphold and strengthen, pressing forward toward the prize of our high calling, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord,

Sister Quackenbush says "she never felt the responsibility resting upon the Christian as she has during the past week. Oh, it is all of the Lord, bless his holy name! He has said, "Go forward," and we have obeyed, We can now let our light shine; we can now hold up the word of life, that others may look and live. Oh, we do thank God that he has at last given us the courage to stand up for Jesus and let it be known to all, that we are of the few despised ones, who believe the doctrine of the Bible on the great subjects of Faith and Hope, and that we are looking, watching and waiting for the appearing of our blessed Lord. We shall be hated, we shall be made a laughing-stock, we shall be called fools and be falsely accused, but we rejoice in that we are accounted worthy to suffer for the name of Christ. This tribulation worketh patience, and beyond is the exceeding great and precious reward. We feel so strong in the blessed word of truth; we have strong assurance, knowing that the promises of God stand sure.

Until Sunday our meetings were held in the Universalist Church, then Bro. Hatch gave us the word on "The Coming of the Lord," from the pulpit of the Presbyterian Church. Good attention was given, and the few with whom I conversed after service seemed well pleased. To-night, the little Church will meet at Brother Smith's, and then Brother H. goes to Etna Green, to proclaim the unsearchable riches of Christ in that place to those who will hear.

There is a blessing in doing. Let us all be at work. The coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Thanks to the brethren who came to help us in the work. We ask the prayers of all. Hoi! up the hands of the servants of Christ, and may grace, mercy and peace rest upon all the household of faith.

Your sister in the faith and hope of the Gospel, S. ROXANA WINGE.

Editor Restitution:—We greet the weekly visits of the RESTITUTION with joy, and peruse its pages with great satisfaction, and read the news it contains of God's scattered few with pleasure, knowing, if we continue faithful to the end, we shall meet them all in the glorious kingdom of our God. We are isolated from all of the One Faith, yet we cling to the truth as it is in Jesus, with true and honest hearts. We hope to remain true followers of Christ, so that we may lift up our heads with joy, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh. We take great consolation in reading the paper, for we thus hear from the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, which otherwise we should not. We take the Heal, and take great comfort in reading its pages. There are none of the preaching brethren who pass this way as they do out west. If so, we should invite them to stop with us, and preach. If we have any one to preach, we have to send a good ways, and be at the whole expense of the journey, as there is none to help us.

North Windham is a small village, with a few wealthly families, with, perhaps, about a dozen Baptists, and as many more of the Christian or Campbellite order. There is a free meeting house in the place which once belonged to the Christian order, but they have not interest enough to hire any one. If any one wishes to preach for nothing there is quite a turnout to hear. The mill operatives are mostly French and Irish Catholics. We are willing to do all we can for the spread of the truth. Would lend our tracts and papers to any who will read them. I am deaf, yet God has sent the good news of the gospel of the kingdom to us so far separated from the rest of the Faith, and helped us to read it, and understand it, and believe, and obey it from the heart. To him be all the glory. Amen.

Editor Restitution:—Find the following as a report of 1st Quarterly Conference held at East Plum river, Jan. 26th, 27th and 28th, 1877.

Conference convened at 7 p. m., Friday 26th, with the President in the chair. We listened to a very good discourse from Brother John Arnold. On Saturday, 10 a. m., Brother J. M. Stephenson opened by reading from Rem. 8th chapter, and prayer. On motion Brothers Appleyard, Mitchell and Albert Renner were nominated as a committee of three on arrangements. After which a lengthy discussion ensued relative to the matter of not calling or accepting of Conference as in olden times, that Conferences are thinly attended—supposed on account of being coolness, cold or dead. Too much labor has been given as to feasts instead of a common meal and a good time.

On motion, it was agreed that each Conference appoint the time and place of the next Conference, and if not wanted, notice to be given the President or Secretary in due season that another place may be found. On motion, Conference adjourned to meet as per the above, in Lanark, Feb. 23d, at 10 a. m., and continue over Sunday. We then listened to Brother J. M. Stephenson three-fourths of an hour, from Rom. 8th.

Met at 7 p. m. Brother J. M. S. spoke on the "Signs of the times" to a crowded and attentive house of eager listeners.

Sunday, we had three discourses from Brother J. M. S., and a goodly attendance of friends and brethren in the immediate neighborhood. Brethren from a distance were few.

Editor Restitution:—It is some since I wrote any thing for our paper. However, I would say, that I am still toiling in the field. I have been trying to preach Jesus for about fifty years in Canada, and about thirty-five of them in the Advent cause. I do not publish an account of my labors, my record in on high, and that glorious day will declare it.

Some time ago, I saw in the RESTITUTION, where Brother Stephenson said he did not know but that he should have to go into a saw mill to get a living. None but those who have given up their all to preach the glad tidings of the soon coming kingdom, know how to feel for one another. This is truly a "covetousness" time. How hard it is to bring it home to the conscience. It is as some one has said of worldliness, "shaded off gradually from white to jet black," so that it is only as we are imbued with the spirit and mind of heaven, and thoroughly schooled in the principles of eternity, that we shall be able to detect its working. Our hearts must be purged from the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy The Pharisees were covetous, and could only turn Christ's doctrine into ridicule; and so will it be with all those who are tainted by there leaven. They will not see the just application of truth either as to covetousness or any thing else. They will seek to define it in such a way as will suit themselves. They will interpret, modify, pare down, accommodate, until they have fully succeeded in getting their conscience from under the edge of God's truth. In the parable of the rich man, we see a character which the world respects and admires, but in this parable we may see a difference between now and then—between time and eternity. All depends upon the light in which we look at men and things. If we merely look at them now, it may be all very well to get on in trade, and enlarge one's concerns, and make provisions for the future. The man who does this is called wise now, but he will be a fool then. Let me say to some of our rich brethren, title-deeds, debentures, bank-receipts, insurance policies, are current coin now, but they will be spurious in a few months. Let us remember that we must make God's then, to be our now; we must look at things of time in the light of eternity. What should we think of courts of law, banks and insurance offices, if we look at them in the light of eternity. These things do very well for men who are only governed by now; but the disciple of Christ is to be governed by then, this makes the difference; and truly it is a serious difference. I am waiting for the soon coming of our blessed Master.

WM. DEVERELL.

Editor Restitution:—The brethren near Paris, Ill., have requested me to write an article for our paper on practical christianity. I cannot now. My long and serious illness, and my heavy losses make it impossible now. I would not write at all now, only to let the brethren know, and to renew my subscription. I must have the dear RESTITUTION, if I have nothing else.

My serious and continued illness, my heavy losses, make this age look dark in my old age; but thank the Lord! if I am faithful, the age to come will more than compensate for all this. I have just had a house burned worth $600, will have to pay in a month or so $500 for no fault of mine; have about $4,000 invested in a store in Indiana, which I am fearful will be an almost total loss. So that, without any fault of mine, about $5,000 will be swept away, almost my entire all.

I would not say this to the brethren, but I have been appealed to for aid for God's poor, and I cannot give it. I shall be hard run to live myself and family. I had hoped that this year I could give considerable to God's poor and much of my time to the preaching of the Word, gratuitously; but illness and loss upon loss have disheartened these glorious hopes and resolves. I cannot, under the circumstances, give anything. If I can live, it will be all I can do. I cannot even afford to pay for P. O. order for the RESTITUTION. I enclose the $2 and run the risk of its loss. Please receipt in the RESTITUTION as soon as may be.

I am now every First-day-night delivering a series of lectures against Roman Catholicism, and upon the Reformation, and the need of a still further reformation up to the Divine Word. The Christian Church here kindly offer me their fine brick house.

ALFRED MALONE.

Turkish Superstitions.

It is an old belief among the Turks that they are to lose Constantinople and there are not wanting some who, think that their power in Europe will pass away with the present sultan. A rival to Dr. Cumming has appeared in the person of a venerable gentleman at Beyrout who fixes the duration of the empire at four years. A Maronite from Beyrout, sayes that the man's prophecies have had a wonderful effect upon the Mussulmans of Syria. He foretold the fall of Abdul Aziz several weeks previous to that event, and is sure that his words will prove equally true with regard to Murad. The seer is said to obtain his knowledge of the future, like Dr. Cumming, from the book of St. John.

Evolution.

Principal Dawson's article on "Prof. Huxley in New York," in the International Review for January, 1877, contains the following upon the rise and fall of the theory of Evolution:

"Without evolution, or some similar hypothesis there will remain in nature, and especially with reference to the origin of species a residum of facts unexplained, and apparently inexplicable by science. This cannot be endured in an age which has learned to believe that it can explain everything. In default of actual knowledge, it is necessary by some sweeping hypothesis to cover up our ignorance. The whole march of science is strewn with the wrecks of such hypotheses' devised in every age by ingenious men, to serve as a substitute for actual knowledge, and to spare themselves the labor of arduous investigation; satisfying one generation with a comfortable form of words, ready to be cast off by the next.

"Evolution will have its day, and then men will wonder how they could have believed it. When it shall be discovered, as assuredly it will, that the world involves causes and agencies vastly more complex than this simple theory suggests, our successors in the arena of science will point to it as a warning against the prevailing error of specialists enthusiasts, who ever tend, like quacks in medicine, to refer all effects to the same cause and to cure all evils by one specific. Our time is too much one of rash and daring speculation as distinguished from the slow and laborious search for truth. But when the reaction comes, the scientific men of the future, as they slowly dig the trenches with which they hope to gain the citadel of truth, will not refuse to give true credit to the bold adventurers who in vain attempted to storm it with a rush. Nor will they fail to admit that they did good service in cutting down many of the old prejudices and false impressions that have blocked the path of free investigation of nature."—N. Y. Observer

On the first Sunday in the year, Rev. Dr. Cumming of the Scotch Church, London, preached a sermon on "England the Turkish of Prophecy." He said that from whatever quarter they looked on Europe there were the elements to be seen of an earthquake that would shake nations to their very depths. Whilst other countries would be smitten, England would be spared. She was a chosen nation of God, and had a grand and prosperous future before her. In any forthcoming conflict this nation might be chastened, but it would be for her purification. She would keenly feel the rude blasts of the tempest; but so long as she remained a God-fearing nation she had nothing to fear. England was the Tarshish of prophecy mentioned in Ezekiel, said by the prophet to be a land of promise charged with a great mission, viz., the restoration of the Jews. It was destined to be prosperous and powerful unto the end of time.

A congregation of Roman Catholics in Rome, N. Y., has gone over in a body to the Protestant Episcopal church. The members are Germans, and the movement grew out of a quarrel with their priest.

DIED.

MOORE.—January 3, 1877, Sister Ann E. wife of Jesse H. Moore, aged twenty-seven years, eleven months and fifteen days.

Her disease was consumption. She was a worthy member of the church at Argos, Indiana. Funeral services were conducted by Brother H. V. Reed.

Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wakes to weep.

SONGER.—January 11, 1877, of Pneumonia, after a painful illness of six days, Brother Lewis Songer, of Vermillion county, Illinois, aged about sixty-five years.

When Bro. Songer first heard the Word of Truth obtained by Bro. W. S. Knight, some twenty year ago —in Warren county, Indiana—he rejoiced his heart, and he searched the Scriptures daily to see if these things were so—and in so doing he found that man is mortal, and no probation for immortality and eternal life, and that "all the wicked will God destroy;" that Christ is to sit upon the throne of his father David, and that this earth is to be renewed state to be the eternal abode of the saints. When he became convinced of these great truths, he was not ashamed to urge the same upon his neighbors, several of whom were brought in a knowledge of the truth through his instrumentality. His beloved companion, a most estimable sister, embraced the truth about the same time that he did, and was immersed, with several others, in the waters of the Redwood, near Elder Shankland. In the decline, and she still remains a consistent member of the church, residing at Peach Grove, Warren county, Indiana. But our brother has fallen under the power of death, where he will remain until the trump of God shall sound to wake all those who sleep in Jesus. May grace from above be given to their surviving children, and may they be led to know the Lord and obey his commandments, is the prayer of the writer. W. SANDERS.

A Few Words on "the Signs of the Times."

"Can ye not discern the signs of the times?" Matthew xvi. 3.

The Savior has foretold certain events to occur in the world, by which those who "look for him" are to know that "He is near, even at the doors." Matt. xxiv. 33. Campbell's version has "He" instead of "it" in this place. So also the margin of the common version. In the parallel reading, in Luke xvi. 28, 31, we are commanded to know that our "redemption draweth nigh," and also that "the kingdom of God is nigh at hand" when we see certain specified signs. By this collating process, which is one of the surest and plainest rules of interpretation, we perceive that the kingdom of God came not on the day of Pentecost, and that it will not come until the King himself comes, and the time arrives for the redemption of his waiting ones. O wondrous conjunction of wonders! O thrilling synchronism! How can any true Christian fail to be interested in the signs which indicate the nearness of these great events?

Ye star gazers that go into ecstasies over an approaching—transit of Venus, or some such thing, and journey into distant lands to get a better view of the phenomenon, "ye can discern the face of the sky, but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" "Ye geologists and zoologists that go groveling in the earth and babble so much cunningly devised nonsense about strata, and ages, and species, why do ye not turn your attention to real learning and discover what the Holy Scriptures say of the signs of the times?

The Lord overrules the rise and fall of human empires in such a way as to make them tend ultimately to the accomplishment of his great purposes concerning the world. He removeth kings, and setteth up kings. Dan. ii. 21; iv. 12. Psalm lxxvi. 10. Josephus about 1,600 years ago, used an unanswerable argument on this point when he wrote, "They appear to me widely to err from the truth, who declare that God hath no care of human affairs, for we should not see all things succeed according to the prophecies, if it happened that the world was governed by chance." And Bishop Newton, writing in the eighteenth century, says, "The prophecies of Scripture contain, as you see, the fate of the most considerable nations, and the substance of the most memorable transactions in the world from the earliest to the latest times. . . . They are only pretenders to learning and knowledge who are patrons of infidelity."

Let us now enquire of the "sure word of prophecy" (2 Peter i. 19), knowing that if we make any mistakes it is not the fault of the prophecy itself, but only of our interpretation. Although we may not be able to tell "the day and the hour," or the precise time of the Lord's coming, yet we may "know" that it is near when we behold certain predicted events occurring in the world. From a diligent study, holding, as it were, the prophecy in one hand and the history in the other, I conclude that the signs now visible, indicating the nearness of his coming are, 1st,

THE GRADUAL DECAY OF THE TURKISH EMPIRE.

I suppose this to be indicated in Rev. xvi. 12–16, under the symbolism of the drying up of "the great river Euphrates," which sign is immediately connected, under the same vial, with the coming of the Lord, and the gathering of "the kings of the earth and of the whole world" to Armageddon. I think we may safely say that the seven seals, seven trumpets and seven vials in the Apocalypse are divisions and subdivisions of time as distinctly marked in sacred chronology, as our years, months and weeks are in common chronology. Also that the seven seals (each embracing a series of prophetic events) are opened consecutively in their order, the seventh seal containing the seven trumpets. Then the seven trumpets are sounded in their order, the seventh trumpet containing the seven vials. Then the seven vials are poured out in their order, but the announcement of the advent, and hence the advent itself occurs under the latter part of the sixth vial, when the Lord and his risen saints unite in executing the seventh vial upon the world. How can we imagine that all the vials are to be poured after the advent, when we find the advent announcement only under the sixth? Hence five vials and a part of the sixth are evidently poured out before the advent. Then as the advent takes place under the sixth vial, so must also the resurrection, for these are twin events, as Paul has shown in 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17. It seems to me as unreasonable to suppose that all the seals, trumpets and vials are in the future, as to suppose that all the four metals and the four beasts of Daniel, ii. and vii. are yet in the future. As Daniel's prophecy commenced to be fulfilled about his own time, and runs on to the second advent, so I believe John's great prophecy commenced to be fulfilled about John's time and runs on to the advent. Indeed, I think the whole prophecy of John is an amplication of Daniel's fourth beast, ending in the advent and the setting up of the kingdom of God "under the whole heaven."

What, then, is meant by "the great river Euphrates?" A nation is frequently symbolized by some noted river in its vicinity. In very ancient times the Euphrates overflowing its banks represented the Assyrians, an ancient Euphratean power, issuing from its seat on that river to invade and overflow Palestine. "The Lord bringeth upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even the king of Assyria and all his glory." Isa. viii. 7, 8. Thus the Assyrians were the ancient political Euphrates. From this precedent of interpretation we conclude that the Turks are the modern political Euphrates: and as an inundation from that river would signify the destructive expansion of some Euphratean power, so an evaporation of its waters would signify the contraction and final obliteration of that power, and that the tide invasion had been turned against it, precisely as in the case of the Turks. In the Apocalypse, "many waters" represent "peoples and multitudes, nations and tongues," Rev. xvii. 15. Thus the book is its own interpreter. Similar phraseology was used even by ancient secular writers; thus "Virgil, to express the submission of some of the eastern countries to the Roman arms, says that the waters of Euphrates now flowed more humbly and gently"—Euphrates bout jam molitor undis. Aen. 8. 726. On the allusion to Euphrates in Rev. ix. 13–15, the "Comprehensive Commentary" (which I shall hereafter abreviate to C. C.) says, "This is explained by the most approved interpreters, according to the emblematical style of the prophecy, to be a prediction that the Turks, or Ottomans, who had hitherto been restrained beyond the Euphrates, would be released from that restraint, and proceed to make conquests to the west of that river." Butler (Episcopalian) says, on Rev. xvi. 12–16, "That the Turkish power is here, as in the 6th chapter, intended by the river Euphrates, can scarce admit of doubt. That by its drying up is intended to be expressed the gradual and silent wasting away of its strength and territory, seems altogether in harmony with the character of the symbol. A mere glance at the contents of the chapters which contain the history of the Turkish Empire since A. D. 1820, will suffice to show how rapidly this prophecy is in the process of fulfillment." In addition to wasting and amputating wars, the body has been internally weakened by revolts, massacres, plagues, conflagrations, &c. Taking a merely dull and secular view of the facts, Alison, as an historian, testifies that "generally speaking, the country is retrograde, and exhibits the usual and well known features of decaying societies." There was an important connection between the literal Euphrates and the literal Babylon when its waters were withdrawn from their channel so that Cyrus (thought by Dr. Thomas to be typical of Christ. Eureka iii. 649), might have a way prepared for His entrance into the city. And wonderfully enough there seems to be a similar relationship between the politico-ecclesiastical Babylon. The Ottoman Empire is a politico-ecclesiastical) institution, and the system of nations in Europe, (mostly Roman and Greek Catholic), is also a politico-ecclesiastical system. "Elliott Abridged" says, that the Turks, since 1774, "have only been allowed to hold a political station through the sufferance of the great powers of Europe, in order that the balance of power, as it is termed, may be kept equal." It seems therefore that if this Euphrates were dried up and removed, the equilibrium or "balance of power" would be lost, and the way prepared, or the situation formed, for the nations composing Babylon to fall with a tremendous crash, at the appearing of Christ the Conquerer. Derby has lately, in the British Parliament, spoken of "the maintenance of the Ottoman Empire" as "the maintenance of a system which cannot be overthrown without general convulsion." And if we understand the prophecy, that "general convulsion" will result in the gathering of the nations on the fields of Armageddon.

2d. The growth and aggressions of Russia. Her growth is intimately connected with, and almost proportioned to the decrease of Turkey. In Ezekiel's 38th and 39th chapters, and in Daniel xi. 40–45, we read of a confederated host that will invade "the mountains of Israel" and the considerable number of Jews dwelling there in "the latter days," "the latter years," or "the time of the end." The following points in the two descriptions lead us to conclude that Ezekiel's "Gog" is the same as Daniel's "King of the north," 1st, in Eze. he appears "in the latter days;" in Dan. he appears "at the time of the end." 2d, in Eze. he comes out of his place "in the north parts;" in Dan. he is "the King of the north." Gog is said to mean King or Emperor. 3d. In Eze. he is a guard to "many people with him;" in Dan. he overflows "many countries." 4th. In Eze. he comes "against the mountains of Israel;" in Dan. he enters "the glorious land," and plants his tabernacles "in the glorious holy mountain." 5th. In Eze. he will be miraculously overthrown at the "presence" of the Lord (Eze. xxxviii. 20 &c.); in Dan. he "comes to his end" with none to help him, when Michael shall stand up for the deliverance of Israel. Cruden says that Michael is "one of the names of Christ Jesus," and that it means "who is like God." Now that the transaction described in Ez. and Dan. is a part of the great gathering of nations described in Rev. xvi. 14, is to be inferred, I think, from the fact that the advent appears in each of the three prophecies. In Eze. it is indicated by saying that fishes, fowls, beasts, creeping things, and all men that are on the face of the earth shall shake at the "presence" of the Lord. Then, when the land has been cleansed and Jerusalem established, "the name of the city from that day shall be 'the Lord is there.'" Eze. xxxviii. 20; and xlviii. 35. In Dan. it is indicated by telling us that the resurrection will then take place; for we have already proved the resurrection and the advent of Christ to be inseparable, Dan. xii. 1–3. And in Rev. xvi., under the sixth vial, and connected with the drying up of the Euphrates, it is plainly declared, "Behold I come as a thief, blessed is he that watcheth." And thus some of the fields are pointed out on which we may look for signs that indicate the coming of the Lord.

On this wonderfully plain prophecy of Ezekiel xxxviii., xxxix. the C. C. says, "If any part of the ancient prophecies allude more plainly than others to the latter days, it is this of Eze. concerning Gog and Magog. It has, undoubtedly, not received its completion, (Guide p. 104.) It is indisputable, that Ezekiel's prophecy relates to events previous to the Millennium; and John's to transactions subsequent to it. There is no doubt, after what Bochart and Michaelis say, that with Orientals Magog is Scythia. Theodoret (born A. D. 286) also says, Gog and Magog are the Scythian nations. It is credible that from the Rosh and Meshech nations dwelling about the Araxes, are descended the Russians and Muscovites. The Septuagint takes the word Rosh, commonly translated chief, for a proper name, thus: 'The prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal.' Eze. xxxviii. 2. Rosh taken as a proper name signifies those inhabitants of Scythia, from whence the Russians derive their name and original. It is better with the Septuagint to make it a proper name."

Watson's Theological Dictionary says, "We question not but Rosh or Ros signifies Russia. Bochart about A. D. 1640, contended that Russia was the nation meant by the term Ros; and this opinion is supported by the testimony of various Greek writers, who describe Ros as a Scythian nation bordering on the Northern Taurus." In the A. B. U. notes, by Conant, on Gen. x. 2, we find this testimony: "Magog, inhabitants of Caucasus and neighboring regions, the Western Scythians; mentioned in Eze. xxxviii. 2, as the people, or country, of Gog, "the prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal,' as properly translated. Rosh, according to the best authorities, is identical with Rus and Russian, and is the earliest trace of that powerful people. The obliteration of it by the authorized version, is one of the remarkable variations of our version from the meaning of the sacred text of the Old Testament." In Rosh, Gog and Magog, pronounce the o long, as in Job, not short as in Lot. As the nation of Israel is so named after one of their ancestors (Gen. 32, 28), so these other nations in this prophecy are called by their ancestral or family names. This made the prophecy intelligible to former generations as well as to us; which entirely modern phraseology would not have done. As in the ancient Rosh we trace the modern Russia, so in Meshech and Tubal we trace the modern Moscow, Muscovy and Tobolski. "Russia, the largest empire in the world, is equal to nearly one-sixth part of the land surface of the globe, or more than twice the extent of Europe. For a hundred years past, Russia has been constantly enlarging her limits and increasing her national importance and influence."—Mitchell's Geography, edition of 1870. And though already so vast, she is said to cherish continually and persistently the hope of extending her empire southward, which is the direct line of march indicated by Ezekiel, who says that this invader will come "out of the north parts" against Israel, and will come "as a cloud to cover the land." 1Eze. 38, 8, 9, 15, 16. In a document called "The political will of Peter the great," we find the following clause:—"We must keep steadily extending our frontiers northward along the Baltic and southward along the shores of the Black Sea. We must progress as much as possible in the direction of Constantinople and India. He who can once get possession of these points is the real ruler of the world. Europe can and must be subjugated." Its authenticity has been doubted, but the Edinburgh Review says, "independently however, of its authenticity, the will possesses great intrinsic interest, as embodying principles of action which have been notoriously followed out by Russia during the last hundred years, with such modifications as time and circumstances and the variations of the European equilibrium have rendered necessary." Landon, in "History of the Franco-Prussian war," says, (p. 351) "The author could see that it was the religion of Russia to go to the Mediterranean, when in Moscow in '67. 'We must have a front door. The back door frozen up seven months in the year, left us by Peter the great, is not enough. It is the manifest destiny of Russia to go to the Mediterranean,' said the Moscow Gazette in 1867.' The historian Alison says, "The whole Russians, from the emperor on the throne to the serf in the cottage, are inspired with the belief that their mission is to conquer the world. The physical circumstances of Russia are such as to justify, in a great degree these anticipations—Russia will evidently conquer Turkey, and plant her eagles on the dome of St. Sophia." He relates that the emperor Nicholas in speaking of Constantinople, said, "I know that I or my successors must have it; you might as well arrest a stream in its descent from a mountain, as the Russians in their advance to the Hellespont."—Vol. i. ch. viii. 14, 15, 34, 51. When the drying up of the Euphrates (or the decease of the Ottoman, "sick man," as he has been called in diplomatic circles) shall have come to such a crisis as to allow the northern Autocrat to capture Constantinople perhaps the Russian hordes will pause awhile in that celebrated capital to gather additional reinforcements from such allied or subjugated kingdoms of Western Europe as may be included in the invading armies mentioned by Ezekiel, as Gomer and Togarmah. "The descendants of Gomer spread themselves westward over nearly the whole continent of Europe. The descendants of Gomer are mentioned among the northern nations, which will accompany Gog in his conquests in the latter days. Togarmah or Togarmuth, inhabited the confines of Armenia and the Caucasian regions. Togarmah is mentioned with Gomer, Eze. 38, 6."—New Biblical Atlas, by Am. S. S. Union. 1855. These vassal kings and princes with "Persia, Ethiopia, and Lybia" in their train will be a vile host of the wicked rushing to their doom on the fatal field of "Armageddon," which being a name "in the Hebrew tongue," we believe to be a place in the Hebrew land. The New Biblical Atlas describes Armageddon as "a valley forming the great plain of Esdraelon" in Palestine. Of the plain the C. C. says, "The plain of Esdraelon, the Great Plain, or the Vale of Israel, we have already spoken of, as being of vast extent, and having on its northern side the abruptly rising Tabor. It has been the chosen place for encampment in every contest carried on in the country, from the days of Nabuchodonosor King of the Assyrians, in the history of whose war with Arphaxad it is mentioned as 'the great plain of Esdraelon' (Judith i. 8), until the disastrous march of Napoleon Bonaparte from Egypt into Syria. Jews, Gentiles, Saracens, Christians, Frenchmen, Egyptians, Persians, Druses, Turks, and Arabs, warriors out of every nation which is under heaven, have pitched their tents in the plain of Esdraelon, and have beheld the various banners of their nations wet with the dews of Tabor and of Hermon." When the "Prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal" shall thus come against the mountains of Israel, it seems that he will find many Jews colonized there, and in a somewhat flourishing condition, (Eze. 38, 8-14) and that he will also find himself confronted by some power called "The merchants of Tarshish with all the young lions thereof." This brings us to consider,

3. The British maneuvers in the East. What power is meant by Tarshish? If it is to contend with such a colossus as Gog, it must itself be a power of great capacity, and one whose interests will be so endangered by the movements of Gog, as to give it a pretext for going to war against such a formidable adversary; and on just that territory. At the time of writing this I do not see in the world any power answering so remarkably to these requirements, as the British Power. And the remark of Bonaparte that "had he taken Acre he would have changed the face of the world" (Alison iii., xxxiii. 7), shows what an important battle ground is Palestine, even from a merely human point of view. Acre is at the southwestern corner of Esdraelon. We may suppose that such a Goglan invasion of Palestine will cause England and all her allies to mass their forces in that neighborhood in order to defend India and the English route of communication to that highly prized possession. There was force in the saying of Disraeli that the British Empire is no longer European but Asiatic, so much has she at stake in Asia.' And as the British Empire is said to contain a population of 223,640,000 and not a territory on which the sun never sets, we may perceive that these two hostile forces will almost divide the old world between them in the latter-day crisis. Geographers are very much at a loss to define the whereabouts of Tarshish. It seems that anciently there were two countries of that name Eastern and Western, somewhat as now there are East and West Indies. At Eziongaber, a port on the Red Sea, Jehoshaphat built "ships to go to Tarshish." They came once in three years with "gold, silver, ivory, apes and peacocks,"—products of India. 2 Chron. ix, 21; xx. 36. And perhaps this was the Eastern Tarshish. The C. C. says that in 1 Kin. x, 22, "Tharshish must mean some place in the East Indies, or bordering on the Indian Ocean." We also find that from Joppa, now Jaffa, on the Mediterranean, Jonah embarked on "a ship going to Tarshish." And as we do not read so early as that of a Suez canal affording a water route to India, we suppose this is to point out a Western Tarshish, which sent to Tyre "silver, iron, tin and lead." In a table of estimates for 1854 we find England surpassing every other in the world in producing iron, tin and lead. Physical Geography, by Fitch, says, "The most productive tin mining region in the world is Cornwall, England. The Cornish mines have been worked from a very early period, the metal from which formed an article of traffic with the Phœnicians and Greeks before the time of our Savior." Tyre mentioned in Ezk. xxvii. 3, 12, was called "the queen of the Phœnician cities." Hence we suppose the merchants of Tarshish and all the young lions thereof, to indicate the military forces of England, as the old lion, and all her colonies as the young lions, assembled near the southern border of Palestine to there defend India by a decisive battle with Gog and his multitude. It is well known that the lion is the British national symbol; as the eagle is the American. And it is said that four lions are pictured on the coat of arms of those British merchants called "the East India Company." The ties binding England to India and which she will fight so fiercely to preserve, are not ties of religion or blood or contiguous territory, but of merchandize, traffic and wealth. The Mediterranean was anciently called "The Sea of Tarshish," and perhaps for this reason may give its prophetic name to that power which at the hastening crisis will dominate in that sea; and present indications (A. D. 1876), point to the British Power as likely to be, if not already, the dominant power in those waters. Owning the important fortress of Aden which may be called the eastern, and of Gibraltar the western door to the Mediterranean; besides owning Malta and a large interest in the Suez canal she will probably, as the drying up or dismembering process goes on in Turkey, find Egypt and Palestine under her protection as her share of the "sick man's" effects. Thus English merchant ships and naval squadrons may swarm in the Sea of Tarshish; and if, as usual, they take take their name from the waters which they navigate, these may perhaps be the identical ships of Tarshish which shall be first to bring the sons of Jacob from afar, their silver and their gold with them. Lately in official circles England has been called a Mediterranean power. This in ancient geography would mean a Tarshish power. Isa. lx. 9. Hence we view as a fourth sign: 4th, the brightening prospects of Jewish colonization in Palestine. It is a Jew (Disraeli) who lately bargained for, and a Jew (Rothschild) who loaned the money to pay for the shares and interest which England purchased in the Suez canal. And if Palestine should soon fall to England (temporarily), and her government and laws be extended over that now politically blighted land, what would be easier than for the Rothschilds (who are said to own the enormous sum of $3,400,000,000) to buy up vast tracts of Palestine at low figures and invite their brethren from all countries to colonize there, selling or leasing the land in many small farms to the new settler? And it is to be hoped that their sentiment of national patriotism would prevent them from charging more than a very small if any, advance on the wholesale rate. But whether the colonization shall be brought about in this or a different way, we know that it shall be brought about in some way, for the description in Eze. 38, 8–12, requires that at the Goglan invasion a considerable number of Israelites shall be dwelling there in a comparatively prosperous condition. We do not regard this precurrent colonization, however, as the great final gathering, but rather as the few large drops that precede the shower. In a Jewish book of daily prayers for the whole year, I find abundant recurrences of the following and similar words, indicating their faith and hope on the subject: "Let it be acceptable before thee, O Lord, our God! and the God of our fathers, that the holy temple may be speedily rebuilt in our days—and bring us in peace from the four corners of the earth, and lead us securely to our land—O gather our dispersed from among the nations, and assemble our outcasts, from the extremities of the earth, and conduct us unto Zion, thy city, with song, and unto Jerusalem, thy holy residence, with everlasting joy. And we will there, in thy presence, perform the offerings enjoined us." I humbly believe that these and several other great sign-events (as the condition of Papacy; and the vividly awakened expectation of the waiting virgins that "The Bridegroom" will soon appear); are all simultaneously and rapidly converging to the formation of that crisis in human affairs which will bring the Lord Jesus personally upon the scene of action. Yes, at some point in the progress of these events, we look for the personal coming of the Lord, the resurrection and immortalization of the righteous and their association with Him in the miraculous conquest of the world. (It is a dreadful thought that human beings should ever become so utterly wicked and impious as to make war with the Lamb! And yet this is what the vile and apostate kings of the earth and their armies will do; but the Lamb will overcome them. Rev. xvii. 14; xix. 19, 20. Perhaps these armies may even be attended and exhorted on by many white-cravated chaplains, each hired, like a Judas, to come with a band of soldiers against the Lord!) Rev. xvi. 15; ii. 26, 27; xix. 11–21; Psa. cxlix. 5–9. I think the order of events will be nearly thus: During the dissolution of Turkey, Russia captures Constantinople. Shortly after this capture, Russia invades Palestine. England with all her military strength mustered on the spot, protests and resists. The unwarlike Jews gathered in the land are overwhelmed and Jerusalem is captured. Christ, in power, and great glory is seen by His enemies and after miraculously destroying hosts of them in the region of Edom and Armageddon, He subdues the rest of the world and with His risen and glorified saints begins His personal reign. Time however, as it throws more light on the fulfilling prophecies may perhaps detect some inaccuracies in these views of the sign-events. All who would study this interesting subject, would do well to compare together those thrilling words contained in Rev. xv, 12–16; Eze. xxxviii; xxxix; Dan. xi. 40–45; xii. Zec. xiv; Joel iii; Isa. lxiii. 1–6; Dan. ii. 35, 44; vii. 9, 10 22, 27. We live in an age of rapid movements, and the advent crisis may be suddenly and quickly formed. It will be sure to take the great stupid, sleepy and wicked world entirely by surprise. I Thess. v. 3, 3. In connection with the events must also be studied the prophetic periods and times. Chronology and history combined may be called two eyes of prophetic interpretation, by which we plainly perceive its fulfillment. Our ardent prayer is "Come Lord Jesus." (O come and gladden thy saints into life and joy and bliss eternal.

"To show how vividly, even to ordinary observation, these signs are coming into view I clip the following words from a regular newspaper of March 21, 1876. "It seems to be understood very generally among diplomatic circles in Europe that the long-foreseen collision between Russia and England in the East is (comparatively speaking) close at hand. Russia pushes steadily forward on her march of Empire Eastward, just as we do in the opposite direction, and for the same reasons; but she follows up her designs with a system and method unknown to us. This expansion includes India as the permanent basis of Russian supremacy in the Orient, and England, both by pride and necessity, is compelled to dispute the prize with her powerful rival."

The Portugese government has taken so great an interest in the labors of the eminent German geographer, Dr. Petermann, as to appropriate the sum of $100,000 for his use in exploring the interior of Africa, according to his plans.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION adopts as its first and leading feature of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." In this advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortalized saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Letter to Friends.

MRS. O. F. HALL.

What need have we of further proof that the earth is to be the future abiding place of Christ and his church? However, greater proof is abundant. Search the Scriptures.

When were these to occupy? Before or after death?

"The world is to be judged in righteousness by that man (Christ) whom he hath ordained. Whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead."

But this beautiful though sin-cursed world, must be returned to its Edenic beauty and purity; And though we may have been taught from infancy to believe that heaven is above, and that we are to fly there immediately at death, and though heathen fables teach such a heaven, yet the Scriptures do not, and they are the same, yesterday, to-day and forever.

"The purified must have a throne, a king, and his subjects, and what place more beautiful or more wonderfully wrought than earth with the curse removed, its rarest blossoms perpetual, its fruits perfected, with no law of decay or defect, its King righteous, its inhabitants immortalized and deathless?

However, take not our word; look to God's Word. Read Isa. xi. Christ is there promised as well as some of the work he is to do.

Jer. xxiii. 5: "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous branch, and a king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth."

Ezek. xxv. 26: "In the overthrow of the throne of the last wicked prince of Israel."

To whom is it promised? He whose right it is. Has Christ (who is meant in the above) ever been promised a throne and a kingdom? Scripture answers. Luke xxxii. 33.

The Lord God shall give him the throne of his father David. Is not that the one overturned? How long shall he reign on this throne? Forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

And David's throne was on the earth—so his kingdom is not to be above, See Dan. vii. 27.

Dan. ii. 44: "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, that shall never be destroyed, or given to other people, but shall stand forever."

Amos ix. 11: "I will raise up the tabernacle of David, which is fallen, and will build it as in days of old."

Acts xv. 16: "I will return, and will build again the tabernacle which is fallen down and I will set it up."

Rev. xi. 15: "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever.

When shall Christ occupy his throne? Matt. xxv. 25: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." See Mark viii. 38; Luke ix. 12.

How shall Christ come to reign? In a cloud, with power and great glory.

Is it not plain that earth is the future paradise of Christ and his chosen? that he is to occupy the throne of his father David, and reign forever? If not, then words have no meaning.

How are we to become heirs of the promise? By believing the promises, and being obedient to all the commands of God—not a part of them, but all.

Acts ii. 38: Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ."

Gal. iii. 27: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promises.

Is it essential that we believe the promises?

Gal. iii. 6: "Abraham believed them, and it was accounted to him for righteousness." Verse 9: "So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham."

Did the apostles believe this doctrine? Hear Paul.

Acts ii. 4: "But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which ye call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and the prophets." Read verse 5.

Acts xxvi. 1: "And when Agrippa stood before King Agrippa, he affirms: And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers; unto which promise our twelve tribes instantly serving God day and night, hope to come, for which hope sake, King Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews."

Col. i. 23: "If ye continue in the faith and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven, whereof I, Paul, am made a minister."

When did the apostles expect their reward?

2 Tim. iv. 8: "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but to all them who love his appearing."

"Looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ."

"Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, for he is faithful that promised."

1 Peter v. 4: "And when the chief shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."

1 Jno. iv. 2: "And now, little children, abide in him; that when he shall appear, we may not be ashamed before him at his coming."

Jno. iii. 2: "But we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

Acts ii. 39: "For the promise is unto you and your children, and all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord your God shall call."

Acts iii. 19: "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out,"

Acts iii. 20: "And he shall send Jesus Christ which before was preached unto you."

Acts iii. 21: "Whom the heavens must receive until the times of the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

Friends, shall we change this truth of God into a lie, and still go on believing the doctrines of men and brethren? We have endeavored to present a few passages concerning the great plan of salvation according to the light God has given us, and if they lead any of you to search the Scriptures we shall feel that it is not in vain; for if you search prayerfully, you will no longer be obliged to twist certain passages so out of the original as to lose all semblance of the Word of God. All will harmonize and blend in one grand whole. Doubts and difficulties will disappear.

There is but one doctrine, one plan of salvation, to all who will accept. One hope, one baptism. You will find that no Scripture is of private interpretation, nor can you study too much, or learn more than is meet for you.

We have not chosen these passages because we disbelieve or discard all the rest. Oh, no; we believe it in one grand whole, and all is plain when we do not pervert it, but everything in its own order. When we accept it as it is, and not spiritualize it into nothingness, we can see our way clear and no passage will trouble us.

You are at liberty to ask any questions you choose, and by the help of God I will reply. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. May he give you hearts of understanding, and bless you with an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom.

Behold! to Obey is Better Than Sacrifice. This is the Love of God, That We Keep His Commandments.

The subject of obedience to God has been urged on my attention by hearing J. W. Dale, D. D., Clifton Springs, N. Y., and reading his first two volumes on baptism. It is transcendently pretentious and pre-eminently adapted to deceive if it were possible, the very elect. Mat. xxiv. 24.

Brevity being imperative, I state some primary truth, to embody the principle, on which it is safe to proceed in my response. God, the grandest word in language, has been by men mis-used to denote a vast variety of objects in earth and heaven. Hence, Dr. Dale might give material for three times your volumes; against all determinate use of the divine name and yet, like the apparent obstacle of the twelve barrels of water on Elijah's altar, they would only confirm the supremacy, presence and power of God! The God over all—when the test comes!

So of circumcision, priesthood, altar, sacrifice, Sabbath and king in Israel. These terms have been mis-used through over three thousand years, while yet they hold their authorized usage to all who believe and know the truth pertaining to redemption from sin and death, and him that had the power of death. Heb. ii. 14

They pre-figured the offices and work of the Redeemer, but were worthless when used out of their very order, or aside from that shadow of good things to come. Since Christ has come there is a change also in the law and ordinances. Heb. vii. 12–22; x. 8–38; Mat. iii. 1–16; xx. 20–30; xxviii. 19,20.

The Lord's supper, (so named this once) shows his death—till he come. 1 Cor. xi. 26. Baptise and baptism embrace more than a reference to his atoning sacrifice and burial, in that it embodies the most distinct promise to the obedient of a part in his resurrection. Rom. vi. 3–5; Col. ii. 12; iii 1; 1 Pet. iii. 20–21.

John's ministry—the beginning of the gospel—was the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins! John the baptist—John the baptiser—occurs fourteen times, water twenty times, and the varied forms of the word baptize, over one hundred times, all concurrent terms. Then we note the authority of God in John's baptising, the example of Jesus, the Messiah himself, and his commission to go and preach, baptizing them (who believe—not others). They were baptized in the river Jordan—in the water—water being named over twenty time, as that in which they were baptized! Nay more, "Ye were buried with him by baptism—planted together in the likeness of his death—wherein also, ye are risen with Him, through the faith of the operation of God, who raised Him from the dead."

Again, ye have obeyed from the heart, that form (type) of doctrine which was delivered you—(whereto ye were delivered, margin).

To close and crown this brief, I note that the Holy Spirit is administered by Christ, which qualifies its recipients for being baptized in water, after the example of their Lord. Acts ii. 1–43; x. 47–48.

In contrast, Dr. Dale emphasizes "sprinkling." This word occurs twice Heb. xii. 24; 1 Pet. i. 2, and four times, Heb. ix 13–21; x. 22. He spoke in favor of "sprinkling," and so writes.

But mark! This word is rantizo,—another word; derived from another age; another priesthood and another law, that regulated the worship of Israel. It may suffice to ask, Do you, doctor, keep the law? Are you thus fallen from grace? Gal. v. 4–6.

The doctor's fulcrum for argument lies, not in the word of God, but in what he thinks the logical error or infirmity of the Baptists' reasoning. He quotes and answers them at great length, as if in confuting their misapprehension (as he takes it to be) he overturns all that stands in his way, and establishes his newly invented baptism and condition of ceremonial purification. Note without the ceremony!! except, like a dissolving view, it may be without baptism! without water! without being buried by baptism! without the form of doctrine!—or anything to justify a reference to the resurrection! If we could grant him his premises, we should say he has achieved far more than he dared even to dream of. For then, he would have subverted Peter and Paul, John and Jesus; and the most profound dispensational ordinance in the gospel of God. When I heard him, and further, when I read, I felt constrained to reflect on my standing, and that of all baptized penitents from the incipient gospel of John, the Baptizer till now, Mark i. 1–11. As I reflected I heard the word of God, of Jesus, and the holy Evangelists and apostles, rehearsing as it were, anew, the One Baptism in its honored place among the sevenfold unities, that comprehend the sum of truth, pertaining to God in Christ, achieving his revealed redemption of man and the world from sin and death. Gal. iv. 4–6.

No other ordinance has been so sanctioned—so enthroned. No other ordinance embodies so much of Jesus' resurrection and life, nor so much of promise to the obedient. No other contains the form of doctrine, or embraces the circuit of the gospel; that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried and that he was raised again the third day, according to the Scriptures. 1 Cor. xv. 1 4.

The doctrine determines the form, or the form the doctrine. They conform to each other.

Now doctor, give up your wayward books, and come back to your Bible! Build on the rock of ages, and leave the shifting vapors of human theory to the winds.

As you assume great boldness against those who fear the Lord and obey his command to "repent and be baptized, every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins," and I feel constrained to take your motto, vol. 20, and in the name of the coming Judge, contradict still more boldly. Did not Adam loose life and his Eden home by disobedience? Did not the nation of Israel loose their city sanctuary and law by disobedience? Did not Moses imperil his life by omitting to circumcise his son? Ex. iv. 24, 26. Did not the Pharisees reject the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him (John)? Luke vii. 27, 30.

Did not Christ guard his truth, as by the cherubim and flaming sword, against all alterations? Rev. xxii. 18, 19.

Yes! yes indeed!

How, then, could you, a standard bearer for our Lord, presume to discard the word of God—the example and commission of Christ—the apostolic reference to water, death, burial and the resurrection in baptism? Why object to the words which the Holy Ghost teacheth, except to insert others by subtlety, which subvert them? Does not this look like the pride and presumption of that man of sin?

Is there no wrath to come, on those "who obey not the gospel?" Mat. iii. 7-12; Thess. i. 8-9; ii. 3, 8; Heb. iii; iv.

In noticing the more special positions taken by the doctor, I remark that whatever variety of definition may be claimed for the word baptism, there is no known metamorphosis to make it rantism, (sprinkling), nor to change believers unto non-believers, for its subjects! However varied the classic usage of the word baptize, it confers no authority or excuse for his sweeping conclusion that the word makes demand (of Christians) for a condition, and not a model action, (for that is the thing the Lord hath not spoken. Deut. xviii. 22. Some move or way of doing it, is essential, anyhow, even though it be to make the whole subject as he does, ridiculous!)

On Judaic baptism he says, "The word makes demand for a condition of ceremonial purity."—Vol. 2 p. 238.

Dear sir, did you never that every part of the temple worship was most precise, as to the ceremony! Nay more, think of the irreverence, the unbelief and postasy of heart, that presumes to ignore the spirit of truth, the water and the blood! (or water, buried by baptism, wherein ye are risen, etc.) Must the word and the ordinances of God, through both dispensations, ooze out at the little end o' this new and pretentious theory of an undefined condition! which looks a little like believers' baptism, as the "golden calf" of Aaron was like the God of Israel.

A catalogue of forty version, that I have just read, and near one hundred distinguished authorities (Prof. Stuart the doctor's own teacher, among them) give us immerse, dip into water, and the nearest equivalent, as the import of baptism! These are sustained by the voice from heaven, and thus it becometh us; (that is, Jesus and those in him) to fulfill all righteousness, Mat. iii. 14–17; buried, planted in the likeness of his death, wherein ye are risen with him, etc.

This is enough for me. Here I stand so far firm in faith as to acceptance at the judgment! Now for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and for the love of the spirit, I beseech you to abandon all outside Jesus' us—all who wish to have it so, (that a vague condition of ceremonial purity, is better than the example of your Lord) and learn to the joy of your heart, that God hath magnified His word above all His name. Psa. xviii. 3, 2; John xii. 48; Heb. iv. 12-13. Pardon my compelled brevity, and believe me.

Yours for truth and grace. Amen.

Revelation.

The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John; who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw. Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things that are written therein; for the time is at hand. Rev. i. 1-3.

In the New Testament the Greek word Apocalypse occurs eighteen times. Its strict etymological signification, according to Schleusner, is "removing a veil," and the Latin word revelatio, from which the English word Revelation is derived, also literally means "throwing back a veil;" so that the term "unveiling" would be the nearest equivalent in our language by which to express the idea of the original in a single word.

We subjoin an extract from Dr. Cumming to show what is the subject matter of the grand symbolistic unveiling of this wonderful book:

"The words which are rendered in our version, 'the Revelation of Jesus Christ,' have been misapprehended. It does not mean the revelation made by Jesus Christ, but the revelation of Jesus Christ himself. In other words, it does not mean Christ the revealer, but Christ the revealed; a revelation or apocalypse, or portrait of Christ, which was communicated by Christ to John the seer, in Patmos. And that I am correct in this interpretation will be plain, I think, to your comprehension, from passages where the word occurs—and the word occurs very frequently in Scripture; but unhappily, in our admirable translation—justly the subject of almost universal eulogy—there is a change of rendering, though there be none in the original. For instance: in the First Epistle to the Corinthians i. 7, it is in our version—'So that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.' Now in the original it is 'waiting for the apocalypsis of our Lord Jesus Christ.' Again: In the Second Epistle to the Thessalonians, i. 7, you will find another rendering, but it is still the same original word; 'And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven.' It is, literally translated—'in the apocalypse of the Lord Jesus Christ from heaven.' Again: In 1 Pet. i. 7, 13, we meet the same word again differently translated. And here I may remark how great a pity it is that the same word should be the subject of a variety of translations. If it had been translated in one way throughout the New Testament, it would have made the beauty and the force of the meaning of the Spirit of God evolve more vividly. We read, in 1 Pet. i. 7,—'That it might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ.' In the original it is 'in the apocalypse,' in the revelation 'of Jesus Christ.' And in the thirteenth verse of the chapter—'Gird up the loins of your mind, be sober and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ.' Here again it is in the original—'in the apocalypse of Jesus Christ.' And in all these passages it means, not a disclosure, or revelation, or manifestation made by Christ, but made concerning, or of Christ. In other words, the title of this book is not Christ the revealer, but Christ the revealed; and this revelation of Christ, we are told, was also given by Christ to John his servant in the Isle of Patmos.

This book, then, is an inspired portrait of the Son of God; it is the full description of his personal glory, to which prophets and martyrs looked forward with waiting hope—an apocalypse so brilliant that the sight of the Jew was dazzled by its distant splendor, so that he could not see the intervening valleys of Gethsemane and Calvary, through which Christ had to pass, in order to emerge and inherit his predestined glory. Very beautifully, therefore, the book begins—'Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him'; and very appropriately, this book closes—'Surely, I come quickly; Amen. Even so come, Lord Jesus.' It begins with the advent, and ends with it."

For the resplendent unveiling of the glorious Kingly majesty of our Lord Jesus Christ, the church has been waiting for 1800 years. A miniature revelation was given on the Mount of Transfiguration, but we now wait for the parting skies to reveal the Savior in the exceeding great and eternal weight of glory that will accompany the future apocalypse of the Son of God when he comes in his own glory, and in the glory of the Father, with all the holy angels. We wait to witness the inauguration of the King of kings and Lord of lords, on Mount Zion, to the empire of the world. We then expect a reformation of all the wrongs and abuses growing out of every form of human government. Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly. Amen.

Sententious Paragraphs.

Observe, there are evil inclinations which may be conquered by avoiding the occasions which call them forth, and there are others which must be vanquished by resistance. But to perform either, we need not fly from the world, but from ourselves only.

Some one defines genius as that power which enables us to carry the feelings of childhood into after life.

Spare moments are the gold dust of time; and Young was writing a true as well as a striking line, when he taught that "Sands make the mountain, and moments make the year." Of all the portions of our life, spare moments are the most fruitful in good or evil. They are the gaps through which temptations find the easiest access to the garden of the soul.

The moving finger writes, and having writ,
Moves on; nor all thy piety, nor all thy wit,
Can lure it back to cancel half a line,

There is a thirty thousand dollar tomb in Greenwood. A stone mason made it. In the outskirts lies a pauper under a rosebush. God made it.—Danbury News.

The happiness of life consists, like the day, not in single flashes of light, but in continued mild serenity. The most beautiful period of the heart's existence is in this calm and equable light, even although it be only moonshine or twilight. Now the mind alone can obtain for us this heavenly cheerfulness and peace.

Alas! how many will recall their disregard to their parents who deserve aid! This will always bring down the just judgments of heaven, and we have never known a single child that neglected that duty or failed in filial affection to the authors of their being—that ever prospered permanently.

People will forgive a great man's faults far more readily than praise a small man's virtues.

It is much easier to think aright without doing it, than to do right without thinking aright. Just thoughts may fail of producing just deeds, although just deeds always beget just thoughts. For when the heart is pure and straight, there is hardly anything which can mislead the understanding in matters of immediate concernment; but the clearest understanding can do little in purifying an impure heart, or the strongest in straightening a crooked one.

THE RESTITUTION.

A. A. CRAVEN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAR 14, 1877.

SICKNESS has delayed putting up and mailing our tracts. We have them transferred to the book and will try to send immediately. We are very limited for help.

WE will give communications a place as fast as we can. We have some very long articles on the Kingdom which survey nearly the same ground and are illustrated by employing nearly the same quotations. We want some living stirring articles on the present; something that goes home to practical duty in our lives and in our preparation for a soon coming judgment. The past is gone, the future is with God and we can only act in the present. Let us, in our differences, live and act as brethren and not fall out by the way.

WE have concluded to defer the articles on the Great Pyramid till week after next, in order to ascertain how many extra copies will be needed. We shall try to procure a cut illustrating the passages and galleries of the Interior. Several have sent in for more or less numbers in addition to the regular issue. We want to know how many will be required before we print, as we shall not print very many more than are actually subscribed for. That Pyramid was anciently one of the seven wonders of the world, and is much more so now, from its wonderful revelations. It is a history of the past, and a prophecy of the future. All that are wanted must be ordered before we print. To our subscribers they will go in the regular issue. Extras mailed at 5 cts. a copy.

Special Responsibilities.

"We will not have this man to reign over us," was the decision of the Jewish people, after the kingdom of God, and the Messiahship of Jesus of Nazareth had been fully proclaimed, and his claims to royalty fully demonstrated to them. They were quite willing that he should heal their sick, miraculously feed their hungry multitudes, by multiplying a few loaves and fishes to meet the wants of thousands, and perform any ministrations that would not interfere with their own views and teachings in regard to God's purposes respecting them as a nation. But to come into their synagogues and rent temple, and claim to be the Son of God, and heir of David's royal throne, was most intolerable to the Scribes, and Pharisees, and other high dignitaries of that nation, and they not only treated these claims with contempt, but gave themselves no rest till God's Messiah was nailed to the Roman cross. The result was that the kingdom of God was taken from this rebellious race, and transferred to a nation bringing forth its fruits. For rejecting God's covenanted King, that nation lost a glorious pre-eminence, their temple was burned, their worship obliterated, and they themselves were torn from the land of promise to become outcasts and a byword among all nations till Gentile times should be complete. John the Baptist preached the Kingdom of God and solemnly warned them of impending vengeance; Jesus himself preached the Kingdom, and wrought convincing miracles to prove his claim to its crown and throne till their determined obduracy wrung his Divine loving heart, and the Son of God wept in agony over the doomed city. As a crowning proof God raised him from the dead, and inspired apostles urged his claims and preached the Kingdom, but it availed not in convincing the nation, and wrath came upon the wicked rejecters to the uttermost. But God's dispensational ministry discharged its responsibility. They preached the King and the Kingdom, and condemnation was not upon them for the rejection of their message, but upon the rejecters themselves.

The great Christian organizations and denominations are very similarly circumstanced in this closing period of the gospel dispensation as were the Jews at the close of their national times. They are very willing to have Christ preached as a Sin-offering and a Savior; they are willing to hear about his exaltation at God's right hand; they are even willing to hear something about being with him after death when they can have this world no longer; but, O, the test question must come prominently before the world, and before the professed adherents of Christ at the close of Gentile times, and its acceptance or rejection become a test, as in the times just before Jerusalem's overthrow. "This gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness to all nations, and then shall the end come." To deliver this message of a soon coming kingdom and proclaim that Christ himself will very soon forcibly establish his claim to the sceptre of universal empire over all the world, is anything but glad tidings to the powers that be. And it is no less distasteful to the popular churches and the revered ministry of this boasted age of enlightenment and scientific progress. But it must be proclaimed, and on some instrumentality devolves the solemn responsibility of asserting the claims of the ascended Messiah to the dominion of the earth, and of unfolding all the particulars in relation to his kingdom as to its joint heirs, its metropolis, and its subject nationalities. Now, to be pointed and plain in this matter, the duty of preaching the kingdom of God devolves on us who have learned something of its nature and proximity, and we can not rid ourselves of the obligations we owe to God in this matter. It is true that it is, and always has been, a source of division. It has divided households, and it has divided larger associations. It was a fruitful source of discord and division in the days of the Savior himself, and he foretold that it would continue such to the very end. Alas, in our day the family, the church organization, and the larger combinations, are placed in direct antagonism by urging this troublesome theme. Still the duty of proclaiming the kingdom of God remains imperative.

If great revivalists can attract crowds, and cast out some of the demons of dishonesty and drunkenness, let them work; hinder them not; but we must preach the kingdom of God. If the membership in some denominations are striving for the higher life, let them work; to join them in this pursuit will never release us from our dispensational charge of heralding the soon coming Messiah, and the establishment of God's kingdom over the nations. In this time of tarrying on the part of the bridegroom, and of slumbering on the part of the virgins, the disposition is to conciliate rather than to declare God's truth, whether men will hear, or whether they will forbear.

The coming of our Lord Jesus Christ will soon be precipitated on this world. The long lines of consecutive prophecy as fulfilled in history proclaim, "The Lord is coming;" the arithmetic of the wonderful numberer (margin Dan. viii. 10) declares, "The Lord is coming." The signs of the times and the political changes that now startle the world, herald "The Lord is coming;" and monumental stones cry out, after a silence of four millenniums, "The Lord is coming." That coming is to establish a kingdom; and that coming, and that kingdom you and I must proclaim at our peril. It must be heralded at the expense, if need be, of dividing families, churches, or larger associations. Christ and his kingdom first, and all these, if we can have them afterward. Dear brethren, we shall preach but a few sermons more; we shall issue, in our sacrifices, but a few RESTITUTIONS more; the church is doing its last work, a crown of glory is at stake, and Christ is at the door. Let us be true to him, for it is too late to fix up for this world. May we be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless.

The Cheerful Giver.

God is a cheerful giver: "He giveth us richly all things richly to enjoy."

He freely gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life. This is the unspeakable gift.

All creation, from the tiny insect and flower to the highest form of created things, all say that God is a cheerful giver. The great variety of fruits and flowers and perfumes all declare this truth.

But to be loved by God when we can give so little—what a privilege! It is a pleasant thing to be loved by the great and good of earth, but this is nought, compared with God's loving us when conscious of how unworthy we are of his love and care.

One of the factory hands in a Massachusetts factory came to a poor woman who had only sixty two cents of her earnings left to carry her and her two children through the week, saying to her that they were making up a purse for a poor woman. She gave twenty-five cents. The man afterwards came to her saying she was the poor woman they were collecting money for, and presented her with twenty-five dollars! How much like God's way of dealing with us! CHAS. BOARDMAN.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 9.—Prince Gortschakoff will soon hand over the direction of foreign affairs to the Privy Council. It is authoritatively stated that General Ignatieff, in conversation with foreign statesmen, will demonstrate that Russia aims not at the pursuing of a separate Eastern policy, but at obtaining declarations from the Powers that it is the Porte's duty to execute the conference programme, and unless the Porte fulfills that duty, any European Power will be at liberty to claim its fulfillment.

The New Heaven and Earth.

There can be no doubt but what the heaven and earth, sun, moon and stars are used as symbols to represent the emperors, kings, rulers and governments of earth; and their passing away the passing away of the present order of things. This I am sure was clearly shown in former articles. A few examples of this kind must suffice for our present purpose. I would refer the reader to Heb. xii. 26-28, as a striking example.

The apostle says, "But now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but heaven. And this word yet once more signifieth the removing of those things which are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things cannot be shaken may remain."

1. The things shaken are removed out of the way.

2. Heaven and earth shall be shaken.

3. The kingdoms of this world are removed out of the way that the kingdom of God, which cannot be removed, may remain as the immovable kingdom of God

Therefore (4) heaven and earth represent the kingdoms of the world in contrast with the kingdom of God.

This will not only be true at the end of this age, but also at the end of the next age. The old heaven and earth, or the great red dragon with seven heads, ten horns and a tail reaching the stars, will be restrained one thousand years; and then be loosed out of his prison, and having been reconstructed under the leadership of Gog and Magog, will invade the beloved city and the camp of the saints to battle; but no battle will be fought, for fire will come down from God out of heaven and devour them. Thus will literally pass away the last great organized rebellion against God, represented by heaven and earth. Having thus graphically described these grand events as they will transpire upon earth at the close of the future age, in the great transition period between the seventh millennium, and the millenniums beyond, he represents in panorama, the same grand events. He says, "And I saw a great white throne and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven passed away; and there no place for them." Rev. xx. 1-11.

That the heaven and earth that pass away beyond the thousand years will not be the literal heaven and earth, is evident.

1. From the fact that subsequently, John sees the dead standing upon earth.

2. If the literal earth should pass away with it, but John sees, still further down the stream of time, the old sea, in whose cold depths the unnumbered dead have been deposited, rolling its entombed millions to the shore. He also sees the earth delivering up its buried and unburied dead in it.

The literal heaven and earth will not pass away, but the symbolic heaven and earth have and will pass away, as we shall soon prove.

That Paul's third heaven with which paradise was associated, and to which he was caught away in vision, and in whose blooming garden Christ promised to remember the penitent thief, will not be a three-storied heaven, rising one story above another—in whose lower story man resides, in whose second story the stars flash and in whose third story God and angels dwell. It will be the new order or arrangement, represented by the new heaven and earth. Peter divides off the history of man into three dispensations, with their three successive symbolic heavens and earths to represent them. He says, "For this they are willingly ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water; whereby the world that there was, being overflown with water perished." 2 Pe. iii. 5, 6. What perished? the heaven and earth? No; but the kosmos, or "world of ungodly men," according to the same apostle, ii. 5. But the apostle continues, "But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." vii.

1. The heaven and earth which are now, are placed in contrast with the heavens and earth which then were.

2. They are not reserved unto fire for their own destruction, but for the destruction of ungodly men.

Thus, their being melted, dissolved, and passing away, only represent the dissolution and passing away, 'mid the thunders and earthquakes of war, of the organized world, or governments of earth. But the apostle adds, "Nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." v. 13.

Please note, (1) nevertheless, that is notwithstanding two worlds of ungodly men pass away, we look for a new heaven in contrast with two old ones; and a world of godly men in contrast with two worlds of ungodly men. And (2) we expect this new arrangement according to his promise.

At the time Peter used this language there was but one promise that God proposed to create a new heaven and a new earth, and that is recorded in Isaiah lxv. 17, 25.

The great God speaks, let all give attention. He says, "For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth " but be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create; for behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing and her people a joy." Ver. 17, 18. Thus God commences the grand work of creating the new heaven and earth, by restoring Jerusalem, the metropolis of his kingdom, and Jerusalem's people, the Israelites, or in other words, he commences the creation of the new heavens and earth, by restoring his kingdom and its metropolis; and as the glorious result, Jerusalem will rejoice and her people be glad forever. And not only so, but the great God says, "And I will rejoice in Jerusalem and joy in my people; and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying." Ver. 19.

Thus, clearly and unmistakably teaching that the passing away of the old heavens and earth, and the ushering in the new heavens and new earth are nothing more or less than the abolition of the old order, or kosmos of ungodly men, and the organization of a order, or kosmos in which righteousness shall prevail. In the introduction of this new order of things the revelator sees, first the new heaven and earth, and then the holy city, new Jerusalem, with the thrones and royalty within it; and the organized nations under this new constitution without, bringing the glory and honor of a conquered and loyal world to lay them at the feet of Messiah and his royal cabinet. And, as described in the language of God to the prophet, we read of the glory within this city new Jerusalem, in Revelations: "And God shall wipe away the tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." Rev. xxi. 1 4.

But while all within this city are happy and immortal, without is mortality and probation, sin and death. While within the metropolitan city of the world is the long sought for panacea for all diseases, without are mortal men to be healed. While within is paradise restored, with the tree of life in the midst of that blooming garden of the Lord, without are mortals upon probation, who through obedience to the commandments of God, will have access to the tree of life, to eat and live forever as Adam would have been permitted to do, had he obeyed the commandments of his creator, instead of disobeying, and being driven from the garden, to prevent his eating and living forever. Please read Rev. xxii. 1; xiii. 14, 16.

Nothing is more clearly taught than that in the new heaven and earth, or the new arrangement represented by them, there will be mortality, probation, sinners and righteous men, mixed up. Thus, we read that the leaves of the tree of life is for the healing of the nations. And that there will be individual probation is evident from the fact that those who keep the commandments of God (whether mortal kings or subjects) pass through the gates into the city, leaving without wicked men, called dogs, sorcerers, whoremongers, murderers, idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie. "Whosoever" means any body, king or subject.

If the foregoing does not involve individual obedience and disobedience, there is nothing in the Bible which can convey such an idea to the mind.

Of the same import is the Lord's description of the moral status of the world in the new heaven and earth dispensation, or under the same order or constitution. While righteousness shall overwhelmingly triumph over sin and unrighteousness, there will nevertheless be probation, sin, sinners and death. According to Zech. 14th, it will be a transition period between all past dispensations and all future dispensations.

The following is God's description of the moral and social status of the world after he shall have created the new heaven and earth, or world in which godly men shall be made to the ascendant, as ungodly men had been in the two former dispensations. He says, "There shall be no more from this time forward an untimely death, or an old man who hath not filled his days; for the elder shall be as a young man at a hundred years, but the sinner dying an hundred years old shall be accursed;" or as other translations render it, "shall be cursed with death." Thus teaching that none but sinners need die. "And they shall build houses and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build and another inhabit; they shall not plant and another eat; for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands. They shall not labor in vain nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them. And it shall come to pass, that before they call I will answer; and while they are yet speaking I will hear. The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock; and dust shall be the serpents' meat. They shall not hurt or destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord." Isa. lxv. 20-27.

1. The foregoing is God's description of the status morally, socially and physically of the new heaven and earth, or the new order of things represented by them.

2. He commences to create a new heaven and earth by restoring the kingdom of Israel, and his metropolis; or by establishing a righteous kosmos or kingdom, in contrast with two worlds of ungodly men.

3. In this new arrangement, or kingdom, though in subordination, and a comparatively small minority, sin, sinners and death will still linger upon earth for an least at olam, or age.

4. After the world is civilized, or taught of God, (Isa. ii. 1-3), and the means of health and life are available to all the inhabitants of earth, (Rev. xxii. 2; Eze. xlvii. 12; Rev. xxii. 14, 15), none but sinners will die, and then not a natural, but judicial death.

5. It seems to teach that each centennial will be a period of probation, when the righteous shall be rewarded with an eternal access, or title, to the tree of life, as Adam would have made sure by obedience, to eat of the tree of life and live forever; (Rev. xxii. 14; Gen. iii. 22), or if, 'mid the light, privilege, and glory of that new era, they shall continue incorrigible sinners they shall be executed. The last army will be composed of the last installment of this class of sinners—desperate because they will have resisted the powers of the world to come so long. Rev. xxii. 15; Heb. vi. 5, 6.

6. Mortal men all over the earth will pursue the laudable avocations of agriculture and horticulture. Isa. lxv. 21, 22; Micah iv. 3, 8; Isa. 21, 23.

7. Natural generations will continue though reft of the curse. Isa. lxv. 23.

8. Have You Accepted Christ?

Have you accepted Christ? Not the Christ of tradition, not the Christ of opinion, but the Christ of the Bible? There is something more to be believed, than the fact that Jesus is the Christ. That he is the Christ is significant. It means that he is the annointed of God,—the one set apart by the consecrating oil, as the king of all the earth in the future ages of eternity. "This is the King of the Jews," the Prince, and Savior, and Redeemer. Prince now; King hereafter. We must accept him as such. We must search the Scriptures and believe all that the prophets have said concerning him.

It is Jesus in Genesis, Jesus in the Law, Jesus in the types, Jesus in the Psalms, Jesus in the prophets, Jesus all the way through,—the one great central orb in the plan of redemption. God has chosen him to work out that plan, and we, if we would be saved, must learn what that plan is. And when we have learned the plan we must become obedient to its requirements. We must hear the sayings and do them. The good works of the moralist will not ensure our salvation. The golden rule is not all that we must believe and practice. God winked at ignorance once, now he commands all men everywhere to repent. And when God commands we must obey. We may not say, we will do so much and leave the rest undone, —all that God requires is little enough. When we have done all we are still unprofitable servants. God has given us the Gospel as the power of God unto salvation. That Gospel has its foundation upon a certain little dead made to Abraham, which conveys to Christ a the seed of Abraham, and to those who through faith and obedience become heirs with him, the inheritance and rulership of the world. The crowns of which so much is sung and said mean something. They imply royalty with all its attendant honors in the world to come.

The obedient to "the word of faith" are sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty, men and women of a royal line,—the noblest that ever walked upon this sin cursed earth. Only one son of a king inherits the crown of his father; we are all to be of the first born ones through a resurrection from the dead, and are to be associated with Jesus in the rulership of the world. Do you believe it? Do you believe that Jesus is coming soon to establish a kingdom upon this earth? Are you praying "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done upon earth even as in heaven"? If you do not thus believe, if you do not thus pray, you have not accepted Christ.

The earth "hath God given to the children of men," "the earth abideth forever"—"we receive a kingdom that cannot be moved." "To whom swore he that they should not enter into his rest but to them that believed not? So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief."

The gospel was preached unto them, but "the word preached did not profit, because not mixed with faith in them that heard." "The works were finished from the foundation of the world, but they to whom the Gospel was first preached, went not in because of unbelief."

Let professed Christians in these days take heed lest the same fate befall them for the same cause. What God says must be believed. The entering in, hinges upon the faith, and that faith must be the faith of the gospel.

We may not go about to establish our own righteousness, in our own way. The faith is as essential as the life. We cannot live the one, without having the other. We may choose the evil and die, or lay hold of the good and live. We can accept Christ as our Savior and Redeemer, and as earth's future king, and take his name legally upon us by being baptized into his death, and rising to newness of life; or, we can reject him and perish. Let us strive for the mastery lawfully, that we may be crowned in the day of the Lord Jesus.

S. ROXANA WINCE.

Heart-Power.

Heart-power is of all others the most beneficent. Physical energy subdues matter, but the soul triumphs by the force of its affections over the mightiest of obstacles. The heart of Christ is the seat and centre of his supremacy over so many millions of our race. He is not ranked as a genius, nor as an orator. He disdained the boasted charms of philosophy. Yet his speech distilled as the dew, and his words have an inexhaustible power, which neither dullness, nor ignorance, nor depravity, nor unbelief can resist. If we seek to find the reason of their power, we shall find it in that love which vitalizes all the truth they express. Here, then, lies the secret of Christian usefulness. Ministers of the gospel, Sabbath school teachers, parents, and all who desire to impart the gospel, must let it run through the fervid affections of the heart. Cold, intellectual instruction may have its way in the schools, and in those discussions which relate to general public affairs; but in the kingdom of Heaven the heart is master. They who put most of heart into their work have most success, and reap the largest satisfactions. This is a truth too often forgotten in these days, when so much stress is laid on methods.—Christian at Work.

One of the best things that we have ever heard of Carlyle is told by Miss Martineau, to the effect that he has always been troubled about his literary style and that he has never been pleased with anything he has written. And another good thing in regard to this distinguished man is vouched for as authentic. He happened, not long ago, to be where a number of so-called philosophers and scientific men were present and were airing their opinions. The theory of Evolution had been asserted with much confidence, and under the supposition that he was a sympathizer, and not at all fettered by religious scruples, he was challenged to deliver his opinion as to Darwinism. Gathering himself up and speaking in a tone that silenced laughter, Mr. Carlyle replied, "Gentlemen, you make man a little higher than the tadpoles. I hold with the prophet David—'Thou madest him a little lower than the angels.'"—N. Y. Observer.

The Avenger.

Behold he comes from Edom,
With garments dyed in red;
With mighty power his saints to save,
And seize his sleeping dead.

Why art thou red in thy array,—
And all thy raiment stained?
Like him that in the wine press treads—
The mystery now explain.

The wine-press I have trod alone,
When there was none to save;—
Their blood shall all my raiment stain;
When my redeemed I free.

For vengeance now is in my heart,
Fury shall me sustain;
In anger I will tread them down
Never to rise again.

The year of my redeemed has come
When all shall be set free,
Who love the coming of the Lord,
And year of jubilee.

The mighty angel with his chain
The dragon then will seize;
And bind him fast, then shut him up
And his dark prison seal.

That he no more, with subtle art,
The nations may deceive;
Until one thousand years expire,
There can be no reprieve.

But when the thousand years are past,
His prison-house he leaves
And nations on the breadth of earth
Into revolt deceives.

Then Satan all the wicked host
Round Satan's city hinges—
Both Gog and Magog there arrayed
To fight the King of kings.

But when around the holy court
His numerous hosts are placed,
Then fire from God will them destroy
And end the wicked race.

Correspondence.

Editor Restitution:—As I am about to change my place of residence, I will have to ask you to change my paper from Oregon, Holt county, Missouri, to White Cloud, Doniphan county, Kansas.

Now, brethren, as nothing gives me more pleasure than short reports from the different churches of the One Body, I will attempt a sketch of our own here. Brother Thomas E. Adams sowed the first seed here about eight or nine years ago, and under his zealous labors ten were called out and baptized by him, and many more much interested, when he moved away to Kansas. Myself and wife were among the number baptized by him, and our prayers have ever followed him, for the first light of the glorious gospel, as taught by him. Since that time Brother Orem, of Kansas, has preached many able and interesting discourses for us, and as a result, nine more were added to our little band, four of whom were baptized by him, and five by the writer. Others have labored some among us, for which they have our love and esteem. Brethren Adams and Orem have many warm friends here out side of the Body.

As a body of believers, we have lived in perfect unity,—never a division on any thing,—all led by the same spirit. All have had the same end in view, to-wit: The kingdom of God. But several have moved away now, and two have fallen asleep in Jesus, so to-night only eight of our number remain here, and in a few days we will be moved away. We, like the rest, have sold our little home here and bought in Kansas, to better our location, but it pains our heart to-night to part with those that we have learned to love so well. I have been trying to hold forth the Word of Life in my weak manner, and I must say I never saw the interest better than at the present time. Some, like King Aggrippa, almost persuaded to be Christians. Now, brethren, pray for us, that we may hold out faithful in our new home, as we will be alone, none of like faith nearer than the Wolf River congregation, which will be twelve or fourteen miles away; but by the help of the Lord we will do what we can, and perhaps some may be added after a while.

In conclusion, let me say that the RESTITUTION is a very welcome visitor. Its letter drawer is a feast to me, so many words of comfort from those I love. I hope all the brethren will take it that are able. It is second to but one thing with me, and that is my Bible. Well, I am getting down low on my paper, and perhaps I might trespass on good nature, so I will close. If the above is worthy a place in your valuable paper, publish it; if not, cast it to one side. My address will be White Cloud, Doniphan Co., Kan., after March 1st. Please announce it through the paper, and oblige

Your Brother in the Faith,

To the Friends and Brethren in Christ:—We arrived here safely last Saturday morning, wife much fatigued; but now, after a few days rest, is feeling comfortable, full of hope and good cheer. The atmosphere is splendid. The people manifest all kindness toward us. Will give a letter descriptive of matters ere long. Love to all.

Something About What We Want.

What is really the great necessity of every human heart? I answer, intense, tenacious attachment to Jesus Christ. How blessed is that great love in itself and for what it implies,—what it secures! We may be attracted to earthly objects, but how happy are they who are attracted to the Savior! If we know we love him, how hard it is to be really unhappy; nay, how impossible! We may indeed be exceedingly sorry that we are not more nearly like him; but the consciousness of a great, personal and persistent attachment has in it the elements of a sweet and deep contentment. Amid all the conflicting views of truth, or discussions of the Bible orthodoxy of doctrines,—and a right understanding of the truth is very important indeed—amid all these variations of opinion, we do need exceedingly the spirit of the old martyrs, a spirit of undying friendship for Jesus. We ought to feel it to be an honor to die for him. We ought to feel an intense longing to live with him and for him. If we admire a statesman, a philosopher, a patriot, for his shining qualities, how much more should we love and admire the perfect man, who has become the noblest kinsman of every human being, especially the saints, who is the everlasting head of the race, and who is justly entitled to immortal honor! I have seen Washington's tomb, and heard the bell tolling in honor of the sleeping dust of the revered American, but how much more should every human being desire to exalt the Lord who is and ever will be the great representative man! We are easily impressed with the genius and power of a great master of men like Napoleon, but how incomparably more should we be moved by the exploits of the greatest of beings that ever walked the earth!

And again, our attachment to Christ should be clearly an attachment for Christ just as he is, and just as he is revealed to us,—not an imaginary and unreal being, but the Christ of the Bible. How many there are who proclaim or cherish a different, an imaginary, an unscriptural Christ, who is not the Christ of the Scriptures. How careful should every man be in this restless and carnal and inventive age, not to invent to himself a being with this holy name, who is really but a fiction, a travesty, an idol! How careful not to create or receive something unreal because untrue, who is moulded after the fashion of a mind not subject to the law of God! But let us receive the Savior revealed in the Word, and love, and cherish, follow and honor him.

How many there are who suffer from accumulated infirmities! They have to struggle with poverty. They may be afflicted with bodily disease. They may be for physical reasons, or from mental peculiarity or weakness, subject to dejection and despondency. They may have comparatively few genuine earthly friendships. They may suffer from neglect or abuse of others. They may suffer some malady of mind or body, engendered by their own misconduct in a recent or distant past. They may detect in themselves a hundred mistakes and a hundred frailties. They may be discouraged with conflicts, and sad with disappointments. And such persons need a friend, a true, strong and perfect friend. Such a one they have in Christ. They do not literally see him,—they take him by faith, and they have a deep conviction of his fitness for them. If Christ is eminently a friend that pities, why should he not be remembered, and preferred and relied on? Ah! what a world of sorrows is this! How many aching hearts and weary feet there are! And as Jesus has ached and been weary, so he can sympathize with the suffering. If there is one thing indestructible, and peculiar to Christ, it is his pity for the poor and weak and sick that lean upon him. This is a great mark of the true Christ of God. Suppose not more than one in ten is habitually a sufferer on earth, yet this marked and afflicted and suffering tenth for ever appeals to compassion, and forever calls for a deliverer. It is true, many suffer from their own folly or transgression, but a true compassion can pity even sinners—how much more those that are penitent or prayerful!

There is one great, unsatisfied, appealing want,—it is the personal presence and power of Christ on earth. Suppose we are entirely satisfied to have him stay away, when he intends to come, when he has promised to come, when his coming is an urgent necessity—what may we think, what must we think of our true state, of our mental harmony with God's word? Have we not lived long enough to feel keenly that we must have immortality in order to escape otherwise sometimes almost unbearable evils? What weakness of our present state—what physical and moral imperfection also! And is it not a fact which cannot be gainsaid, that it is in the very order of God himself, that we should look and long for the appearing of his Son? Suppose we have some theory of possible or certain safety and fruition without that coming! And that is just the fact with many thousands, aye, hundreds of thousands, who profess his name. But knowing as we do, that safety and felicity are absolutely inseparable from the appearing of Jesus, how can we rest content in our mortality, or in a fiction or fancy of inherent immaterial life? Life immaterial is a double sense,—for it is not only immaterial in the current theory of its nature, but it is actually and absolutely immaterial in the sense of having no value or existence at all.

O, the perpetual want is the restitution, the re-organization, the re-constitution of all things by the power of God. Until then, there will be mourning over all the earth. Until then, death will continue to do his dividing, desolating work. Until then, creation will always sigh and groan, because the Master and Restorer is absent. Theories and doctrines alone will never satisfy. We may have, intellectually, a perfect system, our doctrinal belief may be scriptural and faultless, but we must have power from on high to visit this poor groaning world—to lift off its heavy burdens, to take away sin, not only in promise and hope, but in fact and in completion, to destroy death not only in expectation and assurance, but in absolute achievment. Come, let us lay our aching heads by faith, at the feet of the strong Deliverer, and beseech him to come and undo the heavy burdens and let the oppressed go free. Let us kiss his feet in expression of our confidence, and let every kiss be both a thanksgiving and a prayer. The whole hope of the world is in that Messiah whose help we seek with kisses and prayers and tears. The very language of our conduct, the very meaning of our attitude, is precisely that of conviction that Christ has the power to save, and that his power is exceedingly needed—yes, repeat it with emphasis,—exceedingly needed. And never, never, never can suffering and enlightened humanity rest until he rises up to save,—never, never, never! Why do we not importune him, day and night, with fervent petitions to take pity on the miserable world and redeem it,—redeem it with an accomplished redemption, so that thistles and stings, fevers and poisons, pains and perils, mourning and crying and death may be forever gone? I confess I have my doubts of that contentment and complacency that has no room for cries to Christ to come, to make haste and come. At any rate there is an elect people who shall cry day and night, and the Son of Man will come and avenge them.

Think of the thousands of millions that have died by war and famine and pestilence, by fire and water, by accident and disease. O, the hungry soul what hosts it has swallowed up! And to say nothing of the past, what multitudes even now are devoured by wild beasts in the thick Asiatic jungles!

I say, it is a radical, revolutionary and mighty change the earth and race of man do need from a pitying and powerful God. What a time to praise God, when he shall lift up a gate on high and let down light and mercy and power like a flood to bless the nations! O, for the sight of those bars of light, with morning and heaven in them, sloping pillars of glory from God, reaching even to the earth and resting upon it! Then we can sing to some purpose. Now there is a minor vein in every hymn. The singing of immortals will be something worth while. All power for us, in heaven and on earth, is set and concentrated in Christ. He is the wisdom and power of God. He is life and glory. By him is everything, and without him is nothing.

Peace and good will to the readers of the RESTITUTION.

O. COLEGROVE.

Hear Ye Him.

On a certain occasion, Jesus said to Peter "follow me," but Peter, like many of the present day, hesitated until informed of what some other one was to do. We, as a race, are lost, alienated from God; but God in his mercy comes to us with a plan of salvation, and proposes to enter into covenant with us to make a contract with us as follows: If we will hear, understand and accept his plan, and faithfully live up to it during life, He, on his part, will, when Jesus comes, raise us up to life again and constitute us joint heirs with Jesus.

Now, our part of the contract is what we are interested in. We have God's word and oath that he will not fail on his part. Life here is so short that it requires all our time and effort, consequently we have no time to spare to enquire about how God is going to do his part. Just as soon as God's people begin to use their papers, meetings and individual time to investigate God's part of the contract, just so soon there is evidence of a falling away; besides, it is an insult to God and his Son Jesus. How about fair chance in the future or resurrection of wicked, all or part, and all the details as to how and when God will do his part. Don't the reproof that Jesus gave Peter come with force to us. (John xxi. 22. What is that to thee, follow thou me.)

Let us away with all these questions about how God will do his part, and honor him by giving him our confidence. Our Christadelphian friends have been all divided; their power for good nearly lost by the question of how will God raise the dead, and then redivided on the question of the mysterious nature of Christ; and these questions have been the main object of all their writings and meetings for the past few years.

It is all time lost, and worse than lost. Why should we stop to discuss the details of the nature of Jesus. He is the all sufficient preparer of God. If the bridge will carry us over safe, why care we about the exact kind of material it is made of. Is it not the fact that the real reason of want of success is that we, like our friends, are troubling ourselves about God's part of the covenant, and neglecting to a great extent our part. Let us all read over and over that conversation of Jesus with Peter. D. S. M.

Iowa Conference Report.

The second quarterly conference of the Church of God, in Iowa, and the south-eastern Advent Christian conference met at Belle Plaine, Iowa, on the 23d of February, at 10 o'clock a. m., organized for general business by electing Brother Thomas Hobb's, chairman, and John Fitz, secretary. The following preamble and resolution was offered, viz:

WHEREAS, We, as a people, met together in union conference at Belle Plaine, we ought to lament our present destitute condition as to evangelist labor; therefore,

Resolved, That the two conferences be, and they are requested to unite in sentiment and means for the purpose of putting an evangelist, all, or a part of the time in the field.

This resolution was unanimously adopted. On motion, the chair appointed Brothers Myers, Pitsor and Hale, to arrange further business for this conference, and Rustin, Hobb's and Fitz, on devotional exercises; after which we took a recess until half past two.

At 2:30 o'clock minutes of previous meeting were read and approved. Committee on business report;

1. That a committee be selected to draft constitution and by-laws. Report adopted, and Brethren Myers, C. Rustin and Meredith, appointed.

2. A committee to prepare an address to the brethren of like precious faith throughout the state, and publish the same report, adopted; and Brother Myers and Pitsor appointed, and committee discharged.

On motion to elect a permanent board, Brother Charles Huston, of Ladora, was elected president; Brother Levi Marsh, of Irving, vice president, and John Fitz, of Irving, secretary. The following resolution was then adopted:

Resolved, That the two conferences in their local meetings, be requested to take steps looking in the direction of emerging into union conference, and that thereafter, said conference be the only one held for the transaction of business.

We then adjourned until 10 o'clock next day. Social meeting, with lively interest, at 6 o'clock, and at 7 o'clock Brother Pitsor preached.

At 10 o'clock Saturday, we met for local business of the Church of God; the chairman being absent, Brother Levi Marsh was called to the chair. Minutes of first quarterly meeting were read, and the resolution in regard to finance taken up. The brethren of the south-east Advent Christian conference were invited, and took part in the discussion of this subject. After fully discussing this subject, it was concluded to take no further action on this measure. In view of the prospect of a union movement in the evangelist work, the meeting then adjourned without transacting any other business.

At 1 o'clock the South-east Advent Christian conference convened for local business, our brethren being invited, took part in their deliberations. At this meeting a resolution was adopted favoring the union movement.

At 6 o'clock we met for social exercises and prayer, and a lively meeting was enjoyed, showing the brethren to be alive in the glorious hope. At the close of this meeting, Brother Chandler, sr., preached on the Christian hope and its foundation on promises. He had a large audience, and by his ability and pointedness we think made this hope appear plain to every intelligent mind present.

At 9 o'clock, Sunday, the Advent Christian conference met for local business, and in the session passed a resolution recommending to the union conference for adoption the advalorum system of raising funds.

At 11 o'clock Brother Myers from an expression, "at the first," found in Acts xv. 14. preached, showing that the law has passed away by limitation at the death of Christ, and that the new covenant pertained to the house of Judah and Israel, and of necessity was yet future, after which he showed that of necessity we must fall back on the covenants of promise, with the additional revelations of the gospel, and that "at the first" then, as here used, refers to the gospel method of receiving the spirit of adoption, (viz, faith, repentance and baptism), and becoming heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ. This being necessary after the covenant of circumcision, avails nothing.

At 2 o'clock we met for union conference business, minutes of previous meeting read and approved, report of committee on constitution and by laws received, committee discharged constitution was passed upon by articles and unanimously adopted, which reads as follows:

1. The union conference, composed of the South-East Advent Christian conference and the conference of the Church of God, shall have a board of officers, consisting of a president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer and general solicitor.

2. The first four officers above named shall be selected annually, by the conference, and the last one appointed by the four elected, who may not as Evangelists, if they see fit to so direct.

3. In addition to the regular duties of these officers respectively it shall be, and is made their duty, to act as, and do the work of a financial and evangelical committee; solicit and receive subscriptions and donations for evangelical and other purposes, to employ and direct evangelical labors, and to pay for the same out of the treasury of said conference.

4. The ratio of representation in this conference, shall be one delegate to every ten members or fractional part thereof.

5. The deliberations of this conference shall be conducted in accordance to general rules and usages governing such bodies.

6. This conference may, or shall convene for business semi-annually, at such place and time as the board may direct.

7. These articles or by-laws shall be subject to change, amendment and additions, according to the will of the body.

Brother Thomas Hollis, of Belle Plaine, was chosen treasurer, to fill up the board. A resolution was then adopted, that we raise funds for Evangelist labor by the advalorum system, at the rate of three mills on the dollar of our valuation, to be paid in quarterly installments, and forwarded to the board by each church composing this conference.

Resolved, That in addition to the advalorum Evangelization fund, that every member in the congregations composing this conference, be, and they are requested to give, as a poll tax or membership tax, the sum of twenty-five cents quarterly, for Evangelical purposes.

On motion, we then adjourned, to meet in August with the general union conference.

In the evening Dr. Chandler preached, his subject being the first and second Adam.

Thus ended our meetings, which will be held in memory by most, if not all of those present, on account of the brotherly feeling and concert of action of all in attendance. One young man acknowledged Christ during the meeting, and the Lord willing, will go forward in baptism next Sunday.

We ask pardon for occupying so much of your valuable space with this report, but hope it will be of interest to all of our Iowa brethren, and influence others to move in the same direction, that the Lord's people may be one. JOHN FRITZ, Sec.

Positively the Oldest.

It is reported that the oldest living person is Esther Groom, colored, of Caldwell county, Ky. She is one hundred and twenty years old. She is helpless, and can scarcely talk intelligibly, and though her mind is fair, her memory cannot be relied upon. She lives with her youngest son, who is himself between eighty and ninety years of age.

JOHN SCARCE.

Our Savior made it a subject of accusation against the men of his generation that they did not observe the signs of the times. They professed to know what the weather would be, the most uncertain of all natural events, and yet their eyes were closed to those wonderful indications of providence by which God was pointing out to the nations the advent of his Son.—Sel.

Eastern Items.

BERLIN, March 6.—The National Gazette publishes what it claims is an authentic communication, derived from an intimate friend of General Ignatieff in the course of which it is said that the prevalent opinion in St. Petersburg is that Turkey, despairing of obtaining an alliance against Russia, will consent to the concessions which are demanded. Russia will, if possible, avoid war; but if it is unavoidable, will prosecute it with the utmost energy, and hopes the other Powers will observe friendly neutrality.

BERLIN, March 7.—Gen. Ignatieff, throughout his stay here, has, in conversation with diplomatists, held out strong hopes of a peaceable solution, and intimated the willingness of Russia to disarm as soon as a means of escape has been found out of the present dilemma. His principal secretary, Prince Tzerteleff, has, in private conversation, said that war is inevitable, and that the object of his chief's mission is to obtain for Russia authority from the powers to intervene in Turkey. Russia, says Prince Tzerteleff, is still continuing her preparations for war. The theatre of war will be circumscribed and localized. Parts have been allotted to the States surrounding Turkey who are to join in the fight as the allies of Russia. The Prince is reported to have said that the proposal of a term of grace to be granted to the Porte is wholly inadmissible. The position of the Christians in Turkey is too precarious for Russia to trust them to the mercy of the Porte, even for a short time. There is a gradual dissolution in progress in Turkey, but Russia cannot wait for that. Peace with Servia was intended to satisfy Austria. The Slavs in Turkey aspire to no new political privileges, to no revolution in the organization of the State, but they claim and will not be denied security for their wives and families. The Prince said: "It is impossible to understand the suspicion entertained in England. Russia has abandoned her intention of carrying on the war in Asia. She has made sure of the support of Greece and Roumania; Greece will assist by organizing fresh insurrections, and Roumania is bound to take part openly with Russia.

The Russian Telegraphic Agency declares that the responsibility for war, in case it should break out between Turkey and Russia, would rest with the British Cabinet, whose contradictions, defiance and tenacity would have precipitated it. Russia remains firm and moderate, relying on 500,000 soldiers concentrated on the Southern frontier. Her sole aim is a well-guaranteed amelioration of the fate of the Turkish Christians, and this object must be attained. Russia will discuss with calmness and good will all combinations which may appear calculated to conduce to this end, having nothing contrary to the views of Europe, and the wishes of peace being unanimous, a pacific result may be hoped for.

MARRIED.

BOWERMAN—KEMPLEY—At Brooklyn, Ontario, Canada, February 3, 1877, by Elder L. C. Thomas, Mr. John B. Bowerman and Miss Louisa E. Kempley, daughter of Mr. John Kempley, late of Brooklyn, deceased.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Mount Zion.

"Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion on the sides of the north, the city of the Great King."—Psa. xlviii. 2

O, Holy Mountain of the Lord,
What wondrous things did seers record,
Of thee, in days of old—
But, we are drawing near the time
When every nation, every clime,
Thy glory shall behold!

When Jacob's King makes earth his home,
On Zion He will place his throne;
And rule with mighty power;
Then Gentile rulers must submit,
And bow adoring at his feet,
Or, perish in that hour.

The mountain of the House of God,
As taught through Prophets in his word,
Shall be established then;
And many people there shall go,
And nation's great and strong shall flow,
Unto Jerusalem.

"Come ye"—they to each other say,
"Let's go to Zion, there to pray,
And worship Israel's God;"
For "He will teach us of his ways,
And He will give us happy days;
And break the oppressors rod."

Jesus will judge the nations then,
And will destroy all cruel men,
And rule in righteousness;
They shall their swords to plowshares beat,
And spears to hooks for pruning make,
And peace, the nations bless.

"He'll rule the proud with iron rod,"
And tyrants who will not fear God,
Will perish in that day;
Judgment and justice, surely then,
Will be dealt out to every man,
When Jesus bears the sway.

Then nation's will not use the sword,
Under the reign of Jacob's Lord,
"They shall learn war no more;"
But quietly each man will sit
Under his vine—a blest retreat,
On Canaan's happy shore.

Then Israel, now scatter'd far,
Will follow Jacob's guiding star,
And no more captive roam,
With Judah long since driven out,
They'll turn their wand'ring steps about,
And hasten to their home.

"To thee, O tower, of Jacob's flock,"
The strong-hold, and eternal rock;
shall the dominion come;
O, hasten, Lord, that glorious day,
When Jesus Christ shall bear the sway,
And reign on David's throne.

Christian Conversion.—No. 8,

BY O. H. L. C.

"The righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise: . . . If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."—Rom. x. 6, 9.

Those who have read our previous numbers will appreciate our summary with but little argument and few texts.

I. The Leading to Conversion.

1. The word, read or heard.

2. The Holy Spirit, convincing of sin, and drawing toward Jesus.

3. The providences of God.

(a.) The example, advice, exhortations and prayers of Christians.

(b.) Other innumerable things that move to repentance.

II. The Elements of Conversion.

We will not embarrass the usual formula by seeking possible exceptions. We need a clear understanding of the ordinary process of conversion.

Its elements may be grouped into four classes. They intermingle more or less, and do not follow the same order and are not equally distinct in every person's experience.

First Element—Faith. This is,—

1. An understanding (not necessarily a comprehension) of certain facts.

2. A reception of those facts as something that essentially concerns our salvation from sin and its penalty.

3. Such a hearty reception of those facts as will purify the affections and reform the life.

Second Element—Confession.

1. Of those facts.

2. Of our sinful state and need and desire of salvation.

3. Of our decision to seek the Lord.

4. Chiefly, of Jesus as God's Son and our Savior.

Third Element—Repentance.

1. Godly sorrow for sin. 2 Cor. vii. 10.

2. A change of mind—opinions, purposes, affections.

3. Reformation of life.

Fourth Element—Baptism.

1. To obey the Lord's command.

2. To imitate his example and that of his apostles.

3. To express faith in his resurrection, and the consequent resurrection of believers at his second coming.

4. The burial of sin.

5. The rising to a new and holy life.

The essential facts to be understood and received by a hearty faith are—Jesus and his resurrection. See our text and Matt. x. 32; 1 Cor. xv. 1–4, and parables. Circumstances may make other facts connected with or growing out of these essential in individual cases. The Bible must be respected as the word of God. A person who heartily receives Jesus as his Savior will be interested to learn all he can of him in all his offices and relations. In reference to such fuller knowledge, may is better than must.

The New Testament regards Jesus more as a very dear friend than as a great ruler. His name was selected in heaven. God, who gave him to us, sent an angel along to tell us his heaven-appointed name. The name "Jesus" brings him very near to us. His sanctified human nature and his divine mission to save his people from their sins, are in it, and his helping piety. As his salvation is for "all," its basis needed to be very simple. All can get down, many can not get up very high. He is, too, Lord and Christ, and all that those names can express. His dignity and power offer to those whose capacity and taste so incline them, fields for limitless research and admiration. But as the Son of God and our Jesus, he comes lovingly to every holy heart.

III. Proofs of Conversion.

A matter of so much importance must admit of the clearest proof; and so this does.

1. To one's self. How shall a person know that he is converted? He can know by examining himself. 2 Cor. xiii. 5.

(a.) He loves the brethren. 1 John ii. 10; iii. 14.

(b.) Loves God and keeps his commandments. 1 John ii. 3; v. 2.

(c.) Hears and keeps his word. 1 John ii. 5; John viii. 31, 32; v. 23, 24; Luke ix. 35; Heb. xi. 8; Rom. x. 17.

(e.) Walks as Jesus did. 1 John ii. 6.

(f.) Led by the Spirit. Rom. viii. 8, 14–16.

(g.) Has fruits of the Spirit. Gal. v. 16–18, 22–26.

(h.) Overcomes the world. 1 John v. 4, 5.

(i.) If the four steps in conversion, Faith, Confession, Repentance and Baptism, have been taken, they, with the above, ought to be satisfactory. There are, of course, many other proofs. These, perhaps, are the more obvious ones. Joy? Yes; through the whole process. Disobedience causes the "burden" some talk so much about.

2. How shall the world know it?

(a.) "If ye love one to another." John xiii. 35; 1 John iv. 20.

(b.) If you practice righteousness. 1 John iii. 10.

(c.) If you help the needy. 1 John iii. 17; Jas. i. 27.

(d.) If you bridle your tongue. Jas. i. 26.

3. Negatively. One may know he is not properly converted,—

(a.) If he hate his brother. 1 John ii. 11; iii. 15.

(b.) If he is a partisan, factious, carnal. 1 Cor. i 12; iii. 1–4.

(c.) If he prefer honor from men. John v. 44.

IV. The Converted.

1. They are, or should be, "all one in Christ Jesus," and are of one accord and one mind, being of the mind of Christ. "Same mind" is not same amount of knowledge. This would be impossible. Jesus was "meek and lowly in heart," or mind; so must we be.

2. They were members of the church, i. e., members of Christ's body, as soon as baptized, and entitled to the fellowship of all Christians. They cannot make themselves any more members of the church by joining any or all religious parties. Such action will embarrass and divide, rather than help them. They are "set in order" for their proper business by the election of elders, deacons and other officers as servants, as they are needed.

3. They speak the truth in love.

4. They purify themselves. 1 John iii. 3.

5. They "look for," and "wait for," and "love" the second appearing of Christ. Heb. ix. 28; 1 Thess. i 10; 2 Tim. iv. 1, 8.

6. They are "the light of the world," "the salt of the earth."

7. According to their numbers, intelligence, and property, the church ought to be the most active and powerful body of people in any community. To be such, they must eschew divisions, and be one in sympathy and action, as Jesus prayed they might be. John xvii. 11, 20–23.

8. The things in which Christians agree are vastly more in number and importance than those about which they differ. Let them build up their unity on their arguments, and in cheerful charity allow the differences. The Holy Scriptures thoroughly furnish them unto all good works.

V. Their Work.

1. They are the body of Christ in this world—his instruments,—and should be as ready and unselfish in his service as the members of a man's body are in his.

2. In order to harmony and efficiency, they should all recognize the law of the division of labor—each do with his might and let others do what they are best adapted to do. The hand need not walk, nor the nose see, nor find fault with the foot and eye for doing those offices. To do the diversity of work in the world-field requires a diversity of workers—some sons of consolation, some sons of thunder, some teachers, some prophets, etc.—all to save sinners and for edification of the body in love. Thus we serve and honor Jesus.

3. We should not bury the crown under the cross, nor the cross under the crown. Let the cross stand on Calvary, and the crown on Zion—joint and equal symbols of Jesus and his great salvation; human nature struggling through sin and suffering to glorious immortality. The cross will never be obsolete. We shall always sing, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing." Zion could not be if Calvary had not been. Jesus did not reign nor say much about his reign while he suffered. He was not a saving into his glorious kingdom the sin-plitting nations while he was preaching his gospel.

4. Finally, the work of the church is of two kinds, general and special. The former concerns the mercy of God in the forgiveness of sins. This is the basis of the union of all believers, and the working power of the gospel. In addition to this, there is, perhaps, for each age a special work, and for some many; as, a great evil or error to combat, or a great truth, fact, or promise to bring out; Peter to the circumcision; Paul to the uncircumcision; Luther against the Pope; Wesley for free salvation; justice against slavery; sobriety against intemperance; the second coming instead of reward and punishment at death; immortality through Christ instead of through Adam; eternal life the gift of God through Christ, not the accident of birth; the conversion of the world by the kingdom Christ in the age to come, not by the gospel in this age. The special should not be allowed to absorb or overshadow the general work. Let those who have a gift and taste for a special work push it, each in his congenial sphere, but all maintain fellowship on the general basis; the same heart sends blood to all the members.

All of which, imperfect as it is, is respectfully submitted to our thoughtful brethren, for Jesus' sake. May he accept and bless it for good.

The Bible True.—A Letter to a Friend.

BY WM. O. TAYLOR.

If, then, the Bible is a revelation, or rather contains a revelation from God to man, it is but natural that we should expect it to answer certain conditions in proof of its genuineness.

First of all, then, under this heading what we would expect most from such a book, claiming such an origin, would be a complete harmony among its writers, so that they might appear but as the builders of some noble edifice of which the great architect had furnished the design.

In the second place, respecting a revelation having for its object the benefit of mankind, such a revelation, if divine, must necessarily show a complete appreciation of the existing wants of man, and the remedy revealed must be nothing less than complete, and able to effect such deliverance both moral and physical as the case requires.

In the third place, in reference to the world at large, the remedy for its evils must also be such as will end war and discord of every kind, and eventually introduce peace and good will among all the inhabitants of the earth.

I propose discussing these propositions consecutively. Respecting the first I will show that these writers reveal a great purpose on the part of the Creator respecting man and the earth—a purpose which devolves and runs through the whole book till it culminates in the revelation of John.

In conclusion I will show how completely the requirements of the second and third propositions are met in that revelation.

I come now to show that the Bible is a book of only one story, which, however distracted it may appear at times, still continues, like a golden thread to run through the book from beginning to end. Well, said Josephus that the Jews had only twenty-two books, but they were all in harmony and did not contradict each other like those of the Greeks. The historian has never been called in question, for it has been the testimony of those who have known them best that however diversified in appearance and style, behind and underlying all personal peculiarities in the writers, there is felt the power of one guiding mind who saw the end from the beginning.

In the opening chapter of Genesis we find an account of creation which ends with the words, "and God saw everything that he had made, and, behold it was very good.' This state of things continued but for a short time. Adam's life was only sure to him so long as he observed the conditions we read of in the second chapter. The conditions were broken,—the harmony was at an end,—for sin had entered the world. By that act Adam forfeited his own life, that of his posterity, and brought a curse of barrenness upon the earth. Without the intervention of God, Adam, and in him all his descendants, had no hope but death after a life-time of toil in a world cursed for his sake. But God had evidently a higher purpose in view,—a plan for the restoration of man to the position he had lost, in which the earth should again yield her increase, and universal harmony reign among all the creatures of God. The curse had hardly taken effect before the purpose of God for the restoration of mankind began to unfold. Accordingly we read, "And I will put enmity between thee (the serpent) and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel." Gen. iii. 15. These words contained the first faint gleam of hope to man from the consequences of the fall. Here was the promise of a seed that was to bruise the serpent's head,—crush the power that introduced discord upon the earth and alienated man from his Creator.

The following eight chapters contain a very brief summary of the world's history covering a period of something over 2,000 years, the most noteworthy events of which were the flood and the dispersion of the descendants of Shem, Ham and Japheth, which resulted in the establishment of the first great monarchy upon the earth on the bank of the Euphrates. In a citizen of this, the Chaldean empire, the purpose of God that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head, began to unfold and present a clearer conception of its scope than in the promise to Eve. Abram was called from Ur of the Chaldees into the land of Canaan where God entered into a covenant with him, changing his name to Abraham, and giving him the following promises: "I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing . . . . and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." Gen. xii. 2, 3. "Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever, and I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth . . . . arise, walk through the land in the length of it and in the breadth of it; for I will give it unto thee." Gen. xiii. 15, 17. "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Gen. xxii. 18. "And I will establish my covenant between me and thee (Abraham) and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant to be a God unto thee and to thy seed after thee . . . . and I will be their God." Gen. xvii. 7, 8. See also the following passages: Gen. xii. 7; xiii. 14; xv. 5; xvii. 1, 8; xxii. 16; xxiv. 7; xxvi. 3; xxxv. 9; xlviii. 3; l. 24; Ex. vi. 6.

From these passages we learn that Abraham was to be blessed, and become a blessing as we read, "In thee," and "in thy seed shall all nations of the earth be blessed." And further, he was to become a great nation, so that his seed should be as the stars of heaven in multitude, and that the land wherein he was a stranger should be sure to him and his seed after him for an everlasting possession. And finally as we read, Gen. xvii. 7, "I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant to be a God unto thee and to thy seed after thee."

Plainly, then at this time, God unfolded a remarkable future for Abraham and his descendants. Before this the hope of the world rested upon the promise to the woman, that her seed should bruise the serpent's head, but in the time of Abraham in the words, "In thy seed all nations of the earth shall be blessed," it became brighter and more particular in its bearing upon the future.

The first promise was indefinite, that to Abraham was definite, being confined to his seed. The latter promise is that in Abraham and his seed all nations of the earth are to be blessed. When this is seen then it becomes plain why the Bible follows so exclusively from this time the history of the Hebrew people. Their history in its higher aspect is simply an unfolding of the purpose or manner in which God is to bless the nations of the earth.

From Abraham, his descendants at the time of their settling in Egypt had increased to the number of 70 souls. After 430 years they left that country, numbering in all probability little short of 2,000,000 men, women and children. Then follows the familiar story of the Exodus, the wanderings in the wilderness and the giving of the law. The latter was one of the greatest events in their history. They left Egypt without laws or government, save that supplied by Moses as their leader. But a change was at hand. When the people encamped before Mt. Sinai God commanded Moses to speak to them as follows: "Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagle's wings, and brought you unto myself. Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people; for all the earth is mine; and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation." Ex. xix. 4, 6. The answer of the people was, "All that the Lord has spoken we will do." Ex. xix. 8. The words of the covenant as related in the three following chapters were written in a book and read by Moses in the hearing of the people, and again they replied, "All that the Lord hath said we will do, and be obedient." Ex. xxiv. 7.

Thus the covenant between God and the children of Israel was completed; they accepted the condition of God and promised obedience, and he espoused them to be a peculiar treasure above all people, a kingdom of priests and an holy nation. The result of this covenant, then, was that the descendants of Abraham became by virtue of its acceptance the kingdom of God. Accordingly he gave them their religion their laws and constitution, after which they went up to possess the land promised to their fathers. In the books of Exodus and Deuteronomy we find a full statement of their laws, while in Leviticus all the ordinances of their religion are minutely detailed.

Our Letter Drawer.

Editor Restitution:—The RESTITUTION is, and always has been a welcome visitor, richly laden with those golden fruits which seem an earnest of what will be realized by the faithful in the new heavens and new earth, when this earth cursed by sin, and reeling under the accumulated weight of nearly six thousand years of transgression and pollution shall be restored. In view of the corrupted state of the world, both as regards the ecclesiastical and civil bodies, my desire is greatly intensified for the restoration of the throne of David, and the consequent kingdom of Israel under the legitimate heir, the Son of David. Our watch-word is a literal kingdom on this sin-cursed, but soon to be renewed earth in its more than pristine beauty. Having on Paul's Christian armor, we have been enabled to fight it out on this line thus far; and although we are comparatively like Gideon's army in number to the hosts which are like the grasshoppers for multitude and composed of all types, shadows, and colors, yet truth is mighty, and will ultimately prevail. We rely strongly on a correct theory, or, which is the same thing, the true and correct faith which was once delivered to the saints. Though this is correct, it is equally important that we reduce our theory to practice. Let faith in one scale be in a just equilibrium with the works in the other.

I think the tone and spirit of the writers of the RESTITUTION is of a higher character than ever before, still there is room for improvement, and while we should not relax a particle in contending for the faith to the very letter, yet we might be less pugilistic, (i. e., for its own sake), and have more of that meek and quiet spirit without detriment. The Spirit of Christ in us will give us the only sure passport to the kingdom as the reward of the righteous. W. I. LEWIS.

Rensselaer, Wis.

To the Dear old Restitution and its Readers:—As I have seen so much good news in your rich folds, I wish to increase it a little. I am having a good time away down here in Texas. Sectarianism is getting very low. November last I baptized Judge Fanning, and a few weeks afterward an official member from the Baptist church, one from the Campbellite, and day before yesterday we assembled on the banks of Brushy and I baptized five. We now number fifteen. We met about a month ago and broke the loaf. We meet to-morrow again. If this meets the eyes of any in Texas to whom you send the paper will they please write to me. Z. GOWEN.

Tilton, Texas, Feb. 28, 1877.

Editor Restitution:—My subscription, as far as it goes, is proof of my interest in the paper. It is a sort of banner floating to, show that truth is in the field. May it wave significant of true righteousness until the standard, unto which the Gentiles are to flow, is set up, or about to be. May it correct the disorders, and the adulterations of truth which from time to time enter among the brotherhood. May you, dear brother, be blessed in your work. Affectionately,

A. W. HUTTON.

Editor Restitution:—Brother John Prime, of Storey county, Iowa, held a series of meetings at Marysville. He preached on the great questions of immortality, the spirit of man, the kingdom, the restitution, the gospel, and Christian duties. We had a good attendance of attentive hearers. I think there is a good prospect for building up an organization here. Brother Prime is a good workman. We should like to have the next quarterly conference at Marysville, which is the name of the town, but the post office is called Urbana. My address is Vinton, Benton county, Iowa.

Your brother in the Lord,

J. I. LONG.

Editor Restitution:—We came from Kansas nearly four years ago, and, since that time have not had the pleasure of hearing the gospel preached except through the RESTITUTION until last summer, when Brother Levi Skeels came through here, and preached a number of discourses which resulted in four immersions into the one body. At this time we organized a congregation of five members, and since have been keeping up our social meetings regularly every two weeks. Some of the people of our neighborhood are becoming interested in the truth, and are anxious to have a preacher come to hold meetings here. We believe that good would result from a series of meetings for a few days. Can you give the names of preaching brethren through the RESTITUTION.

Yours in the faith,

ALVIN W. STEWART.

Editor Restitution:—I am unable to pay past dues on the account of sickness for a long time. An accidental discharge of my gun tore away the palm of my hand, and parts of two fingers. The gun was in my wagon, and struck the lock, causing the discharge. I intend to pay as soon as I am able. The paper is a great comfort to me, for I like the way it holds forth the word of life. I am surrounded by all sorts of people. There are Presbyterians, Methodists, Sabbatarians, Missionary Baptists, and others, but none of the One Faith, or Church of God. I should like to have some one come to preach the gospel faith here so that the people could hear. I have handed your paper round for the people to read. You must excuse bad writing as I am suffering from erysipelas.

Yours in hope of the soon coming kingdom. T. AMON.

Prof. E. B. Taylor said, in a recent lecture "On the Philosophy of Languages," at the London Institution: "If the extraordinary increase of English-speaking people should continue at the existing ratio, there will in twenty years be 860,000,000 of them, against 80,000,000 of French or German. The English language bids fair to overwhelm all others."

Inducements are offered by the Land Department of Florida for 50,000 rich Mennonites to emigrate to the orange groves.

The police of Moscow have frequently found of late placards on walls, posted during the night, which demand for Russia the same constitution lately granted by the Sultan to Turkey.

Palestine is gradually undergoing a transformation through the foreign colonies which are being planted in it. The German element is especially strong.

The Chinese commissioners of education located at Hartford, accompanied by their interpreter, visited the Connecticut legislature, Feb. 15th, and in reply to a resolution of welcome made very dignified responses.

Lady Smith, who, had she lived three months longer, would have completed her 104th year, died in Lowestoft, England, Feb 8, 1877. At the age of twenty-three she married Sir James Edward Smith, then a young physician of limited means, but who had the courage to purchase on his own responsibility the collections of Linnæus, and thus became the founder and first president of the Linnean Society. He died in 1828, so that Lady Smith, after thirty-two years of wedlock, lived in widowhood for nearly half a century. She had a remarkable constitution. She hardly knew what illness was until within the past three years. She had preserved nearly all her teeth, and her eyesight was good enough to read the newspapers. At the age of 100 she had many traits of her beauty, and her undimmed eyes and fresh color called forth the admiration of all who saw her.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the Gospel "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The Whole House of Israel.

"These bones are the whole house of Israel." Ezekiel xxxvii. 11.

Do these bones represent the whole house of Israel as being dead and in their graves? Or, do they represent that a part of the house of Israel is dead and buried, and that the remainder will be alive at the time when the graves will be opened, and that the living and the dead constitute the whole house of Israel? Or, do these bones represent the whole house of Israel as being alive, and in such a hopeless condition that they say, "our bones are dried, and our hope is lost?" Does this vision represent that the whole house of Israel will be raised from the dead? Or, does it represent that they will be gathered out of the countries where they have been scattered, to their own land? Does the whole house of Israel include all that have been born to Israel whether dead or alive, or does it include only those who are alive at a given time?

My object in this paper is to ascertain who do really constitute the whole house of Israel. A correct understanding of this subject would relieve us from a great deal of confusion and perplexing controversy.

Does the House of Israel include all the Children of Israel that have ever lived?

I. It does not. For the whole house of Israel will be gathered to their own land, but not the children of Israel that have ever lived.

When the children of Israel were about to go into the land of promise, it was said, "There was not a man among them who had been numbered by Moses and Aaron in the wilderness of Sinai. For the Lord had said to them; They shall surely die in the wilderness, and there was not left a man of them, save Caleb the son of Jephunnah, and Joshua, the son of Nun." Num. xxvi. 64, 65.

These men who died in the wilderness are not included in the house of Israel who are to be gathered into their own land. For Paul says of them, "When your fathers tempted me, proved me, and saw my works forty years. Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and said, they do always err in their hearts; so I swore in my wrath, they shall not enter into my rest." In this passage there are six hundred thousand that shall not enter into the land of Israel. Again Paul inquires, "To whom swore he that they shall not enter into his rest but to them that believed not, whose carcasses fell in the wilderness? That they to whom it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief. Therefore let us labor to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief." Heb. iii. 11, 17, 18; iv. 5, 11.

In this passage, all the people of Israel who have died under the same example of unbelief, are excluded from the land of Israel by the same oath. They shall not enter into my rest. Therefore, the whole house of Israel cannot include any who have died after the same example of unbelief.

The cities of Sodom and Gomorrah were condemned, and overthrown and reduced to ashes, as an example to all that should afterwards live ungodly. 2 Pet. ii. 6; Jude 7. The Savior said, that the judgment upon those cities of Israel who should reject the gospel preached by his apostles would be more intolerable than the judgment upon those cities. Matt. x. 15; xi. 23, 24. If the destruction of the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah was an example of judgment, and if those cities which rejected Christ are to be subject to a more intolerable judgment than that of those cities, then all the cities of Israel cannot be included in the house of Israel which is to be gathered out of the countries into their own land.

Christ taught that the people of Israel who rejected him could not escape the damnation of hell. That upon that generation should come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel, unto the blood of Zacharias whom they slew between the temple and the altar. Matt. xxiii. 32, 35.

In these Scriptures the whole of the house of Judah as it existed in that generation is excluded from the whole house of Israel that is to be saved in the land of Israel.

Christ spake a parable saying, "A certain man made a great supper, and bade many. But they all began to make excuse, some one thing and some another. After the supper was over the Lord said, that none of those men which were bidden, shall taste of my supper." Luke xiv. 15-24.

We are taught in this parable that the people of Israel in that generation shall not taste of his supper, that they will never be gathered into their own land. Paul in speaking of the Jews said, "Who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and have persecuted us, and they please not God and are contrary to all men. Forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles, that they might be saved, to fill up their sins always; for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost." 2 Thess. ii. 15, 16.

In this passage the Jews are excluded from the promise made to Israel, by the wrath coming upon them to the uttermost.

If such threatenings as we have referred to were made against the Gentiles, who of them could be saved? Let us compare a few of them. "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God. So I swore in my wrath they shall not enter into my rest." Which of these statements is the strongest? If one is final, is not the other equally final? "To whom swore he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not?" "He that believeth not shall be damned." If the latter passage is final, why is not the other?

"The cities of Sodom and Gomorrah were set forth as an example suffering the vengeance of eternal fire. And these shall go away into everlasting destruction." If everlasting destruction will be a final punishment, why was not the vengeance of eternal fire a final punishment?

To the Jews, "How can you escape the damnation of hell?" To us, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" What is the difference? To the Jews, "Ye shall not taste of my supper." To us, "Ye shall in no case enter the kingdom of God." What is the difference? "Upon the Jews the wrath come to the utmost." To us, "For because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience." If the punishment is final in the last passage, why not in the first?

These comparisons show that we must understand threatenings against the children of Israel, just as we understand similar threatenings against the Gentiles. Then, we come to the unavoidable conclusion that the whole house of Israel includes only the living people of Israel, and that it never can include those who have died in unbelief.

But the bones in our text do represent all the people of Israel who will be alive at the time referred to.

As the bones represent the living house of Israel, so the graves represent the places, or the countries where they will be found.

Where will they be found?

"For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land." Ezek. xxxvi. 24.

This passage represents them as being alive among the heathen, and in all countries, and not as being dead.

"Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land." Ezek. xxxvii. 21.

Again they are found among the heathen alive, and will be brought into their own land, and they shall dwell therein—they and their children, and their children's children forever. Surely these have not been raised from the dead. They are not the fathers raised from the dead; but they do dwell in the land in which their fathers dwelt. They will be gathered to their own land upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts. Isa. lxvi. 20 After they have been thus gathered out of all countries to their own land, the new covenant will be made with them and God will be with them, and be their God and they shall be his people. And one king shall be king to them all, and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all; but shall build houses and inhabit them, and they shall plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them. And they shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble, for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them. Isa. lxv. 21-23.

To make it still more plain that the house of Israel represents only the living Israel at the time when they are gathered into their own land, the prophet said, "Therefore, behold, the days come saith the Lord, that they shall be no more. The Lord liveth which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt. But, the Lord liveth which brought up, and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I have driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land." Jer. xxiii. 7, 8.

As the children of Israel which were brought out of Egypt, were the whole house of Israel at that time; so the children of Israel which will be gathered out of all countries, will be the whole house of Israel at that time. As there were no resurrected ones in the house of Israel which came out of Egypt, so there will be no resurrected ones in the whole house of Israel when it shall be brought back into the land of Israel.

That the graves out of which the children of Israel are to come, represents the countries from which they are to be gathered, is evident from the fact that they occupy the same place in the promise that the countries do in every other place where the gathering of Israel is promised. "I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries. I will bring them out of the north country, and from all countries whither I have driven them. I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land. Oh, my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel."

These passages all speak of the same scattering and the same gathering into the land of Israel. Now, if the scattering of Israel was a real literal scattering, the gathering must be a real literal gathering. If the scattering represents the literal death of Israel, then the gathering must represent a resurrection from the dead. Either the many promises of the gathering of Israel, must represent the bringing them out of their graves, or the one promise to bring them out of their graves, must represent the gathering of Israel out of all countries to their own land. Paul seemed to take the latter view when he said, "For if the casting away of the people of Israel be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?" Rom. xi. 15.

The whole house of Israel then, does not include all the children of Israel who have ever lived, but it includes only the living people of Israel, at the time referred to. We speak of all the nations of the earth, but we mean only the living nations. We speak of all the people of the United States, but we mean only the living inhabitants. We read of the house of Israel coming out of Egypt, but it was only the living Israel at that time. We read of the house of Israel in the wilderness, and as coming into the land of Canaan, but it was only the living Israel. We read of the house of Israel in the time of David, and of Solomon, and Zedekiah, and in the time of Christ and at the destruction of Jerusalem, but it was only the living Israel. So, when of Israel being gathered out of all countries, it is only the living Israel.

God Not in all Their Thoughts.

Do the men of this generation acknowledge a superintending Providence over the affairs of the children of men? Do professors of religion of the sects and denominations believe in special Providences of God in the way of his judgments, as witnessed from day to day, and from time to time? Do the believers of the gospel of the kingdom of God believe, and so teach, that the frequent repetition of judgments for the last two decades are a fulfillment of the predictions of the prophets of the Old and New Testament?

To the first question we answer, this is an infidel age, and our heading is very appropriate. God is not in all their thoughts. The first witness is the Son of God. Read carefully his declarations relating to the men of this generation. He compares it to the ages in which Noah and Lot lived, and his sayings need no comment. Every intelligent reader of the Bible knows full well the character of the men of those generations. God said to Noah, that all flesh had corrupted his ways before God. Noah was one hundred and twenty years in building the ark. Paul says he was a preacher of righteousness, yet there is no evidence that an individual, beside Noah and his family of eight persons, believed in Noah, God, or heeded the warning. So will it be with the generation that will be on the earth when the Son of Man shall be revealed.

Take a careful survey of the eleven hundred millions of earth's inhabitants in the year of our Lord 1877. Are we not forced to the conclusion by stubborn facts that our Lord's prediction is being rapidly and literally fulfilled? Look at it from any standpoint you please, and the same stubborn facts stare you full in the face. Let us come close home, and cite your attention to this, our Centennial year, and the many fearful disasters that have occurred, with the dreadful loss of life, attended with unprecented suffering. Read carefully the minute and detailed accounts of the press. They are careful, indeed, to give all the whys and wherefores, and the opinions of scientific men,—of well informed mechanics, and leading men of the press; but God, or his Providence, is not once named; he is not in all their thoughts; not an editor or writer of a secular or political paper, so far as we have seen, and we have a fair chance for judging correctly, as we have the New York Tribune, semi-weekly, New York Times and Cleveland Leader, weekly, with many others. We have read carefully, with the thought of God's judgments specially before our minds; we have not even seen a hint or reference to the judgments, or Providence of God in all we have read in the journals referred to. What, did David mean? "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God."

"What shall we say to the second class referred to? Are they clear of infidelity? Do they give good evidence of a firm belief in what God has recorded in his Holy Book, the Bible? Do we not find by far the largest half of Protestant professors open and avowed unbelievers in the plainest things taught in the Word of God? and have they not substituted, in their stead, doctrines and theories that cannot by any honest, logical reasoning be sustained by the Scriptures? These things cannot be denied. We would not be too sweeping in our conclusions. There are some who fear and tremble while the judgments are fresh before them; but they are like the morning cloud, and the early dew.

I will give one instance: An Orthodox clergyman in Cleveland, who had opposed the coming of Christ, personally, whom I met soon after the Chicago fire, said he, putting on a gloomy appearance, "Mr. Bond, I verily believe God has began to judge the world, and punish the wicked." One year later the same gentleman said to me, "that he believed there was as much evidence for a millennium before the coming of Christ, as there was after his coming." The testimony was about even balanced. All fear of God's judgments had vanished to all appearance. Do we overdraw, or misrepresent? We do not intend to. How fearfully surprised will be the great mass of Protestant Christendom when the opening heavens shall reveal the once crucified, but now glorified Son of God, invested with royal majestic powers, to immortalize the quick and dead saints, destroy the wicked, remove the curse, and rule the world in righteousness. Lastly, what shall we say for ourselves? Do we really believe that we are living witnesses of the special judgments that were to attend the second coming of the Son of God? A profession of faith without corresponding works, will not satisfy the scoffing infidel of this generation. A few plain questions wont do us the least bit of harm. How far can we go in adding house to house, and farm to farm? Is it safe for the servants of Jesus, who have stood in the front rank, and proclaimed long and loud the soon-coming of the Son of God to judge the world, to leave our high and holy calling to serve tables? Is it wise or safe to engage in the political squabbles of the day, to edit and publish political, partisan papers? Do we really believe that the oft repeated, fearful disasters, even if it can be shown that they can be accounted for upon natural and scientific principles, are not God's special judgments? For instance, does the insecurity of the Ashtabula bridge prove that God's judgment was not manifest in the fearful loss of human life in that disaster?

Trial and Reward.

"Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Luke xii. 32.

With what comfort and consolation must these words of our Savior have fallen upon the ears of his beloved disciples, as they wandered with him, over mountain, desert and plain, having left all,—houses, lands, wives, brothers and sisters,—they could say, in common with their Master, that they had not where to lay their heads. They indeed felt that they were a "little flock," going forth as lambs among wolves, despised and persecuted on every hand, knowing not how soon they might be called upon to offer up even their lives in behalf of Him whom they loved. Although at times cast down, they were not forsaken, knowing as a father pitieth his children, so their Heavenly Father would care for them, and provide all things needful. They were told to take no thought for their life, what they should eat, or what they should drink, or wherewithal they should be clothed; theirs it was to seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things should be added unto them. They were to provide for themselves "bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth; knowing that where their treasure is, there would be their heart also.

The mission to which they were called was a high and holy one, and of much greater import than the daily striving for worldly possession, so necessary to the comforts and luxuries of this life. This was to be left to others, while it was their duty and privilege to go forth and herald to a dying world the glad tidings of a coming king and kingdom, who should redeem man from his fallen condition, and restore all things to its pristine beauty. This mission, although so faithfully performed, could not be accomplished without great sacrifice, which at times seemed almost greater than they were able to bear. At such times, the comforting words of their loving Savior were ever nigh; being seasoned with rich and glowing promises, it gave them sufficient strength to toil on, rejoicing that they were esteemed worthy to suffer trials and hardships during a brief life time, so that they might share with him the glory of his coming kingdom.

The Apostle Peter seems specially to have felt the weight of sacrifice when he asked the question: "What shall we have therefore?" Jesus answered, "Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or wife, or children, or lands, for my Name's sake, shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life." (Matt. xix. 28, 29.) Here our Savior gives a definite reply, by which they could fully understand the nature of their reward. That they believed in a literal restoration of the kingdom of Israel, is evident from the question, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" Acts i. 6.

The question with them was a matter of time. They wished to know whether the time had come, in which this kingdom of Israel should be restored; considering the twelve tribes in a scattered condition, and the kingdom of Israel in ruins, they knew it would be impossible for them to occupy their promised thrones, until the time of its restoration had come. And that this question was so understood by our Savior, is evident from the reply, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power." In like manner, when they asked the question, "Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" Matt. xxiv. 3. He, with other words of exhortation and instruction, said: "Watch, therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come"; or in other words, "for ye know not when the time is." From these answers then, we learn conclusively that there is a time, "which the Father hath put in his own power," in which all these things should be fulfilled, but it was not for them "to know the times, or the season." It was their duty to watch and pray," waiting patiently and faithfully; and in God's own time they shall receive the promised inheritance.

Although this kingdom of Israel, with the twelve tribes for its subjects, is the allotted heritage of the Apostles, let no one think that there are no more nations to govern, no more thrones to occupy, nor crowns to wear. There is room for the saints of all ages in our Father's vast estate; "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. vii. 27. A crown of royalty is sure to all the faithful, for the promise is, "He that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers, even as I received of my Father." Also, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. ii. 26, 27, and iii. 21.

The kingdom was not only the center subject of all the Apostles' preaching, but this, with all its glories and honors, together with endless life, was the great reward they looked forward to with bright anticipations, enabling them to courageously and willingly endure all the privation and sacrifice necessary in order to attain to this end. Like the patriarch Moses, they "had respect unto the recompense of the reward," esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than all the pleasures of the world.

Then let these bright examples of heroic deeds and noble actions, ever live in our memory, inspiring us with noble purposes and lofty aspirations. And whenever we murmur or complain over the trivial difficulties of this life, let us compare our advantages, our meager sacrifices, with their's; and then, in shame and confusion we must confess that, like the Israelites of old, we have murmured against God, and are not worthy to enter the promised rest. Oh! let not this be our fate, but let us take heed to our ways, striving daily to do better than the one preceding, and having an eye single to the honor and glory of God. And though the world may point its finger of scorn at us, and call us a "little flock," and count us among the offscouring of the world, let us remain true to our purpose, ever remembering that the servant is not above his Lord, nor greater than his Master.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CRAFLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAR. 21, 1877.

It is our intention to print the article on the Great Pyramid in our next, with an illustration showing the relative location of its passages, galleries and chambers. We are somewhat behind still in answer to correspondents. We have at length filled out all tract orders to the present time. Having to send for some works not on hand delayed us somewhat. We can not get the receipts ready for the present number. There are some mistakes in our mailing list probably in part owing to a want of explicitness on the part of our subscribers and in part to errors in correcting the list. We intend to compare the book and the list and eliminate all mistakes. Be patient with us brethren, for we are trying patiently to do all we can. We say once more to those who would like extra copies of the paper containing the Pyramid Illustration to signify their wishes, as we shall not print very many in excess of our subscription list only to apply actual orders. Thanks to some kind brethren who extend some aid to assist the paper. We forbear an editorial this week to give more room to correspondents. Some articles on hand will find a place in due time.

Is there no Danger of our Falling away from the Faith?

"Will the Son of man, when he cometh, find faith on the earth?"

"He that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken unto a wise man."

"And every one that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man. Ye cannot serve two masters."

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness."

—Words of Jesus.

"There be some that trouble you and would pervert the gospel of Christ." Galatians i, 7.

"Do I seek to please men." Gal. i, 10.

"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers, for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness—light with darkness." 2 Cor. vi, 14.

These Scripture sayings are naturally, almost irresistibly recalled to the mind of the writer after reading the series in the RESTITUTION, recently published under the head of "Christian Conversion." The sentiments advanced and the position assumed seem to call for comment.

If the Apostle Paul felt impelled by a sense of duty to raise his voice in condemnation of his Galatian brethren and to characterize the Judaizing of "some among them," as a "perversion of the gospel Christ," and even to denounce a curse on any man or angel who preached any other gospel unto them than that which he preached—and would not give place by subjection to any brethren; no, not for an hour, that the truth of the gospel might continue with them. And if he withstood to the face his brother and elder Apostle, Peter, at Antioch, for his dissimulation in separating himself from the Gentiles, and acknowledging any consort or association with them, for fear of his Jewish countrymen; and so again, as at the house of Cornelius, called these common and unclean whom God has cleansed—If Paul moved by these considerations censured—his Jewish brethren in Christ, who, led on by Peter and other Jews, assembled likewise with him, so that even Barnabus was carried away by their dissimulation. Can we, as imitators of this Apostle, hold our peace and permit any new departure from the old paths to pass unchallenged or unheeded?

Shall we severely rebuke and censure such of our brethren as contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and, in the very words of Scripture maintain the word of the truth of the gospel, and denounce as Millerialists those of us who adhere with fair, logical closeness to the law and the testimony, and cannot see either the wisdom or duty of justifying or excusing the Babylonish, sects and parties of Christendom, and invite or encourage union and communion with the ignorant, untaught and unwashed multitude, whose blind fanatical zeal is accepted for the knowledge of and obedience to the truth as it is in Jesus? Let the reader examine these MS. and see if this characterization of them be not correct. Surely such things ought not so to be, for we have not so learned Christ; for has he not commanded, through Paul, whom he sent to us, Gentiles, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," etc.

Can any be truly called believers who are ignorant or faithless of the gospel of Christ? Is it not written that "without faith it is impossible to please God"?

Is not zeal, however earnest and sincere, without knowledge, expressly condemned as dangerous? Did not the Jews who slew our Lord act from the prompting of what they supposed a holy zeal? Yet Peter says, "through ignorance ye did it," and Paul adds, "and in unbelief." But did God, therefore, hold them guiltless? Are their modern imitators any better off? Are we not taug'ht that "God is not mocked—for, whatsoever any man soweth, that shall he also"? How then can any of our brethren, who are taught of God and know the joyful sound, without some inconsistency and indeed, in the face of God's word, agree to—far less advocate—the union and fellowship of the disciples of Jesus with those who are "ignorant of God's righteousness and go about to establish their own righteousness, and have not submitted themselves to the righteousness of Christ, (who is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth.")

I regret, for one, to see such unauthorized statements as these (urged as a plea for ignorance of the truth and as designed to meet the objection that unless men and women intelligently apprehend the truth—the gospel of the kingdom and the mission and character of Jesus as God's prophet, priest and king,—they are not fit subjects of baptism, and cannot be said either to receive, believe and obey the gospel of which they are ignorant or faithless). viz:

"Judged by the standard of some in our day, they (the Apostles) would have been ruled out of the Master's company, as unfit for his disciples, much more for his preachers—they were ignorant."

"He (Jesus) had not sent them to preach the gospel; (until after Pentecost)—they were not competent."

"They did not know what the resurrection meant, and thought that the kingdom was to be immediately restored to Israel;—did not know enough, as some judge, to have any faith at all."

"What a poverty of understanding—(yet)—what a wealth of real faith," etc.

"Did Peter tell them to study the gospel preached to Abraham, and when they understood it they might be baptized?"

"They had learned something about the gospel and believed what they had learned," etc.

"That is the way to get religion; that is Christian Conversion and the way to join the Church."

Such reflections on the fidelity of our brethren who will not compromise away the truth, and who firmly maintain and defend the faith of the gospel, are very discouraging, and tend to overthrow and subvert that faith.

Nor is this all; in order to uphold and excuse the modern machinery of sectarianism,—i. e., singing and praying ignorant converts into their churches, the meetings of the Apostles with the people in Jerusalem to order to preach the gospel unto them, are made to be "prayer meetings" (of the modern sort). Hence we have the extraordinary and unauthorized statements that they (the Apostles) "had two daily public prayer meetings at the temple; one about 9 a. m., and the other about 3 p. m."—"Peter and John went to the afternoon prayer meeting"—"A thrill of excitement ran through the praying circle," etc. "God honors the 6to prayer meeting; prayers and preaching go hand in hand;' preaching is easier and better, and the spirit comes and sinners are converted when the Church prays,"—(Italics are mine). "All he (Peter) preached was gospel, but he did not preach all the gospel"! and much more of the same sort.

Now is it not known to every intelligent reader of the Holy Scriptures that these statements are but "fancy sketches." To such they may be harmless, but to others,—especially to the outside world, both of "professors of religion" and the multitude,—whose eyes and eyes we are seeking to open to the claims of the truth, such mistakes or perversions are positively hurtful. If unrefuted or uncorrected, do they not convert the RESTITUTION into a vehicle of mischief and an ally of ignorance and fanaticism?

Let us consider, in detail, some of these statements.

1. The Apostles were not sent to preach the gospel (because "they were not qualified") until at or after Pentecost. Luke ix. 2, 6, refutes the statement.

2. "They were so ignorant they did not know what the resurrection meant." This is a mistake. John xx. 9, reads, "For as yet they know not the Scripture that he must rise again from the dead," which does not support the assertion that they did not know "what the resurrection meant," but only that they did not know it had been predicted.

3. Did the Apostles ever teach their hearers "to get religion," or to join the church, or to pray for the conversion of sinners, or to wait for "the spirit to come"? If so, show us the testimony. Until this is done, we must firmly decline to preach and teach such dangerous heresies, which, not being according to the order of God, may lead away from the truth unaway disciples, and ultimately drown them in destruction and perdition.

It is not an agreeable task to find fault or play the censor, especially on the well-meant work of a co-laborer in the gospel field, but "better the rebuke of a friend than the kisses of an enemy." The Great Physician wounds that he may heal. Paul's example in the case of Peter and the Galatians, is worthy of imitation. The first virtue, after faith, is "courage,"—the courage to "speak the truth in love." I have believed and therefore have spoken, I hope without offense.

ALLAN B. MAGRUDER.

Exegetical.

For the correct exposition of the passages which follow, see the manifestation of the sons of God. Rom. viii, 19.

The word here rendered "manifestation" is "apocalypse" in the original, and means revelation. The true church of Christ is not designed to manifest its outward visibility during the present dispensation. The jewels are hidden, and will not shine in their lustre till the day when the Lord shall make them up. It is as true now as it was eighteen hundred years ago, when John said, speaking of the sons of God, "the world knoweth us not."

That seal of God impressed upon the inmost heart is discernible only by the eye of Omniscience; its living tracery is invisible to human inspection; and where the eye of mortal sees only a frail child of earth, Divine scrutiny contemplates a son or daughter of the Lord Almighty in embryo. The bright particular stars, destined to shine as the firmament forever and ever, are not yet clothed with that celestial radiancy that will eclipse the sun itself. Heavenly plants may envelop indescribable beauties in their closed buds, while rooted here in the desert, but the lovely tints of the unfolded blossoms will only be seen when transplanted to the Paradise of God. The Bride of the Redeemer is a poor forlorn woman, living in the wilderness obscure and unknown, till the day she puts on her bridal robes, and becomes the Heavenly Princess. The coarse garments of poverty often cover the poor emaciated forms that will one day be angel-equals. The heirs of that incorruptible, undefiled, and fadeless inheritance of the ages, have often housed in the dens and caves of the earth in the days of their pilgrimage. The rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom are among the poor of this world. Their home is not in the imperial palace, or royal hall, with gilded ceilings and silken tapestry, but often in the pining huts and hovels of cheerless want. Divine royalty, when he below, was houseless and homeless: and while the sparrows had their nests, and the foxes their holes, he had not where to lay his head.

If dens and caves, huts and hovels, sheepskins and goatskins, rags and poverty, human weaknesses and imperfections, have concealed the living membership of that corporation destined to be glorified only in the eras to come, a denser veil more darkly and effectually covers. In impenetrable secrecy, the unglorified dust of the sleeping myriads that mingle with that dresser mold that was never vitalized. Hidden away among the abject lowly and obscure, while living, they are more completely lost sight of during the unclothed death-state. No garlanded sepulcher is built in some Greenwood, Mount Auburn, or Laurel Hill, over the denizens of a future glory; no monumental marble, or lettered granite marks the place where God's own children sleep. The "storied urn and animated bust" are memorializers of the great ones of earth, but the wild rose and tangling sweetbrier grow rank over forms destined for immortality and thrones in the blessed futurities. The white snows of the north spread over the resting places of some whose feet will walk the golden streets of New Jerusalem in the on-coming dispensation. The green turf, that was once reddened with the martyr blood of the sleeper beneath, covers forms that will be invested with the white robes of heaven to move with Christ himself amid the groves of the tree of life in the glad garden of God. The hot sands of the desert drift over dust more precious than dust of gold, yet to be gathered, reorganized, and shine among the morning stars that sang creation's anthems. The coral insect builds the tomb over many that lie deep down on the ocean's bed, who will be the peers of the angels of God in the ages yet to be.

God will reveal his church, but it will be in its resurrection glory. During the stages of its earthly imperfection, he lets its outward exhibition be of an earthly character. Partaking of a fallen nature, it is imperfect. Linked to a mortal head, in earthly parentage, it is mortal and dies. But a day of adoption into the heavenly family awaits it, when it will appear in the manifested glories of its Divine Head. In a resurrected likeness to the immortalized and beatified Son of God it will exhibit the image and attributes of its perfected Redeemer. Its weakness is transformed into power, its deformities into glory, its corruptible nature into imperishableness, and its mortality into absolute deathlessness when born in its regeneration from the grave, it becomes heavenly in its renewed and heavenly nature. It manifested only graces of character in its earthly pilgrimage, but in the heavenly country it will be revealed in its inherent transfigurations into the perfect image of God's own glorified Son.

For that day of redemption a sin-paralyzed creation groans; those bearing the Spirit's first fruits agonize for the resurrection life, and blessedness; a voice, like that of Abel's blood, imploring a re-living for the household of God, and a regeneis for a curse-burdened world. We live on the boundaries of dispensations. For the world that now is, there is no future history, the annals of infamy will be records of the church's glorification. In its unveiled beatifications may it be ours to share.

Riches.

Dear reader, I want riches and so do you. They are certainly desirable. Perhaps the riches you desire pertain to this age. I want to be rich toward God. Luke xii. 21. Rich in good works. 1 Tim. vi. 18. Rich in faith James ii. 5.

Having these will secure my title to the riches of God's glory. Rom. ix. 23. The riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints. Eph. i. 18. The exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us in the ages to come. Eph. ii. 7. The unsearchable riches of Christ. Eph. iii. 8.

I pity those whose claims and title deeds cover only houses and lands in this evil age; whose riches embrace gold, silver, railroad and bank st ck; having millions invested in these still leaves the possessor at the close of life poor as a pauper. The wealth of Stewart or Vanderbilt will give the owner no passport into the city of pearly gates, nor purchase the clemency and favor of the scrutinizing Judge on the great white throne.

"Riches profit not in the day of wrath, but righteousness delivereth from death," said the wise man. "Riches certainly make themselves wings; they fly away as an eagle toward heaven."

Riches are often a bar to the reformation and salvation of their possessors. The strength of the passion for wealth in the case of the young man who wanted to know what he should do to inherit eternal life proved too strong for the desire of that future life which he professed to cherish. "How hardly shall they that love riches enter into the kingdom of God." The test of the Savior was a severe one, but none will question its wisdom, inasmuch as it had reference to a preparation for a special mission. While this demand is peculiar, the rich must not think themselves exempt from all obligations to part with some of their superfluous wealth. God demands it, and Paul wrote to Timothy, "Charge them that are rich in this world that they be not high minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works; ready to distribute, willing to communicate." Then follows the blessed assurance that they are "laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life."

The rich may find countless opportunities for doing good; fields of labor are spread out all around them, inviting them to use their means in ways and for ends that will meet with God's approval. A thousand good causes appeal to them for aid; the truth that is fallen in the streets of this world should be helped to vindicate itself against the clamorous voices of error, and to urge its claims, by the living energy of tongue and press, upon the attention of a world rushing on to judgment.

Oh, how much good might be accomplished if a portion of the wealth of the rich, which goes to feed the baleful fires of lust could be turned into legitimate channels. If all who have more than heart ought to wish, possessed the spirit of benevolence that characterizes the philanthropist, a large portion of the want and misery growing out of destitution might be abated; and, indeed, very much of the crime which good men deplore, might be abolished by the same means. But in this world of sin, every blessing of heaven, and every faculty with which man is endowed, are perverted to wrong uses and ends. It will not always be so. When the Lord comes and institutes a divine government, and curbs human passions and impulses, and brings order out of all this confusion, then "he shall deliver the needy when he crieth, the poor also, and him that hath no helper." Psa. lxxii. 12. In the meantime may the church labor and wait, being rich in good works, that she may finally enjoy the wealth of the ages, and be partaker of the inheritance of the saints in light. Who would turn back in sight of the glorious reward? Who would barter the eternal kingdom for the baubles of time, or gain the whole world and lose his own soul (life)? Let each resolve not to make such a fearful forfeiture and failure.

LONDON, March 14.—The correspondent of the Times with the Turkish army telegraphs from Multscha as follows: "In the higher Turkish circles it is believed all danger of war is at an end. On the other hand, the news from Bessarabia is very warlike. In the course of the last few days two Russian divisions have been pushed forward, one of infantry, the other of Cossacks. The latter have their headquarters at Kuhel, close on the frontier. Military action on the part of Russia is believed to be inevitable, and an order to march into Roumania is expected as soon as the weather permits. At present, any movement of the army is impossible."

LONDON, March 14.—A despatch to the Standard from Constantinople says that placards have been posted in Stamboul, calling on the Porte to make war against Russia, and threatening the Ministers if they make any further concession to Montenegro.

It is reported from Cettinje that the Prince of Montenegro has given orders to make every preparation for recommencing hostilities on March 21, if peace is not concluded before the expiration of the armistice.

The Servian Government has ordered Col. Despotovitch, who was sent during the Servian war to help the insurgents in Bosnia, to return to Servia. Despotovitch refuses to obey and declares his intention of keeping up the insurrection.

A special, dated Pera, March 15, says that Savfet Pasha to-day informed the Montenegrin delegates that he regretted that Turkey was unable to agree to their demand, but added that he was anxious to continue the discussions of the basis for peace. The delegates replied that they were unable to accept this proposal, as their instructions were precise and limited, and that they must therefore communicate the Porte's decision immediately to their Government. It is said the delegates will wait for the answer of the Prince of Montenegro to be communicated before leaving Constantinople.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 15.—It is semi-officially stated that the slow progress of peace negotiations between the Porte and Montenegro is observed with much regret in political circles here. Montenegro adheres to the decision of the conference. The Porte, however, will not permit the unfettered return of the Herzegovinian refugees from Montenegro, and has not consented to territorial cessions demanded by Montenegro, or made any counter proposals.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 15.—Great agitation prevails at the recall of Midhat Pasha, and war with Russia seems imminent. In the confused demands of the populace grave complications are apprehended.

BERLIN, March 12.—According to the Turkestan Gazette (the official journal of Tashkendy, a serious encounter between the Chinese and Kashgar troops is drawing near, the hostile parties being only separated by the Tian-Shan hills. To prepare for conflict, the Chinese have established a large arsenal at Launche-Fu, whence ten thousand breech-loading rifles, of the Berden type, the other day, were sent to Gutchen, headquarters of the expeditionary force. Yakub Beg, on his part, is likewise arming with a will, and, as preliminary to a Chinese war, tries to improve his relations with the Russians. He has given a cordial reception to Col. Pryevalski, who is crossing Kashgar on his way to Thibet, and is supposed to be holding friendly intercourse with the special Russian Embassy that followed him to Akasu, and seems to have been sent out to watch the progress of the war.

When you bury animosity or a quarrel, never mind putting up a tombstone.

In Christian life virtue grows strong by resistance; experiences are sweetened by affliction; love of duty is increased by sacrifice; integrity is established by temptation; and joy becomes more precious through sorrow.

The Coming of Elias. Matt. xvii. 10, 11.

With the scene of transfiguration fresh in their minds, the disciples asked Jesus saying: "Why then do the scribes say that Elias must first come?" Jesus did not say that the scribes were mistaken, but confirmed their conclusions. He replies: "Elias shall truly first come and restore all things." If he answered the query that occupied their minds, Elias must come before the Son of Man shall come into his Kingdom, for this was the scene which they had just witnessed in the vision. Chap. xvi, 28. In the vision they had seen his Majesty first, chap. xvii. 2, then Moses and Elias appeared in the scene. They had not seen Elias coming first as a restorer, which seems to have prompted the query in their minds. I am aware that Jesus said that Elias had already come, and that they understood that he spoke of John the Baptist. But the Messiah had also come. John had come in the spirit and power of Elias, and Jesus had come in the spirit of the anointed. But this scene, which they had just witnessed was of his second coming,—his coming in power—and this was what raised the question, and, to my mind, the answer was to this point, and Elias will therefore come before Messiah comes, and before the kingdom of God comes. The mission of Elias to Israel was to turn the people back to Jehovah, and it was embraced in these words: "If the Lord be God, follow him: but if Baal, then follow him." John's mission in the spirit and power of Elias, was to turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord. Matt. xi. 14, it is said: "If ye will receive it, this is the Elias which was for to come." Let it be borne in mind that this last was spoken to the multitudes. Here was an if, and they did not receive John, nor the Master, and there is another coming, and his mission, this last time will be to restore all things. But to whom is he coming? Is it to the natural branches which have been broken off? Will they be restored back to their own land, and the Kingdom, the priesthood of Levi, and their temple worship all be restored to them before the Kingdom of God shall come? Surely not. See Luke xxii. 24-30; Matt. xxiv. 14; Isa. lxvi. 18-23; Jer. iii. 17, 18.

Elias in person was sent to Israel as a reprover for their sins. John was sent to Israel, as a herald and a reprover, in the spirit and power of Elias; and Elias, either in person or in some one in the spirit, will be sent to the people, who look for the King in his glory, to so restore all things that the people may be prepared for the Lord. Whether it is to be the veritable Elias of old, or some one in the spirit and power in which he visited Israel, I know not. Whether the prophecy relates to the man, or to the office is of little consequence, as the work to be done is what more immediately interests us. Elias shall indeed first come, and restore all things. If his mission shall be to the church, the question arises, what has been lost? Taking the church as a whole, in all her division, with only a fractional exception, we might answer—all, and everything. The head is sick, the heart is faint; the practice, and the power is gone. The question comes home to each body of professing Christians—are we ready to receive our King?—has the bride made herself ready? Let us test ourselves—let us prove ourselves, and see whether we are in the faith or not. Elias' mission to Israel was in harmony with his name; thus: Jehovah is my God. Jehovah says: "I the Lord your God am one God." There is one God and Father of all, who is above all, and one Lord Jesus Christ. How different is the God of Moses and the prophets from the one defined by the religious world in these their own words, "There is but one living and true God everlasting, without body, parts and passions, &c."

I have believed, and still believe, that the lost power will be restored to those who believe and live for it; and that the Bride will be made ready for the Bridegroom, and that Jesus will send his messenger to prepare the way before him as said in Malachi iv. 1-6; and that this is the Messenger of Rev. xxii. 6. Let us watch and pray that that day may not overtake us unaware.

J. C. KIMBY.

The martyr spirit is a good one, and a manifestation of it is like a balm to the Church when it is rightly made. But an ambition to be a martyr is a homely travesty which invites and will receive contempt. The pride which invites pain, and which, when it comes, exults in it with a vanity of heroism is precisely opposite to the humble practice of him who, like the dumb sheep before her shearers, opened not his mouth.

What Then?

What then? Why then another pilgrim-song:
And then a hush of rest divinely granted;
And then, a thirst stage—oh, me, so long!
And then, a brook for, where it most is wanted.

What then? The pitching of the evening tent;
And then, perchance, a pillow rough and thorny;
And then, some sweet and tender message sent
To cheer the faint one for the morrow's journey.

What then? The wailing of the midnight wind,
A feverish sleep, a heart oppressed and aching,
And then, a little water-cruise to find
Close by my pillow, ready for my waking.

What then, I am not careful to inquire;
I know there will be tears and fears and sorrow,
And then a loving Savior drawing nigher
And saying, "I will answer for the morrow."

What then? For all my sin—his pardoning grace,
For all my wants and woe, his loving kindness,
For darkest shades the shining of God's face,
And CHRIST's own hand to lead me in my blindness.

What then? A shadowy valley lone and dim;
And then a deep and darkly rolling river;
And then, a flood of light, a seraph's hymn,
And God's own smile, forever and forever.

Our Letter Drawer.

Editor Restitution:—I am at home again. Found all well. After leaving Pierceton I went to Etna Green, and held meeting from Tuesday night till Sunday night—preaching eight times. Had a good meeting, good attention, and good interest all the time. There are a few there who are in the faith; among whom are Brother and Sister Elkins. They came from Plymouth. Mr. and Mrs. Pottinger also live there. They came from Brother Messinore's neighborhood; are believers in the truth and will obey soon. I think that is a good place to present the truth. I have promised to return there this spring, if the Lord will, and give them another meeting. I thought it might be of interest to some to hear from me through the RESTITUTION.

Yours, in the truth,
J. S. HATCH.

Crawfordsville, Ind.

Editor Restitution:—I have taken your paper one year. It is as good as a sermon whenever we get it, as we have no preaching here. My wife and I, and Brother Young and wife, are the only persons in the faith here. We often have to bear persecution for our belief, but we look to Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith, for support. It is a long time since we saw anything from Brother Foore. Should Brother Myers or Brother Reed ever come this way we hope they will call and see us.

Your brother, a strong believer in the kingdom of God.
WASHINGTON BURGE.

Editor Restitution:—I am greatly pleased with Brother Crozier's articles. I fear we have been too strenuous for full and complete knowledge of our views of truth in order to constitute a believer. I am prepared to go as far as our Lord or his apostles have defined the lines, but have long ago concluded to cease from any man as teacher. I say, let God be true. This business of steadying the ark has led to results which have proved disastrous to us as a body of immersed believers in the only hope set before us in the gospel. Far be it from me in any wise to lessen the terms of discipleship. The thing I most desire to know is, What must I do to be saved? and when this is learned, with alacrity obey the command. I find this text of discipleship: "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." I find an abundance of exhortations, such as—"Be ye perfect," "Mind not earthly things," etc.

Hoping for the time soon to come when mortality shall be swallowed up of life, I remain,

Your brother, in hope.

Editor Restitution:—The Letter to Friends is, as I know, but the A B C of our faith, but it is just what those need who know nothing of it. The Letter is especially to a church down East, but there are many friends here who have promised to read it if I would prepare it for them. I have no doubt that many readers of the RESTITUTION would have prepared it better, but I have done what I could with the help of God, and I do expect some of the seed to fall upon good ground, for it will be sown in tearful prayer. We would do so glad if we could do something for the RESTITUTION, but we are so heavily in debt for our home, and are paying so much interest, that we have nothing we can properly call our own—in fact work is so scarce we can hardly live, let alone paying for a house. However, we hope and trust, and will aim to do the will of God in all things. We trust we shall not hold back even a farthing that belongs to the Lord, or reserve any strength we can use in his service. We know you must be burthened, brethren, and would aid you if we could; but let us encourage one another, and press forward with lively hope and joy that soon our burthens may be laid down, and we enter into our rest.

THE CURSE REMOVED.

A most singular interpretation of Scripture was given during a recent revival in our city. The first text was Gen. i. 18: "Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee." These, it was claimed, were given because of the fall, and the earth was cursed for our sins. He then turned to Matthew xxvii. 29: "And when they had platted a crown of thorns, they put it on his head, and mocked and scourged him." Then he remarked, "And how well it became him, for he bore it for our sins." He then turned to Isa. lv. 13: "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree;" arguing that "when Christ took upon him our transgressions, he removed the curse from the world; the bearing of our sins took it away, and the fir and myrtle tree are coming up as proof."

Have the thorn and the thistle ceased to spring up? Ah, yes, according to our friend; they were all woven into that crown!

But we greatly fear that were Christ to come to-day, as he came to the Jews, there would be plenty of thorns found to weave him another crown. What next?

Yours, waiting for the removal of the curse. MRS. O. F. HALL.

Editor Restitution:—We praise God for what he is pleased to do through your instrumentality. We think that we would be pleased with a paper once in two weeks until the debts are paid, and the paper able to employ help to be issued weekly. The bi-monthly would be read far more thoroughly, and it might be in some instances that the Holy Bible would be read more. It might also be that contributors would find time to write articles in a more condensed form, and fewer of them. It seems painful for an editor to feel that every paper he issues is involving a deeper and deeper debt, thus violating the word of God—"owe no man anything but to love one another." But it is far from us to dictate or even to suggest what is best. We are only saying what we would be willing to submit to, rather than have the Association involved in debt. Thank you for the attention given the little pieces sent from here. Pray for us.

In christian love,
E. S. WILLARD.

Haddonfield, N. J.

[NOTE.—We hope to issue the paper nearly every week by making no charge for editorial services for the current year. In its business department we will do all we possibly can to save all expenses possible. We are doing a little too, as we think two or three hundred of our friends might do—paying two cash subscriptions for others. We thank you for assistance in this way; also a number of others who have sent extra help. If as many as can would help a little, we should be able for a weekly issue. Otherwise we may have to drop an occasional number. Our Heavenly Father we trust, will providentially watch over us if we live and labor for his cause and for the glory of his name. Thus far we may say the Lord hath helped us. Praised be his holy name. - ED.]

Correspondence.

Editor Restitution:—We are "a little forlorn hope" in Pierceton, weak and contemptible in the eyes of the world, and without any of the elements in our little body which worldly people would deem essential to success. But we know that feeble and few as we are, we have a mighty force behind to back us up. God's truth is behind us, and behind that truth is his own almighty arm. "They that be for us are more than they that be against us."

The fort of truth cannot be taken, and being fully assured of our strength, and armed, as we are, with all the weapons of Christian warfare, we are ready not only to stand on the defensive, proclaiming the glad tidings of the coming and kingdom of our Lord, but to die, if need be, for the name of the Lord Jesus.

We have for our sword the Word of God. We have learned its power over our own hearts, and are now prepared to use it in laying open the thoughts and intents of the hearts of others, to the eyes of him with whom we all have to do. We have the shield of faith to quench the fiery darts of the wicked. We have the hope of salvation for a helmet, our loins are girt about with truth, righteousness is our breast plate and the gospel of peace is as sandals to our feet.

"My strength," says Jesus, "is made perfect in weakness." He takes the weak things of this world to confound the mighty. "The poor of this world hath he chosen, rich in faith, and heirs of the Kingdom." We shall stand, though we wrestle not with flesh and blood. We shall stand against the wiles of the devil, God helping us. We shall stand as epistles of Christ, written with the Spirit of the living God, to be known and read of all men.

Pray for us, that we may open our mouths boldly, to make known the mystery of the gospel, that we may walk in all lowliness and humility of mind, doing nothing through strife, that we may esteem others better than ourselves, let the same mind be in us that was in Christ. Watch unto prayer with all perseverance and supplication for all saints; work out our own salvation with fear and trembling and having guarded the faith, having walked in the footsteps of the faith of our father Abraham, faithful to the end, we may receive the crown, promised to all them who love his appearing in the day of the Lord Jesus.

Oh! awake! lest ye enter not enter not in, because of unbelief! The "new administration" is about to be ushered in! Let all, all prepare! There is no time to waste!

In the Public Works Department, the chief places are filled by Englishmen, and the railroads will presently be placed under an English officer of engineers. Education is under French and English supervision. The Postmaster-General is from the General Post Office, London. In the Telegraph Department two English superintendents. The Judges of the Court of Appeal are also English. The army is chiefly officered by American Southerners.

It is a question whether the huge obelisk given by the Egyptian Government to England will be removed to the Thames embankment or broken up for building purposes. The answer should be prompt if the monument is to be saved. Its hieroglyphics are in only tolerable preservation, but they are of the best period. A leading shipping firm of Alexandria offer to put it up upon the Thames embankment for £10,000. The obelisk in the Place de la Concorde, at Paris, cost eight times that sum.

Living in prayer is indispensable to a spiritual life. The soul should be preserved in a frame of perpetual prayer because it is dependent upon God for all its supplies. Maintain this spirit everywhere and at all times. Mingle with no company, engage in no enterprise, indulge in no conversation no spirit that is unfriendly to prayer. —Selected.

Authenticity of the Scriptures.

Are there those here who doubt the authenticity of the Scriptures? There is not so much evidence that Shakespeare wrote "Macbeth," or that Bryant wrote "Thanatopsis," as it is certain that God, by the hand of his prophets and evangelists, wrote this book. Suppose a book were now to be written which clashed with the customs of society, would not society sift the matter to the bottom? Would not the fallacy be found out in a day? Now, I say, if Job, and David, and Paul, and Isaiah, and John and James were impostors, the fact of their imposture would have been found out by their contemporaries.

The fact that this book has come down through all the eras of antiquity, proves that it is indestructible. Do you know how near they came to destroying this Bible? At the period of the nativity of our Savior, were are said to have been only four thousand copies of it; now there are two hundred millions. This book has gone into all languages: into the philosophic Greek, the flowing Italian, the graceful German, the passionate French, the mystic Indian, and the exhaustless Anglo-Saxon.

The painter's pencil has glowed in pictures of the birth, the crucifixion, and the resurrection of Christ, and in the thrilling paintings of the Last Supper; these are on the walls of palaces and in the lowliest cottage. Solid stones, at the touch of the sculptor's chisel, have started up into the similitude of preaching apostles and ascending martyrs.

Do you tell me that this book, that has gone through the persecution of infernal contempt, is a human book? Suppose that some great plague should smite the earth, and a medicine should be discovered that would cure ten thousand people in a day; and suppose that thousands of persons stood up and testified that they took that remedy, and it had cured them.

Now, I ask you whether you will depend upon the testimony of millions of Christians throughout the earth who have proved the efficacy of the medicine for the soul, provided in the Bible, or whether you will take the testimony of a few sceptics who confess that they never even tasted the medicine?

The Bible said there was a city called Petra, which was built out of solid rock. The sceptics said there was no such city; but, after diligent exploration, it was discovered fashioned in the solid rock: one street, six miles long, built in the rock—the very street along which once marched imperial pomp; temples fashioned out of colored stone, some of which had actually blushed into the crimson of the rose, and some paled into the whiteness of the lily. Thus, with architecture, in column, in pediment, and in tablature God has written the truth of the Bible.

The Bible declared that Sodom and Gomorrah would be destroyed by fire and brimstone. The sceptics said, There is nothing in the elements that could possibly produce such a shower as that. Lieutenant Lynch went forth; he explored the Dead Sea, which, by an evolution of nature, has overflowed the site of those two cities, and he dropped his fathoming-irons to the bottom of the sea, and brought up great masses of sulphur and brimstone, the remains of the horrible tempest that swept over those two cities. Who is right—the Bible or the sceptics?

The Bible said there was a city called Nineveh, three days' journey round, that would be destroyed by fire and water. The sceptics said that no such city as that could be found, that could be destroyed by two such antagonistic elements. Layard and his party went forth in their explorations, and they found the city of Nineveh actually three days' journey round, as they computed the day's journey in the olden times, and that the city had really been destroyed by fire and water. the river Tigris being used to destroy a part of the city, while in other parts they found the remains of a fiery conflagration in heaps of charcoal, that were excavated, and in calcined slabs of gypsum. Who was right about Nineveh—the Bible or the sceptics?

The Bible speaks of the fine grapes in Egypt. "What a fallacy and an absurdity!" exclaimed the infidels; "there are no grapes in Egypt." Explorers went down into the underground vaults, to the subterranean cellars, and there they found all the processes of culturing the vine and treading out the grape, showing that the process was perfectly familiar to the people, and that in Bible times they did raise grapes in Egypt, whether they raise them there now or not. Who was right—the sceptics or the Word of God? When I consider all the arguments to prove the authenticity of God's Word, I am constrained to fall back upon the exclamation of the Psalmist, "The statutes of the Lord are right."—Dr. Talmage.

Sententious Paragraphs.

A well ordered house is a paradise on earth. No other earthly pleasure is equal to the calm contentment of the family fireside. The excitement of even successful business is attended with vexation; the enjoyments of travel are associated with fatigue and danger, and even the pleasures of knowledge are combined with bitterness. But the happiness of the fireside is undivided.

The shortest and surest way to live with honor in the world is to be in reality what you would appear to be; and if we observe we shall find that all human virtues increases and strengthen by the practice and experience of them.

Cheerfulness is always to be kept up if a man is out of pain; but mirth, to a prudent man, should always be accidental. It should naturally arise out of the occasion, and the occasion seldom laid for it.—Steele.

Like flakes of snow, that fall unperceived upon the earth, the seemingly unimportant events of life succeed one another. As the snow gathers together, so are our habits formed. No single flake that is added to the pile produces a sensible change. No single action creates, however it may exhibit, a man's character; but as the tempest hurls the avalanche down the mountains, and overwhelms the inhabitant and his habitation, so passion, acting upon the elements of mischief which pernicious habits have brought together by imperceptible accumulation, may overthrow the edifice of truth and virtue.

Discourses on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Brasnan, Congregational minister, and W. Kelloway, editor of Bible Echo, and subscriber of the Gospel. Both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by W. C. B. 2. That the Scriptures teach that man in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth, bevelled boards, well bound, 65c; postage 12c. Paper cover, 35c; postage 5c.

Duration and Nature of Future Punishment. By Rev. R. Constable, M. A. late Prebendary of Cork, Ireland. 320 pp. An elaborate argument touching the punishment of the unsaved. It is particularly fine in its philological chapters respecting the meaning of the Greek words used by the inspired writers to indicate the doom of the lost. Price 51; postage 10c.

"We hail this book with lively satisfaction. Undoubtedly the subject which it treats with such an attractive combination of learning and modesty, of power and reverence, has laid hold of the minds of many of the most thoughtful Christian men of our day. Its growth, from a pamphlet to the first edition to a handsome volume of three hundred and thirty pages in the fourth, is conclusive proof that the question discussed is one of profound importance.....We must also compliment the publishers on the tasteful and handsome dress in which they present the book to the public, and express the hope that the necessary outlay will speedily be much more than recovered by the large sale of a work which must take a standard place in this painfully misunderstood department of Christian theology.—The Rainbow.

This work presents the Bible doctrines of the state of man between death and the resurrection.

"Mr. Constable has, in a series of works, devoted much labor and research to establishing from Scripture and other sources the real nature of the future state; and the present book is the result of his more extended labors on a special point. His argument is supported by no little learning, is keen in logic, and a clear and available style. There is a good deal to be said for the general doctrines propounded."—Manchester Herald.

"It is characterized by his usual vigor of thought and clearness of expression. To all lovers of truth, rather than of tradition, we cordially commend the treatise."—The Church Messenger.

Bible Echo. Volume I, May to December, edited by W. Kelloway. The only English work that advocates the ancient Gospel. Bound volume of numbers of the Bible Echo, containing important papers and discussions on vital matters, and the news concerning the spread of the scriptural doctrines of immortality. Price $3.50.

Bible Echo. Vol. II, January to June, 1875. This is a continuation of the above for the period named. Price 62.

Bible Echo. Vol. III, July to September, 1875. Price complete of the Bible Echo as a weekly newspaper, and also embracing the old series. Price $1.50.

Bible Echo. New Series. Monthly numbers from October, 1875. The yearly subscription for this magazine, including the 3 months of last year, is $3 00.

New Facts Upon all Subjects. By the author of "Enquiry Within Upon Everything." Useful to the physician, the artist, the chemist, the engineer, the manufacturer, the agriculturist, the gardener, and the housekeeper. 350 pp. Price $0.75; postage 10c.

A New Work by Mrs. H. V. Reed.

Earnest Words for Home Readers. Nearly 200 pp. Well printed on heavy toned paper, neatly bound in cloth. Price 80c; postage 10c.

"This book is one of the most satisfactory of its kind that could be written; indeed we know of none other in every way so pleasing to those who see the necessity of making the Bible a revelation from God. We would be more than content, we would be proud, if the title page bore our name instead of that of the amiable and talented lady, the authoress. Her "Bible Triumphant" was a good work, and it is, we know, warmly appreciated by many; but this work, so original, so forcible, so convincing, it would be hard to name where its success will end. Everybody should possess a copy."—Ed. Bible Echo.

NOTE.—Triumphant, A new supply is expected. Price, paper covers, 50c; cloth 75c.

Reflections on Hearing a Church Bell.

BY C. P. CATLIN.

Hark! hark to the music of yon ringing bell,
As peal upon peal of pride it doth tell.
Full many a dollar has placed it on high,
To drown with its clamor the poor Christian's sigh.

Far off on the breeze, its metallic tone
Is wafted triumphant o'er poverty's groan;
And most are delighted to hear—O for shame!—
What a glorious bell they can boast in their fane.

The sick man is dying on yon garret floor;
And orphans are begging beside of thy door;
The widow is wiping the tears from her cheek,
As she thinks what she's earn'd for her babes thro' the week.

But churchmen don't heed it, the proud and the gay,
As they dress for inspection and hasten away;
The feathers are flying, and flounces do wave,
As the ladies go swinging themselves thro' the nave.

There sits an old Deacon, as sober as Time,
Not thinking his grinding the poor is a crime;
And there, the gay singers with chanting await
The rising of Parson, all dressed up in state.

And hark! how the organ rolls deafening praise,
In full diapason, on this blest of days;
While the poor seek the gallery or uncushion'd seat
'Way back in some corner, or at other's feet.

And now up arises the preacher in form,
And reads a few stanzas—all powder'd and shorn;
And when the choir sings it admirably o'er,
He riseth and prayeth, in form, as before.

The heavens above him—just under the roof—
Return him an answer, in echoes of proof
That his prayer is accepted; and the people are plean'd;
'Tis all he expected, and hence he is ean'd.

Great God! Is this worship? Can this be a place
Where Jesus conferreth his blood purchas'd grace!
Can he, who did wander, without house or home,
Bless such an assemblage, beneath such a dome!—

While widows are weeping, and orphan's seek bread,
And His poor disciples lie dying and dead,
With none to care for them or give them relief
Among the professors of pop'lar belief?

Stop! stop, you, friend sexton! stay ringing that bell!
It seems but the music that leadeth to hell;
It calls for the gay, in gay tones, to come in
And learn the religion that cloaks over sin.

O stay, for God's sake! pray ring it no more!
Tear down that high steeple, and close up that door;
Burn all the church trappings, and never again
Call out an assemblage of such Christian men.

The ground underneath thee is trembling now,
The curse upon Babylon will soon lay her low;
Fly! fly! ere the day of God's vengeance is come,
And you, like a Judas, sink down to your home.

The Coming Kingdom—No. 1.

BY AUSTIN CURTIS.

"Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." Matt. vi. 10.

The above prayer, that has ascended to God's throne from thousands of believing hearts, will be answered, "for the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayer." 1 Pet. iii. 12; Prov. xv. 29.

God once had a kingdom on earth; for we read, in 1 Chron. xxix. 23: "Then Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as king instead of David his father, and prospered; and all Israel obeyed him." David said to "all the princes of Israel," God "hath chosen Solomon my son to sit upon the throne of the kingdom of the Lord over Israel." "Moreover, I will establish his kingdom forever, if he be constant to do my commandments and my judgments, as at this day." 1 Chron. xxviii. 5, 7; 2 Chron. ix. 8; xiii. 8; Ex. xix. 1-6. The continuance of God's kingdom over Israel, was made contingent upon their adherence to his commandments, as clearly shewn in Psa. cxxxii. 11, 12. In tracing the history of the long line of Israel's kings, from Saul to Zedekiah, we find that they became so corrupt and wicked, that God overturned the kingdom, that they had so shamefully desecrated. Ezekiel represents God as saying to Zedekiah: "And thou profane, wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end. Thus saith the Lord God; remove the diadem, and take off the crown; this shall not be the same; exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him." Ezek. xxi. 24-27.

The kingdom of the Lord over Israel has been in an overturned condition, ever since the days of Zedekiah. But this subverted condition of the throne and kingdom of Israel, is limited. It will not, however, be restored, until he come whose right it is, then God will give it him. Before inquiring to whom God will give this kingdom, let us inquire,—

1. Will it be restored? Hath God spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, anything concerning a restoration of the tabernacle of David, that is now in ruins? Acts iii. 19-21. "In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen down, and close up the breaches thereof; and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old." Amos ix. 11. "Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. And to this agree the words of the prophets, as it is written: After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up." Acts xv. 13-17. God's foreknowledge enables him to thus declare the end from the beginning. Verse 18; Rom. iv. 1 Cor. i. 28.

Indeed, the language of the text (in Ezekiel) is found to be an unanswerable argument, in favor of the restoration of God's ancient kingdom—the kingdom of Israel. It was to be no more until he come whose right it is. Thus clearly demonstrating that it was not to remain in a subverted condition forever, but only until a specified event, the coming of a rightful ruler.

In the first chapter of Acts, there is strong presumptive proof that the kingdom of God will be restored. After the resurrection of Jesus, he was seen of the apostles, for forty days; and, during all this time, he spoke of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. Verse 3. Jesus preached the gospel, by preaching the kingdom of God, both prior and subsequent to his death, burial, and resurrection. Matt. ix. 35; Luke iv. 43, 44; viii. 1; ix. 2, 11 60. How men can preach the gospel, and not preach the things concerning the kingdom of God, as well as the name of Jesus Christ, is a mystery to me. Acts viii. 5, 12; xix. 8-10; xx. 25; xxviii. 22-24, 30, 31. As I do not wish to digress, I will at once resume my line of argument. The apostles had heard Jesus speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. Now, note the query put to Jesus, by the apostles, whom he had carefully instructed: "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" Acts i. 6. Were they wrong in their view, that the kingdom of God would be restored? If so, will not Jesus now correct them? Hear his answer. "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power." verse 7. So far, then, from dispelling their hope, Christ's answer confirms it. There was no question, with them, concerning the event itself. They asked concerning the time of restoration. In this, they were wrong; but not in the event of a restoration. Having now discovered that the scepter has departed from Israel, and David's throne is in ruins, and will remain so, until he come whose right it is, and that God will give it him. That it will then be restored again to Israel, let us inquire:

2. Who is this coming One? Who is this rightful Ruler? Turning to the prophecy of Isaiah, we read, concerning the child born, or son given: "The government shall be upon his shoulder. . . . Of the increase of his government and peace, there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Psa. ix. 6, 7. Some seven hundred and forty years subsequent to this prophecy, the angel Gabriel predicts the birth of David's royal seed (Psa. lxxxix. 3, 4, 20, 35, 36,) in the following language: "Fear not, Mary, for thou hast found favor with God. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 30-33. Thus we have angelic proof, that Christ is the royal seed of David, that is destined to sit on the throne of his father David, and sway the scepter of earth's dominion. The same dominion forfeited by the first Adam, through transgression. Gen. i. 26-28. Even the first dominion. Micah iv. 7, 8. For more proof upon this subject, let us hear the answer of Jesus given in response to the query of Pilate: "Art thou a king, then?" "Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a King. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." Jno. xviii. 33, 38. And Paul said, Christ witnessed a good confession before Pontius Pilate. 1 Tim. vi. 13. This was his accusation. Matt. xxvii. 11, 37; Mark xv. 26; Luke xxiii. 38; Jno. xix. 19. God, in order to fulfill his oath to David, raised up Christ to sit on his throne. Acts ii. 29-32. "Believest thou this?" Having discovered that the coming One is Christ, I will now inquire,—

3. Is his reign to be literal or spiritual? In the Book of Daniel is brought to view, five universal kingdoms; the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Grecian and Roman. The fifth, and last, being the kingdom of God. Dan. ii. 1, 28-46; vii. 1-28. Now, I inquire, Was not the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, literal? Dan. ii. 37, 38. Was not the reign of Darius and Cyrus, the kings of Media and Persia, literal? Dan. v. 30, 31; vi. 28; viii. 20; Ezra i. 1, 2; Dan. 5. 25-28. Was not the reign of Alexander, the Grecian, literal? Dan. ii. 39; viii. 21. Was not the authority of the Roman Empire literal? Since the first to the fourth, in the series of universal kingdoms, were literal, in every respect, does it not furnish a precedent, that the fifth, or last, in the series, will be literal also? Is it reasonable to suppose that the first, second, third and fourth universal kingdom, would be literal, and the fifth, spiritual? Does not the same prophet, that speaks of the literal birth-place of Jesus, speak also of his being, in the future, a literal ruler in Israel? Micah v. 2. Why admit the one to be literal, and claim the other to be spiritual? Why admit the twenty-sixth to the thirty-first verse, of the first chapter of Luke, to be literal, and claim the two following verses, (32 and 33), that speak of his reign, to be spiritual? Was not his birth, death, burial, resurrection, and ascension, literal? Luke i. 30, 31; Gal. iv. 4; 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4; Acts i. 9-11. Will not his future appearing and kingdom be literal also? 2 Tim. iv. 1; 1 Thess. iv. 16; Dan. vii. 13, 14. Was not his sufferings literal? If so, will not his triumphs be equally as literal? Rom. viii. 17; 2 Tim. ii. 12; 1 Pet. iv. 13. It has been truly said: "The same earth that drank up the blood of the Son of God, will yet witness his triumphs." He died upon a literal cross, and will reign upon a literal throne.

The Bible True---A Letter to a Friend.

BY WM. G. TAYLOR.

The government of Israel was monarchial, God was King, and he, besides giving them laws and ordering their religion, also appointed their leaders or rulers. Thus Moses was sent to deliver them out of Egypt, while Joshua was selected to lead them into the promised land. After his death, as the apostle says, "God gave unto them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel, the prophet. And afterwards they desired a king, and he gave unto them Saul . . . . and when he had removed him, he raised up unto them David to be their king." Acts viii. 10.

In the closing years of David's reign, we have a further and more remarkable insight into the purpose of God, in the message he sent by Nathan to the king than at any preceding time. The words of the message are as follows: "And when thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee . . . , and I will establish his kingdom. He shall build an house for my name, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever. I will be his father, and he shall be my son . . . My mercy shall not depart away from him, as I took it from Saul whom I put away before thee. And thine house and thy kingdom shall be established forever before thee; thy throne shall be established forever." 2 Sam. vii. 12, 16.

This covenant is called the sure mercies of David, and of which we read further in the 89th Psa., "I have made a covenant with my chosen. I have sworn unto David my servant, thy seed will I establish forever, and build up thy throne to all generation." And again, "My mercy will I keep for him for evermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him. His seed also will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven." And still again we read, "My covenant will I not break nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established forever as the moon and as a faithful witness in heaven." Psa. 89 3-4, 28-29, 34-37.

From these passages we learn that the family or house of David was appointed the royal family of God's kingdom—the kingdom of Israel. In the second place that a seed was to be born in his house, after his death, of whom God says, "I will be his father, and he will be my son." 2 Sam. vii. 14. "He shall build an house for my name, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever." 2 Sam. vii. 13.

And in the third place, that the covenant is to be sure, for says God, "My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me." Psa. 89, 34-36.

Continuing then our slight sketch of the history of the Kingdom, we find that Solomon succeeded David upon the throne, and by his wisdom raised the nation to the zenith of its prosperity and fame. After Solomon the kingdom was divided—ten tribes uniting under Jeroboam and forming the house of Israel, and the remaining two, under Rehoboam, the house of Judah.

The house of Israel continued to exist as a kingdom for about two hundred and seventy years, when Shalmaneser, king of Assyria invaded the country and carried the ten tribes into a captivity from which they never returned.

From the accession of Rehoboam to the throne of David his descendants continued to rule the two tribes for four hundred years; but at the end of that time Zedekiah and the greater part of the nation were carried to Babylon.

Thus the kingdom of David for a time came to an end, for Zedekiah was the last of his family who ever occupied the throne of Judah. But the question may be asked, Was not the kingdom re-established under the Maccabean princes, and again under the Herods? The answer to this query is no; for the following reasons. The Maccabees, I think, with but one exception, never arrogated to themselves the title of king, neither could they, for they belonged to the priestly tribe of Levi, while the royal line belonged to the tribe of Judah.

Respecting the Herodian family, they were Idumeans by birth, and therefore it could hardly be urged that any rule of theirs was a restoration of the kingdom and throne of David, seeing they did not even belong to the nation.

Seeing then that David's kingdom came to an end in the captivity of Zedekiah, the question will be likely to suggest itself, How can that agree with the promise to David that his throne and kingdom should exist forever?

Well, in reply to this, turn to the 89th Psa. again, and you will find the following words:

"If his (David's) children forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments; if they break my statutes and keep not my commandments, then will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes." But it is added, nevertheless my loving kindness will I not utterly take from him nor suffer my faithfulness to fail, my covenant will I not break nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips."

Accordingly we have the following denunciation against Zedekiah from Ezekial, the last king's contemporary: "Thou profane, wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end, thus saith the Lord God. Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same; exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it (the throne) shall be no more, until he comes whose right it is; and I will give it him." Eze. xxi. 26.

T: e above removes the difficulty for we see that the uninterrupted continuance of David's family upon the throne, was only guaranteed upon their continuing to keep the statutes and commandments of the Lord. If they transgressed, he says, "I will visit their iniquity with the rod."

As additional testimony to this effect, it seems this was also David's understanding of the covenant, for he said to Solomon when giving him charge of the kingdom before his death, "Keep the charge of the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, to keep his statutes and his commandments, and his judgments, and his testimonies as it is written in the law of Moses, that thou mayest prosper in all that thou doest, and whithersoever thou turnest thyself; that the Lord may continue his word which he spake concerning me, saying, If thy children take heed to their way, to walk before me in truth with all their heart, and with all their soul there shall not fail thee a man on the throne of Israel." 1 Kings ii. 3, 4.

Transgression and disregard of the law of Moses was the cause of the temporary overthrow of the kingdom, but as God said his faithfulness would not fail, it has only been overthrown until he come whose right it is, to whom it will be given.

Having carried the history of the kingdom of Israel up to the time of its overthrow by Nebuchadnezzar, and having further learned the cause of the overthrow, and that it was only temporary. I come now to consider what testimony we have respecting its reconstruction and character in the future. In continuing the consideration of this subject with a view to determine the full import of revelation respecting the re-establishment of that kingdom whose overthrow we have just considered, we leave the historians of long accomplished facts, and seek to penetrate the future under the guidance of those holy men of old to whom God, for our instruction communicated his mind regarding the future welfare and destiny of the world.

As we have just seen, the kingdom of Judah came to an end in the captivity of Babylon; and although a great part of the nation again returned, the old dominion was never again restored. The descendants of those who returned from Babylon continued to exist under various governments as a distinct people until about seventy years after Christ, when the Romans took and despoiled Jerusalem, and scattered the Jewish people among the nations, where for nearly eighteen hundred years they have been a bye-word and a reproach.

Of the kingdom of David, then hardly more remains than the name. The ten tribes are lost, and the other two are scattered among the nations, while over the land promised to Abraham floats the flag of the indolent and superstitious Moslem. Such then is the present condition of the people of God, of whom the prophet has so truly sung:

"More blest each palm that shades those plains
Than Israel's scattered race,
For, taking root, it there remains
In solitary grace;
It cannot quit its place of birth,
It will not live in other earth.

But we must wander witheringly,
In other lands to die;
And where our fathers' ashes be,
Our own may never lie;
Our temple hath not left a stone,
And mocking eits on Salem's throne."

But the same hand that scattered Israel will yet gather them, and bring them to their own land, as it is written, "The deliverer shall come to Zion and turn away ungodliness from Jacob." The deliverer spoken of is the seed promised to David, of whom God says, "I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever. I will be his father and he will be my son." 2 Sam. vii. 13, 14.

This shows very distinctly that the personage under whom the kingdom is to be re-established, is none other than the Son of God, for says he, "I will be his father and he will be my son."

Respecting the fulfillment of this promise to David. God by Jeremiah nearly five hundred years after spake as follows: "Behold the days come, saith the Lord that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Judah. In those days, and at that time, will I cause the branch of righteousness to grow up to David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land." Jer. xxxiii. 14.

That the covenant will be fulfilled we have the following assurance: "Thus saith the Lord; If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season; then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne." Jer. xxxiii. 10.

But nearly five hundred years passed away, and still the promised Messiah came not. However, a wide spread conviction was current in the East about the end of that time, founded no doubt upon the prophecy in Daniel, which says, from the going forth of the command to restore and build Jerusalem to Messiah the prince should be seventy weeks, each day counting for an year, that the time of the promised deliverer's advent had arrived. True to the promise of Daniel's seventy weeks and the general expectation, the Messiah appeared in the world. An angel announced his birth, and future position on this wise: "Fear not Mary, for thou hast found favor with God, and behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son and shall call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 30.

Christ according to the prophet, speaking seven hundred years before his birth, was born in Bethlehem, "Thou Bethlehem Ephratah though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me he that is to be ruler in Israel." Micah v. 2. An angel appeared to the shepherds by night and said, "Fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David (Bethlehem) a Savior, who is Christ the Lord." Luke ii. 10, 11.

When Herod heard a king was born to the Jews he was troubled, and demanded where he was to be born—he was promptly answered, "In Bethlehem of Judea; for thus it is written by the prophet, and thou Bethlehem, in the land of Judea, art not least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a governor, that shall rule my people Israel." Matt. ii. 5.

So much to show how minutely the prophecy respecting the birth of Christ was fulfilled.

We may not strive with our Maker, but may reason and plead with him.

We may bear the smart of God's rod, but not the weight of his wrath.

When the heart is hot let the tongue be unbridled.

Will Christ Come?

Yes, brethren and sisters, I firmly believe that Christ will come. Proof: Matt. xxiv. 3. "And as he sat upon the Mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?"

Again, Matt. xxiv. 27: "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be."

See also 1 Thess. i. 10: "And to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come." Chap. ii. 19: "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?"

Again, 1 John ii. 28: "And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming."

See 1 Cor. i. 7: "So that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." The saints will reign with Christ when he comes. Where will they reign? On the earth. Proof: Rev. v. 9, 10: "And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the Book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth. xx. 4, ... "And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." Prov. xi. 31, ... "Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth." St. Luke xiv. 14, ... "for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Matt. xvi. 27: "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." Rev. xxii. 12: "And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be."

Dear Brother Chaplin, this is my first effort to write an article for the RESTITUTION. Dear brother may God bless you in your good work, and save you in his kingdom, is my prayer.

Union with Christ and its Results.

"Union with anything signifies such a connection as, in some form, constitutes sameness." Therefore, to be united to Christ implies that the person thus united is, in a certain sense, one with him.

Let us search the Divine Record, and ascertain if possible what step must be taken in order to become one with Christ. Paul assures us, in his letter to the Galatian brethren, "that as many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ; for," he says, "There is neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free, neither male nor female, but all are one in Christ Jesus." Hence, if we are baptized into Christ we are one with him. But, in what sense are we one with him? asks the searcher for truth. We will conclude, from the language of the following Scripture, that it is by joint heirship: "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus," "and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." And further, "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." Therefore, by forming a union with Christ we become the seed of Abraham and heirs with him in the same inheritance.

Having the assurance, then, that we are Abraham's seed and heirs with him, it is to our interest to know of what that inheritance consists. The covenant is short and pointed, and we give it in the language of Moses: "I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession." And after Abraham had left his country and kindred, and had gone over into the land of Canaan, as commanded, the Lord again appeared unto him and said, "Unto thy seed will I give this land."

Glorious thought! We are heirs to the land of Canaan; or, in a wider limitation, "the uttermost parts of the earth," as expressed by the Psalmist. Oh! how important that we should form a union with Christ, the life giver, and as a consequence become Abraham's seed and heirs, according to promise. Dear reader, is this your happy state? Are you united to Christ? If not, rest unsatisfied until you know of a truth that this blessed union has been formed.

"Oh! I want to cross over, don't you, where he reigns?
I want to cross over on Eden's fair plains;
I want to be gathered, in Canaan's bright land,
Yes, over the river where the ransomed shall stand."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates a measure to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints associated with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as preparatory to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The Gospel of The Kingdom—No. 1.

BY T. FINK.

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness, and then shall the end come. Matt. xxiv. 14.

Gospel is good news; so the gospel of the kingdom is the good news of the kingdom. Not the good news of a kingdom located by the imaginations of men's minds, either up in heaven, or, mystically, among the nations of the earth, or in the hearts of men that are as ignorant of the nature of a kingdom as they are of the plan of God in the salvation of the world; neither is it the good news of a kingdom located upon the new earth after the fires of the judgment day; all these theories exist only in the imagination of men's minds, and have no foundation in the word of God. But the good news of the kingdom of God; the definite kingdom, spoken of throughout the Scriptures as the kingdom of God, or kingdom of heaven. It is called the kingdom of heaven, because it was of heavenly appointment, or appointed by the God of heaven. Now if we can find in the Bible, where this kingdom was organized, we shall have succeeded in finding a starting point, and then we can easily follow the subject and arrive at a Scriptural conclusion.

Let us turn to the Gen. xii., and there we find that God commanded Abram to get out of his country, and from his kindred, and from his father's house, into a country that God would show him; and God says, I will make thee a great nation, and I will bless thee and make thy name great, and thou shalt be a blessing, and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed. And Abram took Sarai, his wife, and Lot, his brother's son, and all the substance that they had gotten in Haran, and they went to go into the land of Canaan; and into the land of Canaan they came. And the Lord appeared unto Abram, and said, Unto thy seed will I give this land. And in chap. xiii. 12 to 15, we find that Abram dwelt in the land of Canaan, and Lot dwelt in the cities of the plain, and pitched his tent toward Sodom. And the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: for all the land that thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed, forever. And in chap. xvii. 7, 8, God says to Abraham, I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee in their generations, for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee and to thy seed after thee. And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God. And in the 6th verse God says, I will make nations of thee, and kings shall come out of thee.

In these passages we find that God made choice of Abraham and his seed to be God's own people, and he also chose the land of Canaan as their inheritance. And he established them in the land of his choice. And God promised Abraham that he would make nations of him, and that kings should come out of him. Did God fulfil this promise to him? He certainly did. Let us follow the descendants of Abraham, and we find that God watched over them, and kept them separate from all other. And they dwelt in the land of Canaan until there was a famine in the land, and they went down into the land of Egypt and dwelt there, and served the Egyptians, until God heard their groanings and forced the Egyptians to let them go back to their own land, as recorded in Exodus vi. 5 verse and onward. God spake to Moses and said, "I appeared unto Abraham, and unto Isaac, and unto Jacob; and I have established my covenant with them, to give them the land of Canaan, the land of their pilgrimage, wherein they were strangers. And I also have heard the groanings of the children of Israel, whom the Egyptians keep in bondage; and I have remembered my covenant. Wherefore say unto the children of Israel, I am the Lord, and I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians, and I will rid you out of their bondage, and I will redeem you with an outstretched arm, and with great judgments: And I will bring you in unto the land, concerning the which I did swear to give it to Abraham, and to Isaac, and to Jacob; and I will give it to you for a heritage: for I am the Lord."

Did God establish a kingdom in this land and with this people? He did, most assuredly.

In 1 Sam. viii., we find that the children of Israel became dissatisfied, and wanted a king, like the rest of the nations; and in the 10th chap. 1 verse, we find that Saul is anointed king over Israel, and in verse 25, Samuel told the people the manner of the kingdom, and wrote it in a book; and in chap. xiv. 47, we read that Saul took the kingdom over Israel, and fought against all their enemies on every side. These were God's chosen people and they were in the land of promise, and God sent Samuel to anoint Saul king over them. So we find a kingdom established by the God of heaven. And really, and to all intents and purposes, the kingdom of God. And Saul did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, and the Lord rent the kingdom from him and gave it to David; and David, being a man after God's own heart, did the will of God so far as the administration of his government was concerned. And David slept with his fathers, and Solomon, his son, reigned in his stead over the house of Israel, or kingdom of God. And after Solomon had builded the house of the Lord, the Lord appeared unto him the second time, and the Lord said unto him, "I have heard thy prayer and thy supplication that thou hast made before me, and have hallowed this house that thou hast built to my name there forever, and mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually. And if thou will walk before me, as did David, thy father, walk, in integrity of heart, and in uprightness, to do according to all that I have commanded thee, and wilt keep my statutes and judgments then will I establish the throne of thy kingdom upon Israel for ever, as I promised to David thy father, saying, There shall not fail thee a man to sit upon the throne of Israel. But if ye shall at all turn from following me, ye or your children, and will not keep my commandments, and my statutes, which I have set before you but go and serve other gods and worship them, then will I cast off Israel out of the land which I have given them. And this house which I have hallowed for my name, will I cast out of my sight, and Israel shall be a proverb and a byword among all people." 1 Kings ix. 2-7.

Solomon proved to be a very wise king, and ruled the kingdom well, but we find in the xi. 1 Kings, that Solomon loved many strange women of the nations, concerning which, the Lord said unto the children of Israel, ye shall not go. And when Solomon was old, his wives turned away his heart after other gods, and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God, as was David, his father's, and the Lord God was angry with Solomon, because his heart was turned away from the Lord God of Israel which had appeared unto him twice and had commanded him concerning this thing, that he should not go after other gods. But he kept not that which the Lord commanded him. Wherefore the Lord said unto Solomon: "For as much as this is done by thee, and thou hast not kept my covenant, and my statutes, which I have commanded thee, I will rend the kingdom from thee and will give it to thy servant, notwithstanding in thy day will I not do it for David thy father's sake, but I will rend it out of thy son's hand. Howbeit I will not rend away all the kingdom, but will give one tribe to thy son, for David my servant's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake, which I have chosen." And it came to pass at that time, when Jeroboam went out of Jerusalem, that the prophet Abijah, the Shilonite, found him in the way, and he had clad himself with a new garment, and they two were alone in the field, and Abijah caught the new garment that was on him, and rent it in twelve pieces, and he said to Jeroboam, "Take thee ten pieces, for thus saith the Lord the God of Israel. Behold I will rend the kingdom out the hand of Solomon, and will give ten tribes to thee. Because they have forsaken me, and have worshiped Ashtoreth, the goddess of the Zidonians; Chemosh, the god of the Moabites; and Milcom, the god of the children of Ammon, and have not walked in my ways, to do that which is right in mine eyes, and to keep my statutes and my judgments to do them, as did David, his father, Howbeit, I will not take the whole kingdom out of his hand, but I will make him a prince all the days of his life for David, my servant's sake, whom I chose because he kept my commandments, and my statutes. But I will take the kingdom out of his son's hand, and will give it unto thee, even ten tribes. And unto his son will I give one tribe, that David may always have a light before me in Jerusalem, the city which I have chosen to put my name there."

And Solomon slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city of David, his father, and Rehoboam reigned in his stead. And the ten tribes rebelled against Rehoboam, and made Jeroboam king over them. And we find that they had a succession of kings over the house of Israel, or the ten tribes until Hoshea became their king. And he reigned nine years over Israel and he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, and the Lord was very angry with them, and cast them out of his sight, and Hoshea was carried away captive by Shalmanaser, king of Assyria, and shut up in prison, and Israel was carried away out of the land, and men brought in from other countries to fill up their cities. And thus was the kingdom of Israel overthrown as recorded in 2 Kings xvii.

We find also that Rehoboam was succeeded in the kingdom over Judah until the reign of Zedekiah and in the ninth year of his reign, Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, came against Jerusalem and besieged it for two years, and the city was broken up, and the men of war fled by night, and the king, Zedekiah, went the way toward the plain, and the army of the Chaldeans pursued after the king, and overtook him in the plains of Jericho, and all his army was scattered from him, so they took the king and brought him up to the king of Babylon to Riblah, and they gave judgment against him, and they slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes, and they put out his eyes, and bound him with fetters, and carried him to Babylon and he died there. And the king of Babylon smote them and slew them at Riblah in the land of Hamath. So Judah was carried away out of their land, and their kingdom overthrown. Jer. lii. Now turn to Ezekiel xxi. 26, 27. God, speaking of Zedekiah says: "Thou profane, wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come when iniquity shall have an end. Thus saith the Lord God, remove the diadem, take off the crown, this shall not be the same. Exalt him that is low, abase him that is high, I will overture, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is. And I will give it him."

The Samaritans of Mount Gerizim hate the Jews as of old. A traveler recently asked one of them, "What do you really think of Jesus of Nazareth?" He thought a moment, and answered: "I am sure he was a good man, or else the Jews would never have crucified him."

The Bible Tract—A Letter to a Friend.

BY WM. G. TAYLOR.

Such, then, are some of the effects of the kingdom and rule of Christ in the earth. At the close of 1000 years all enemies will have been subdued. Then will follow the great judgment, and the final separation of the evil and the good. The former will be destroyed, the latter will inherit all things. Then will the glorious restitution spoken of by the mouth of all God's holy prophets be completed. Beyond that event, stretching into the measureless ages of eternity, we see a renewed and sinless world, peopled with a glorified and immortal population, in which there shall be no more curse, no more death, "neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away." "Then the tabernacle of God" will be "with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God." Rev. xxi. and xxii.

Such is the future of the world and its inhabitants as revealed in the Bible. It will now be our task to show how completely that revelation meets all the moral and physical wants of mankind, and how it provides for the political evils of the world by the establishment of a power that will finally introduce peace and good will among all the inhabitants of the earth. All the wants or deficiencies of the individual may be summed up in the words—moral and physical. The deficiencies of the latter subject us to death and all its attendant pains, from the deficiencies of the former result ambition and tyranny, indeed all the evils that arise from a deficient, ill regulated or perverted understanding. But the evils of these deficiencies in the individual are little compared to the consequences of the same defects in the rulers of the world. Too often it has been by virtue of might rather than right that princes and kings have reigned, and not mercy. [redacted] to power has been stained by human blood. Empires and thrones have been conquered at the bayonet point, and by the same means alone can they be maintained. Hence the history of nations and states and of the world at large, has been to a great extent a record of war and bloodshed. More or less this has always been true, but in our day, in the nineteenth century of the Christian era with all its boasted civilization, it seems truer than ever before. Within twenty years six great wars have taken place on the continent of Europe, not to speak of smaller ones, and larger ones elsewhere. Moreover, when we look at the existing state of affairs with a view to our immediate prospects, the result is more than appalling. The various arms and implements of warfare at present existing in Europe far exceed that of any previous day, and as far as actual peace is concerned, experience teaches us to say, "we hardly know what a day may bring forth."

If, then, we have no revelation, what are our prospects? The struggle for existence will continue and intensify, in which the weak will go to the wall, and the strong continue the fight till disease and death find them peace in the grave, while other generations more selfish and more unscrupulous continue the exterminating warfare over their graves.

Politically, the fierce struggle for empire would also continue, in which the weaker powers would be swallowed up, leaving the giants to prolong the fight among themselves, and where such a contest would end and with what consequences, is a problem that might well appall the most hopeful of political speculators.

But, in the purpose of God, as revealed in his word, and as I have shown in the earlier part of this paper, we have the assurance of a better hope both for man and the world. For man, as I have shown, God has provided in the person of his Son a Savior, as it is written,—"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John iii. 16. Christ, when upon earth extended the gracious invitation, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light." Matt. xi. 28. After he ascended to heaven, he said by his servant John, "The spirit and the bride say, Come, and let him that heareth, say, Come, and let him that is athirst, come, and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Rev. xxii. 17.

From these and many other passages we learn that the mission of Christ was to give all who believed in him eternal life. Accordingly we read: "The wages of sin, is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. vii. 23. In this revelation, then, we find a complete remedy for all our wants, physical as well as moral. For death we will have life everlasting, and for all our pain, all our sorrows, and all our cares an eternity of joy and peace. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." 1 Cor. ii. 9.

No less complete and effective in its results will be the remedy provided for the introduction of peace and prosperity among the nations. Man has been the main instrument in the government of the world for nearly 6000 years, and the consequences are that the history of that rule is a record of ambition and aggression, a trampling underfoot of the weak and an everlasting death-grapple of the strong for dominion. But all this will be changed, for, as I have shown, God has appointed a time in which he will rule the world in righteousness by Jesus Christ. Of him, the prophet said: "He shall judge among many people and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Micah iv. 3. "At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem; neither [redacted] more after the [redacted] Isa. [redacted] nations shall come and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Micah iv. 2.

And, now, in conclusion, what have I done? I have done what I proposed in the first place, shown that the Bible is a book of only one story. That story is the revelation of God's will concerning man and the earth he inhabits. The necessity for such a revelation began with the fall, and, therefore, with that event began the hope of a restoration in the promise that the woman's seed should bruise the serpent's head. Looking along all the various points which came to light in the development of that purpose as revealed, we find, on reaching the end, the fulfillment of that promise. Jesus was the seed promised to the woman, and of him we read: "He must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." 1 Cor. xv. 25-31. Death was the result of the fall, but through Jesus Christ that curse will be forever taken away. Thus the revelation that began with the fall of man, ends in showing his complete restoration. And the result of all, in which we see the full purpose of God, is that beyond the final judgment we see a new heaven and a new earth in which dwelleth righteousness, in which the tabernacle of God is with men, and where they, being made glorious and immortal, dwell with him in happiness and peace forever, and forever and ever.

I have also shown that this revelation appreciates all the wants of man and the world at large, and unfolds remedies the result of which will be the introduction of an unending period of blessedness in the earth—a period in which there will be no sin and no death, no sorrow or crying, for the former things will have passed away.

The common opinion of the origin and nature of the Bible is supported by the best of evidence. It is impossible to conceive that the revelation which it contains could have any other source than with God himself. In its fullness, in its fitness to the great end in view, and in its love to man it bears the impress of the mind of God. But like many of its writers and heroes it has shared the fate of those who witness for God in a world flooded with wickedness,—it has been misunderstood and assailed by those who have failed to see the purpose of God for our redemption revealed in its pages. Such a revelation was not given to be destroyed. He who cared for his people and protected his witnesses of old, has not been less faithful to his written word. It has stood the rough shock of many a tempest, but it still sheds its light across the troubled waters of life, a guide to them who journey Zionward, and a witness against a world, which, heedless of its warnings, goes on in the wild excitement of life, never dreaming that we are on the very threshold of Christ's coming, and the establishment of his kingdom on the earth.

In conclusion, dear reader, let me add, my earnest prayer and hope is, that both you and I may so learn and walk in the light of this word, that when Christ comes we may be found worthy of a place in his everlasting kingdom.

Brevities.

The new President of the Turkish Chamber of Deputies, Vefik Effendi, speaks and writes English and French with much facility, is an advanced mathematician, and a gentleman of culture. He has translated Moliere's plays into Turkish, and represented his country at the Congress of Orientalists held in St Petersburg.

Dr. Schliemann is the son of a clergyman of New Bucknow, Mecklenburg. At fourteen he was apprenticed to a grocer; after his term was finished he came to America, where he became a porter at $100 a year. Here he learned Italian of a clerk and taught himself Russian. In 1848 he went to Russia, where he became an importer, and amassed a fortune of a half million. Returning to this country, he went to California, where he doubled his money, and from thence set about accomplishing the dream of his later years—the resurrection of Troy. He is now 55 years old, and has the air of what he really is—a successful merchant.—New York World.

The death is announced of Sianko, the oldest male descendant of Confucius, the only hereditary noble in China. He was the lineal male heir of a descendant of Confucius who was ennobled B. C. 202; and as such Sianko enjoyed the title, the governorship of the district around the tomb of the sage, and an estate of 105,000 acres. He moreover controlled all the family, now numbering more than eleven thousand persons.

The Khedive of Egypt has signed the decree making Col. Gordon Governor General of the Soudan. The Colonel has written home to England that he is astounded at the powers placed in his hands; that it will now be his own fault if slavery does not cease, and if the vast central regions of Africa are not opened to the world. Col. Gordon is also Governor of the province of the Equator and the littoral of the Red Sea.

Six educated young ladies sailed from this country recently for Liverpool, en route to Buenos Ayres, South America, where they have been engaged to act as teachers in the State Normal School. Their term of service is five years; salary, $2,400 in gold for the term, with $600, gold, for expenses going, and $500, gold, at the end of the term, for a trip home, with six months' leave of absence.

The entire cost of moving the obelisk called Cleopatra's needle from Egypt to London, is to be borne by an eminent English surgeon, Mr. Erasmus Wilson. He has made the necessary arrangements with Mr. Dickson, the civil engineer, at an estimated cost of $50,000. The obelisk will be surrounded with water-tight and air-tight casing of boiler plates, will have a wooden keel and an iron deck, and will be towed through the Mediterranean by a powerful steamer.

Between Roversto and Trent, at the foot of a hill, an immense bronze table of the Roman epoch has been discovered. It reproduces in perfectly preserved characters the decree of Julius Cæsar, in which he granted to the people or those towns the Roman citizenship and alliance with one of the civic tribes.

Love of justice, in the generality of men, is only the fear of suffering from injustice.

The Restitution.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APR. 11, 1877.

THROUGH the kind assistance of Brother Hersh we have the pleasure of stating to our brethren that almost everything is brought up to time. We will compare books and mailing list and eliminate accidental errors as fast as possible. Thank kind friends for extra help. The paper needs continued assistance. God bless all donors.

We have a large amount of manuscripts on hand. For a portion of them we will find a place as soon as we can, and keep up something like an interesting variety for our paper. The best interests of the cause will compel us to decline the publication of a few; much to our regret as they are from friends whom we highly esteem. It is not to be expected that every article admitted will give universal satisfaction. We insert many that we by no means indorse in all particulars. Our own views of baptism and its formula, and of the Divine nature and character of the Son of God, will be given, if at all, not in contradicting statements made by others, but in communications of our own. Upon any such view, however, as Jesus Christ being merely the Son of Joseph, we should look with most perfect horror, not to say detestation.

The Apostolic Age.

Did it belong to, and was it a part of the present gospel dispensation?

Many Christian people claim we ought to, and many more claim they do possess the miraculous power of the apostolic age.

The apostolic succession is a special claim by large church organizations.

It appears to me it was an age-to-come manifestation. It evidently in many important particulars was entirely unlike the present gospel age. Jerusalem was the place of counsel from which the command went forth to the churches.

Wonderful miracles were wrought. Men were struck blind; Ananias and Sapphira were struck dead; Saul of Tarsus was converted by the personal presence of Jesus, all unlike the present. Paul in Heb., speaking of these powers then possessed, says, having tasted and experienced the powers of the world (literally the age) to come. These and many other reasons make me think that period was an age-to-come, or kingdom of heaven period in the same sense the transfiguration was the second coming of the Son of Man in power and great glory. If this is correct it might be literally true in John the Baptist's day, the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

The Claims of the Bible.

In pleading for a thorough mastery of this volume as the bounden duty of every man, without regard to his profession, it is enough to say that this Book is the basis of all history, for a whole generation of centuries giving history before other history begins—the basis of literature, science, and art. Josephus says that whereas other legislators had made religion to be a part of virtue, Moses made virtue to be a part of religion. It is idle to ignore the Book. The man who affects independence of it, can yet scarcely think or speak or act without confessing in fact his indebtedness to its wonderful oracles. Yet the ignorance remains. The lawyer must surely know that all jurisprudence among civilized nations founds itself upon the elements of law as given in this Book. And the politician may as well admit, though he may not consider or care, that the pattern and principle of all good government is found in the Bible. Dean Stanley has truly said: "Many who would be scandalized at ignorance of the battles of Salamis and Cannæ, know and care nothing for the battles of Bethhoron and Megiddo."

The costliest jewel in man's possession is his clear conscience; to keep conscience free of guilt is man's imperative duty; as long as he faithfully performs this great duty, it is well with him, even if he is dressed in rags, lives in a hut, and dines on a crumb of dry bread.

Wealth can be inherited, but honor can not; for wealth is the creature of matter, while honor is the child of spirit. And spirit being the relics of the Universal Spirit, it is cautious and bestows honor only on those who truly deserve it.

When hope has departed from man's spirit, then insanity knocks loudly at the throne of reason, and with reason dethroned man is a hopeless wreck to whom death would be a blessing. Cling to hope as you do to life itself.

Elijah's Coming yet Future.

"Behold I send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord; and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." Mal. iv. 5, 6, King James' Translation.

"Behold I send to you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and terrible day of the Lord; and he shall turn the heart of fathers to children, and the heart of children to their fathers, lest I come and strike the earth with utter destruction." Campbell's Translation.

"Behold I send you Elijah the Tishbite before the coming of the great and terrible day of the Lord." Septuagint.

This promise, or prophecy, is generally believed to have been accomplished in the person of John the Baptist. But to my mind in accepting this popular theory, we do so contrary to the facts of the case as they stand recorded in God's word. God has promised to do this and so, and that promise is absolutely unconditional how should we know if that promise has been fulfilled? Simply by turning back over the past history of the Church and see if we find anything to have taken place which agrees in every particular to those things contained in the promise.

And so with prophecy, whatever he has predicted through the mouth of his holy prophets since the world began, we must seek to find the things answerable to those predictions, and if we cannot from the records of the past, we must look for them yet to come.

Now, as we fail to see anything in the past which fully meets the case of this promise, notwithstanding these statements of our Lord in reference to John the Baptist, we must conclude the promise to be yet future. These statements of our Lord, are clothed with a certain amount of obscurity; and then, again, the testimony of Christ concerning John as being Elijah, strangely contradicted by John himself; for when a delegation of priests and Levites was sent unto him to inquire whether he was that prophet, he answered most emphatically: "I am not." Matt. vii. 10; Mark ix. 11. Jno. i. 21.

There is an apparent discrepency here, and how is this to be reconciled, and the testimony of both our Lord and John to remain unimpeachable? We answer, simply accepting as true the twofold fulfillment theory of many of the prophecies and promises. John fulfilled the promise primarily as the forerunner of Christ's first coming. Elijah will fulfill it perfectly as the forerunner of Christ's second coming. John came in the Spirit and power of Elijah. Elijah will come both in the Spirit [illegible] will be [illegible] day, as the prom[illegible] not improbable but what he may prove to be one of those witnesses spoken of in Rev. xi., as the powers those witnesses are to possess, correspond very much with those which Elijah possessed when on earth.

Again, to accept the popular idea of John being Elijah, involves many difficulties we cannot dispose of by any sound argument whatever. In the first place, we shall be driven to favor the old heathen doctrine of the transmigration of souls, and hence the natural immorality of the soul. Now, John was a child of promise, born of woman in the ordinary way; and certainly never was in heaven, and hence did not come from thence; for had he been there, he would most assuredly have made the acquaintance of our Lord, for it seems he did not know him until he was pointed out to him in the ordinance of baptism. Jno. i. 33. And then rather stood in doubt as to whether Christ was the Messiah or not, for while in prison he sent messengers to Jesus with the question: "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" Now, it does not seem likely that Elijah would have been taken up into heaven, and have remained there for some 900 years, and not have formed an acquaintance with our Lord, and have been fully able to have recognized him, as was not the case with John.

Furthermore, to fully provide for any question as to the literal and substantial fulfillment of the promise, the Septuagint version not only declares that it will be Elijah, but Elijah, the Tishbite, pointing out not only his official title, but the place of his nativity also, that there should be no room for dispute as to its being the very same prophet that figured so extensively in the days of Ahab, King of Israel, and Ben-hadad the King of Assyria.

Tishbi, in the Hebrew signifies turning, or returning back.

These circumstances are important to notice, as they identify him as the very personage who shall come again in propria personæ, and not by his Spirit in another.

Another argument that John did not fulfill the promise is the work predicated of Elijah in his coming was never accomplished by John. How many Jewish converts did John make? But a few comparatively. I would remark here that John's work was more of an individual character than a national one which is the work assigned to be done by Elijah. He is, among other things, to restore the lost faith to the house of Israel, to bring them back to the belief of Moses and the prophets—to the belief that Jesus is their true Messiah, whom their forefathers put to death in ignorance; and this will be turning the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to their fathers, which things are included in the glorious restitution, in which times Elijah is to occupy a prominent position.

I could enlarge here if space was afforded, and time permitted, and prove to an absolute demonstration that John, the Baptist, filled the proper work assigned him, but did not fulfill the promise of Elijah's coming, and show that his coming is yet future; and, furthermore, that the time is near when he will make his appearance among the nations of the earth, as the harbinger of the glorious Epiphany of our ever blessed Lord.

I would just add that the belief that Elijah was personally to appear again, was almost universal among the early fathers. It was believed by Sir E. Denny, author of the great chart of "The Stream of Time," J. Cummings, of England, Joseph Wolf, in his travels among the Jews in Persia, found it generally to be believed. The 7th article of the Jewish creed reads, "I believe in the coming of the same prophet Elijah in the very same body that he assumed when taken up in the chariot of fire." 2 Kings xi. 12; Alexander Melain says, in his "Israel Avenged": "The most learned of the Roman church, as well as almost all the fathers, look for the coming of Elijah before the second advent of the Lord." Dr. Walmesly, who wrote in the middle of the 17th century, in his work on "The History of the Church," a copy of which I have in my possession, treats largely on this subject, showing by force of argument that Elijah is to personally come, vested with great authority and power from God, and prove the most eminent agent for the restoration of the Jews to their own land, and testify powerfully against the corruptions and the wickedness of the age, both in Church and State; calling upon the nations to repent and fear God, and give glory to him, preparing the way for the royal advent of Jesus and his reign on earth.

WILLIAM SHEPHERD.

Newark, N. Y., March, 1877.

"The Danger of Falling Away."

[illegible] to my dear Brother M. for his well-meant caution in his review, in the RESTITUTION for March 21st, of my "Christian Conversion" articles.

Will he please notice that it is as dangerous to fall forward as backward. The Jews fell forward to the crown and kingdom; the Galatians fell backward to the law. The former crucified Christ; to the latter he "profited nothing;" both needed to be converted.

His seven texts do not hit the case. They would read quite as well toward the selector. Will he please excuse me if I say, if we have not a clear case against a brother, a doctrine, or a custom, we need not make any at all. Is it right for a slight difference to put brethren in all the bad company that can be found in Bible or sectarian history, and cite Paul in justification?

To my mind the review, down to "Let us consider," is medley. The charge of "upholding the modern machinery of sectarianism," and making the meetings of the Apostles, "prayer meetings of the modern sort," is without excuse. Nothing of the kind was said or intended. Peter and John did go to the temple at the hour of prayer—not to preach, certainly, while others were praying. It would be no more wrong for them to pray at the temple than for the publican who prayed there and "went down to his house justified." Luke xviii. 9-14. The 120 prayed together, Acts i. 14, 15, and the 3000 Pentecost converts joined them "in prayers," ii. 42. But my reviewing brother makes a serious charge against me because I said, "God honors the prayer meetings; prayers and preaching go hand in hand; preaching is easier and better, and the spirit comes, and sinners are converted when the church prays."

Wrong to pray! Where are we? Who says it? What paper publishes it? Lay every hair of theology straight, but dont pray! And this is advanced gospel, double-refined. Odd critics on "fanaticism."

Wrong to pray for the Spirit! "How much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy spirit to them that ask him." Luke xi. 13.

Wrong to pray for the conversion of sinners! "Father, forgive them." Luke xxiii. 34. Answered at Pentecost. Acts ii. and iii. "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." Acts vii. 60. Answered in the conversion of Saul and others.

Now for my brother's three details: In the first he puts Luke ix. 2, 6 against Luke xxiv. 49, and Acts i. 8. What is the fact? The resurrection of Jesus was to be an essential element in the preaching of the gospel under the great commission. They were not qualified for this till the Holy Spirit came. For this they must tarry in Jerusalem. They tarried, praying, and as soon as the Spirit came, they began to preach according to the commission, predicating the gospel on the death and resurrection of Christ.

Second detail. Strange they should "understand" the resurrection, and "not know it had been predicted." "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up." John ii. 19. That is the "prediction" of his resurrection, but his disciples did not understand it till "he was risen from the dead," verse 22. So "knew not," in John xx. 9, evidently has the sense of "understood not."

The third detail is answered above.

Now, my brother and I have had the "courage" to try to be faithful with each other. I believe we have both spoken in love, whether we have both spoken the truth or not. I am trying to rub out the partition lines that have grown up among those who are earnestly, lovingly and truthfully looking for the Lord; he is trying to brush me away and defend those lines. May the good Lord remove the vail and let him see that we are all one in Christ Jesus."

The gospel of the age to come, Rev. xiv. 6, is not the gospel to convert people with now. It, with its relative Scriptures, is a useful topic of study, but not a measure of righteousness for us. Ultraism in regard to it creates prejudice against it. Injudicious zeal usually defeats itself. Peter was more useful after he was "converted" and filled with a more consistent love of the gospel, than he was when he was cutting off ears. O. H. L. C.

Editor Restitution:—I have been a firm believer in the age to come and the grand restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began, for over twenty years; and have been a constant reader of your paper under its different names ever since it was printed by Elder Marsh, in Rochester, N. Y. It has brought comfort and instruction every week. I would like to do more for its support if I were able. I hope it may continue its valuable lessons of instruction until the end of this age. I have never been interested in the time movements, but have watched the movements among the nations and the great events marking the approach of the king. Regarding our Lord's return, I feel to say with John, "Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

Yours in hope,

Editor Restitution:—I undertake this evening to write you a few lines with a troubled mind. My mother who has been living with me and keeping house for me has been sick for the last thirteen months, unable to do anything. My hope, however, is that she and myself will finally enter upon that life where neither pain, sickness, nor death can ever enter. When we meet our Lord at his coming in the clouds, at the sound of the trump, when the dead shall arise, and the living be changed in a moment, then Christ will be King of Kings and Lord of Lords. O, that we may be found ready to meet him, and with him descend to the earth, and in the great city meet our brethren to part no more,—a glowing thought, brethren, to part no more. We have our brethren and sisters here from whom we can hear through the RESTITUTION. I was reading from that lonely pilgrim at Medicine Bow, who signs her name Mrs. J. B——. May the God of love abide with that dear one, and may she get into the pathway that leads to life eternal, which awaits the finally faithful in the regeneration when the saints shall possess the kingdom of God. May she discern the sacred truth as revealed in God's holy word. As she is a lonely one in that wild country, far off from any one of the brethren, may the grace of God our Father and his peace be with her, that she may become an heir to the promises. D. C. MATHIS.

Editor Restitution:—I wish to answer a question asked by a sister in a late paper as to why all the believers in the kingdom do not take the RESTITUTION. It is evident she knows nothing of homesteading in a grasshopper region. She thinks two dollars is a small sum, and so it is; but it means daily bread to a family of nine without a day's work from November to April. Twenty dollars has had to supply our table for nine and clothes for six this winter. To be sure we had 28 bushels of wheat and our meat for the winter, but we are on our last 100 cwt. of flour, and where the next is coming from is more than we can tell. But our trust is in the Lord, who has said, "I will be with you in six troubles, and in the seventh I will not forsake thee." Times are hard, but I do not believe we shall suffer, for the Giver of all is able to provide in one way or another. The Lord will provide for those who trust in him. I don't think we shall have to work for our bread much longer. I believe our Savior will soon put an end to all our wants here. May our constant prayer be "Even so, come Lord Jesus and come quickly."

O, that it might be very soon! O, brethren and sisters, pray for me, that I may be patient; for I am sick with heart, lung, and liver diseases, and I find it hard to be patient at all times. O, that some brother could give us a few sermons on the blessed hope! I do wish I could hear Brother J. T. Paine preach once more on the kingdom and soon coming of our blessed Redeemer. O, that it would soon come, is the prayer of your sister in hope of the Kingdom.

The Fearful Outlook.

In 1875, the San Francisco Chronicle said: "A careful survey of the existing European situation seems almost sufficient to justify a belief in the prediction of the enthusiasts who declare that the true interpretation of John's Apocalyptic vision shows that the battle of the great day of God Almighty at Armageddon is actually at hand. All Europe is at present like one vast camp. The nations are arming from the British channel to the Ural mountains; from the Mediterranean to the Baltic, as with a prophetic understanding that a terrible and portentous crisis is at hand. .... The nations are becoming armies; the general masses of the people are being turned into soldiers. Russia has a greedy eye on India and the Sick Man. Austria has long coveted a portion of the territory of Turkey. Rumors of schemes of conquests, of plots, conspiracies, and new alliances fill the circumambient air, as motes people a sunbeam. The arsenals are busy shaping more deadly implements of destruction than were ever known before known. The foundries are casting colossal cannon, compared with which those heretofore used in warfare are but children's toys."

Says the New York Daily Witness, January 9, 1876: "All Europe appears to be living during a period of armistice of uncertain duration. The wisest statesmen do not know how soon the thunders of cannon may call the nations to engage in a deadly struggle. In almost every country there is a financial crisis approaching, which impels its rulers to seek some way of reducing the present costly armaments. An attempt has been made to place Europe upon a peace footing by mutual agreement, and it has failed. One power hesitated to begin before another, and no beginning was made. But neither Russia nor Germany nor Austria can afford to sustain much longer the enormous drain upon industrial resources by the present huge armaments....

"One almost trembles to think what will be the effect of an outburst of war in Europe. The storm which is long in gathering is long in dispersing. Beside the ordinary causes serving to produce war, it is impossible to shut one's eyes to the fact that the strife once begun, the religious element will enter largely into it. ...'A liberal Sultan and a liberal Pope,' says a great French journalist, 'are equally impossible.'

"With this Eastern Question ready like a mine to explode at a moment's notice, all Europe one large arsenal, and Great Britain contemplating making soldiers of her entire population capable of bearing arms, many express the greatest apprehension for the peace of the continent, and the fear appears to be well grounded that the next European war will be terrible indeed.

The surest mark of true piety is to fill up the duties of our own station with the utmost fidelity. The soul devoted to God finds no oppressive burden in the opening of the present moment, which shows the order of his providence, and brings with it, to the soul resigned, both light and power either to ask or suffer.

The Russian Synod has published a Russian version of the Bible, the result of twenty years' labor. The version is sold at three roubles per copy; but copies are being distributed by the British and Foreign Bible Society gratuitously.

Some men think themselves great in their own estimation; to that estimation they hold fast; and that takes up their entire time, and the little talent they actually possess.

Eastern Items.

PARIS, April 1.—La France says the signing of the protocol virtually abrogates the treaty of Paris. We believe Russia will soon proclaim this result. Among the obstacles to the conclusion of peace with Montenegro is Italy's opposition to the cession of the port of Spizza.

The Standard's telegram from St. Petersburg says, in spite of the signing of the protocol, pessimist views again prevail there and war is considered inevitable. The Vedomosti declares that the protocol is the beginning of the denouement. Russia cannot disarm unless she is convinced that she will not have to arm again. War may not be immediate, but it is inevitable. The Golos says the signing of the protocol does not decide peace or war. However desirable peace may be, there are situations in which war would be necessary.

LONDON, April 2.—The Standard announces that after the signing of the protocol by the representatives of the six powers, at the Foreign Office in London, Count von Beust, the Austrian Ambassador, Count von Munster, the German Ambassador, Gen. Menabrea, the Italian Ambassador, and Count von Schouvaloff, the Russian Ambassador, had a conference with the Marquis d'Harcourt, the French Ambassador, at the French Embassy. The Marquis d'Harcourt subsequently left London for Paris.

LONDON, April 4.—A special from Belgrade to the Times notices the dispersal of foreign officers who were in the Servian service to Russia, Greece, Bosnia, Persia, and other countries hostile to Turkey, and says it is stated that 190 members of the Russian Red Cross Society have arrived at Jassy, and are arranging hospitals there. Indications on the political horizon suggest that while the diplomatists are quibbling over the meaning of words events are drawing a cordon around Turkey which may soon furnish a surprising spectacle to Europe.

The Vienna correspondent of the Standard reports that according to advices from St. Petersburgh, Russia has ordered her squadrons in the Mediterranean and American waters to return to the Baltic.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 4.—Military preparations continue without interruption. The negotiations with Montenegro are at a standstill.

LONDON, April 4.—The Standard's Constantinople telegram, dated Tuesday, says: "There is great uneasiness here to-day. The appearances are less pacific than those of yesterday. It is almost certain the Porte will enter a protest against the protocol as soon as it is officially communicated."

The Standard's St. Petersburgh despatch says a peaceful solution of the present difficulties is not expected, despite the protocol.

ROME, April 4.—The Pope received 1,000 pilgrims on Saturday and delivered a speech in French.

The Corriere d'Italia says in view of the agitation which the Catholics appear to desire to raise, Signor Melegari, Minister of Foreign Affairs, has authorized the Italian representatives abroad to give, if asked, the most reassuring explanations as to the Government's firm intention to respect and insure respect for the papal guarantees law.

LONDON, April 7—5 a. m.—The Perther Lloyd, a strong Turkophile journal, asserts that Gortschakoff has sent a note to the Porte demanding the acceptance of the protocol and compliance with Russia's requirements concerning disarmament, reform, etc. Gortschakoff asks for a categorical answer before the 13th instant.

LONDON, April 7—5:30 a. m.—The Times correspondent at Vienna says: "The news from Constantinople that Russia has addressed a demand to the Porte for a categorical answer in regard to the acceptance of the protocol and disarmament is startling, almost incredible, but as it comes from several sides it cannot be altogether unfounded. It probably relates to what occurred at the presentation of the protocol by the Russian Charge d'Affaires. Probably he, like the majority of his colleagues, had instructions to press the matter. This may have caused the report that he presented a sort of ultimatum."

The Times' Philippopolis correspondent writes as follows: "The dark rumors which were current this time last year are again revived. The Musselmans have recommenced threats the same as preceded the last massacre. The inhabitants of Jyvor, a village only three hours distant, have been informed that they had only a fortnight to live. Christians are greatly alarmed, and everywhere the same uneasiness is current as last year."

The Lord's Supper.

Around a table, not a tomb,
He willed our gathering-place to be,
Where, going to prepare our home,
Our Savior said, "Remember me."

We kneel around no sculptured stone,
Marking the place where Jesus lay:
Empty the tomb, the angels gone,
The stone forever rolled away.

No sculptured stones are for the dead;
Thy three dark days are o'er;
Thou art the Life, the living Head,
Our living Light for evermore.

Of no fond relics, sadly dear,
O Master, are those own possessed—
The crown of thorns, the cross, the spear,
The purple robe, the scarlet vest—

No, relics are for those who mourn
The memory of an absent friend;
Not absent thou, nor we forlorn;
Art thou not with us to the end?

Then round thy table, not thy tomb,
We keep thy sacred feast with love,
Until within the Father's home
Our endless gathering-place shall be.

Turkish Empire.

The original home of the Turk was among the Altai mountains of Central Asia. These mountains abound in iron, and the earliest accounts of the Turks represent them as employed in working the mines and manufacturing the metal, as the slaves of a kindred tribe. About 540 A. D., headed by a bold and energetic leader, named Bertezena, they made a successful stroke for freedom, overthrow the empire of their old masters, and on its ruins established one of their own. During many subsequent ages, the actual ceremony of heating a piece of iron, which was struck with a smith's hammer by the king and his nobles, recorded at once the humble origin and honorable pride of the Turk.

We content ourselves with simply mentioning the fact that the Turkish Kingdom which arose in the original seat of the race, rapidly grew, and reached such a point of power as to awaken the anxieties of the Roman Empire of the East. "And I will make of Ishmael also a great nation," was a divine promise in the fulfillment and progress of their political and territorial greatness. Genesis xvii. 20.

At the close of the eighth century, the banners of the Crescent waved victorious over the whole Roman Empire. Arabia had yielded to the prophet before his death; Syria, Persia, and Egypt were soon made the vassals of his proud successor. Within twelve years after the hegira, 36,000 cities, towns and castles were subjugated to the new conquerors, 4,000 Christian temples destroyed, and 1,100 mosques dedicated to the Man of Mecca. Africa was soon subjugated, the Moors converted to the new religion, who, in their turn, descended into Spain, and there established a magnificent kingdom. The victorious standard of the Crescent was raised on the cold mountains of Tartary, and on the burning sands of Ethiopia. The Moslem Empire extended from the Atlantic to Japan, and across the entire continent of Africa and Asia; into Spain and France, as far north as the Loire, and over the Indian Islands, embracing Sumatra, Java, Borneo, Celebes, and the Manillas. The Island of Goram, of the Spicy Islands, may be taken as the eastern boundary of Islamism. Within its borders were found the sites of the oldest and most famous cities of the world; Nineveh, Babylon, Damascus, Memphis, Thebes, Jerusalem, and the spots upon which the most memorable events in the past history of man are recorded.

In the thirteenth century, Governor Othman took advantage, when the Turks in Asia Minor were troubled by internal causes, and ravaged on the other hand by the Tartars, seized one of its provinces, and erected it into an independent principality; and with his reign commences the history of the Ottoman Empire. The province thus changed by Othman into a kingdom, was originally one of the smallest of those which had constituted the old Empire, but under his vigorous administration it became the nucleus of a mighty state.

With the valor of the soldier, Othman combined the wisdom of a statesman, and skillfully availing himself of the broils in which the Greeks were perpetually involved, he rapidly enlarged his territories. The capture of Constantinople, May 29th, 1453, was an event well fitted to make a profound impression upon Christendom, and one cannot but be amazed that the help so eagerly sought by Constantine from his brethren of a common faith, and which, if rendered in time, might have prevented the great disaster, was either denied or delayed until the fate of this noble city, the queen of the east, was fixed.

The long reign of Solimun, surnamed the magnificent, extending from 1519 to 1566, constitutes the golden age of the Ottoman Empire. Soliman was contemporary of Charles V., Francis I. and Henry., and of those still more illustrious men whom Providence raised up to dissipate the darkness which had rested upon Europe for centuries, and to inaugurate that ever-blessed Reformation, whose influences have been felt in nearly every quarter of the earth. In short, at the close of its first century, the Saracenic Empire embraced the fairest and the largest portion of the civilized world.

The Moslems appeared even under the walls of Vienna, whence they were turned back, and Europe saved from the scourge of the East by the Poles headed by the illustrious Polish hero, John Sobrieski, on whom the hopes of Austria and the eyes of Europe were centered. We must not overlook in this brief history the ever active and over-ruling Providence as unfolded here.

The Arabs, the descendants of Abraham through Ishmael, the determined foes of the Christian religion, were used as the instruments of preserving and transmitting the knowledge which finally became the regenerator of Europe. The benefits which the nations of Europe derived from the fall of Constantinople were probably greater than any that could have occurred to the cause of the religion of Christ, if the city had remained in the possession of the old masters.

We may take, as a specimen of the magnificence of this Empire, the single city of Cordova, which, in point of wealth and grandeur, was scarcely inferior to its proud rival on the banks of the Tigris. A space of twenty-four miles in length and six miles in breadth, along the margin of the Guadalquiver, was occupied with streets, gardens, palaces and public edifices. For ten miles the citizens might travel by the light of lamps along an uninterrupted extent of buildings. In the reign of Almazar, Cordova could boast of 270,000 houses, 80,000 shops, 80 public schools, 50 hospitals, 900 baths, 3,877 mosques, from the minarets of which 800,000 persons were daily summoned to prayer. The Caliph was attended to the field by a guard of 12,000 horsemen, whose bells and scimitars were studded with gold. Such was the city of Cordova, and the city of Granada was, perhaps, equally celebrated for its wealth, luxury and learning. God placed the race for eight centuries in Spain, just in the position in which they might not more effectually as the handmaid of Europe, in the restoration of learning and general advancement. The Court of the Caliph became the resort of poets, philosophers, and mathematicians, from every country and from every creed.

In 732, A. D., it seemed that all Europe had to yield to the descendants of Ishmael, the son of Abraham. From Gibraltar to the Loire nothing impeded their progress. Another such distance would have made England a province of the grand Caliph. Such, then, was their conquest from the Baltic to the Cyclades, when the Standard of Islam floated over the walls of Tours.

Literary relics of the conquered countries were brought to the foot of the throne—hundreds of camels with volumes of Greek, Hebrew and Persian literature, translated by the most skillful interpreters into the Arabic language. Masters, instructors, translators, commentators, formed the Court of Bagdad. Schools, academies and libraries were established in every considerable town, and colleges were magnificently endowed. It was the glory of every city to collect treasures of literature and science throughout the Moslem dominions, whether in Asia, Africa or Europe. Grammar, eloquence and poetry were cultivated with great care; so were metaphysics, philosophy, political economy, geography, astronomy, and the natural sciences; botany, and chemistry, were cultivated with ardor and success; the Arabs particularly excelled in architecture. The revenue of the kingdom was expended in public buildings, fine arts, paintings and sculpture; and music shared largely in their regard. And in nothing did they more excel than in agriculture and metallurgy; they were the depositaries of science in the dark ages, and the restorers of letters to Europe; they were of Arabian origin, an enterprising, warlike and intelligent people; they formed the channel through which the knowledge of the arts and sciences, and an acquaintance with civilization, traveled through Europe.

By their possession of a large portion of Spain, which they held from 713 to 1492, they not only established a magnificent kingdom, cultivating learning, while all the rest of Europe was sunk into barbarism, but they left behind them monuments of their industry and skill in arts. Thus, Providence has made the blessings good to that race, as they subserved the purposes of truth up to a certain point, when the privileges were transferred to worthier hands; for as they were the instruments of preserving and transmitting knowledge, so it became finally the regenerator of Europe; for it was through them that learning revived, and the inventions and discoveries, which so effectually world the destinies of the world, were divulged.

The descendants of Ishmael were the most powerful and absolute sovereigns on the earth; their Caliphs exercised a most unlimited and undefined prerogative, reigned over numerous nations, from Gibraltar to the Chinese sea, two hundred days journey from east to west. Spiritual blessings are unnoticed by the world, but these are visible and undeniable, the realization of God's faithful promises.

If such has been the grandeur, both of expression and fulfillment, where only the outcast seed of Abraham was concerned, the son of Hagar, what may we expect when we turn now to the heirs and possessors of the promises? We expect more loftiness of expression, and more grandeur of fulfillment. —The Prophetic Times.

Autumn in Parry.

"And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John v. 11, 12.

This life, which is peculiar to the believer, is in the Son. The witness, or testimony, is in us, and we have this life just as we have the Son, its author.

How is that? Let Paul tell: "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." Eph. iii. 17. He is not there really or personally, neither is this eternal life; else the believer would not die—could not. There is at least two ways of having—one in actual possession, and the other in prospect or by faith in the promise. This last way is the way we have this eternal life. So say God's old-fashioned inspired preachers! Will you listen to them?

"In hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lie promised before the world began." Titus i. 2; ii. 7. This the God of truth promised his Son in the ages past, using the same emphatic present tense, at least seven hundred years before he was born. Isa. ix. 6.

Also, we are said to be saved in the past and present tense. See Eph. ii. 5 8; Titus iii. 5. Yet who but an antinomian would dare hang on the tense here? Now, if we will only let Paul explain this he will also give us some light on the life question. Hear him: "For we are saved by hope; but hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." Rom. viii. 24, 25.

Now, as we believe Paul to be a great expositor, we cannot believe that we see or have eternal life de facto. This good, old-fashioned preacher tells me that God will give this eternal life to those who seek for glory, honor, and immortality. Rom. ii. 7, which includes all believers who walk by faith. He also tells me that this eternal life is hid (not in our hearts) with Christ in God, and when he appears we shall appear with him in glory, at the resurrection of the last day. This is what Jesus taught, and what Martha believed, but how would this be if man never dies? See Mark x. 30; Jno. xi. 24; Matt. xxv. 46. Natural observation demonstrates our position.

T. E. Adams.

Be Kind.

We are admonished by Paul to be kind to one another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God, for Christ's sake, hath forgiven us. We all need more of this loving, forgiving spirit. There was a depth of tenderness in the heart of Jesus that we must reach. We must walk in love if we would be followers of God. It is in putting away anger and wrath and malice and evil-speaking, that our characters are in a great measure shaped for eternity. The roots of bitterness must not be left to grow, if we would have the temper and disposition that was in Christ, if we would be assimilated to him, and fitted for an inheritance with the saints in light.

It is very easy to forgive, if our hearts are right towards God; if we are rooted and grounded in love, and filled with all the fullness of God. Indeed, it is seldom, if at all, that offence is taken, when the heart is in such a state. Why, if a brother or sister offend, or do us wrong, we fly at once to Christ, and our hearts are melted into such tenderness, that we could take the offending one by the hand and with streaming eyes assure him or her of our unchanging love. The altar of prayer is the best peace-maker that I know. Jesus always settles quarrels best. And we must walk in love if we would be followers of God, if we would walk worthy of the vocation, wherewith we are called. We cannot keep all the commandments of the Lord blamelessly, unless with all lowliness and meekness and long suffering, we forbear one another in love.

It were better that a millstone were hanged about our necks, and we cast into the midst of the sea, than that we should offend one of the little ones for whom Christ died.

If we would serve others, we must be at peace among ourselves. It will not do to give the cold shoulder to the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty, nor to render evil for evil unto any man.

Correspondence.

Editor Institution: I have noted with care and interest, the management, on your part, of the grave duties and responsibilities which are devolving upon you.

It would seem that your hand, head, and heart work are quite enough for one, without having to carry a financial burden during times like these.

God help you, my brother, and our brethren, to highly appreciate and duly heed the admonition of our Lord, "Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven"; and also as regards the investment of our "treasures," whereby we may judge and know the relation of our hearts to the coming kingdom, inasmuch as the Lord hath spoken: "for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

Have we treasures in stocks and government bonds, while the cause of Christ and God, as regards human instrumentalities, is, in common parlance, on the verge of bankruptcy? If so, God pity and help us to get our hearts in the right place; then will his cause have ample support. Let us bear in mind the fact that "God's ways are equal," as are also his requirements on the part of his stewards. Therefore, though we may not be possessed of lands or stocks, certain duties are as incumbent upon us as upon those who may possess them.

It is true, that many may not be able to remit the entire amount of their annual subscription at once, yet that is no reason why a dollar, or even a half dollar, should not be forwarded promptly whenever it shall fall within the range of our ability. We may be sure the interest that lies nearest our heart will be first served, a careful and prayerful noting of which will give us to understand our personal and true relation to the "Hope of Israel."

God help us all to know, and give us grace to do our duties, individually, and respectively, in the light of their relation to the present and a rapidly approaching future.

Remarks Respecting the Jewish Nation of Antiquity.

If the ignorant masses had to frame government and make laws, there would be much anarchy in the administration of affairs whether executive, legislative or judicial in their nature. There would be—if these alone had the framing of governments and laws—no such harmony as now prevails among civilized nations, civilization would not disclose that enlightenment now existing. How far from the present condition of the mind the human family would be, under such circumstances, it is not necessary to show, but we have every reason to suppose that under such environment no profound treatises on political economy, jurisprudence, history, the sciences, &c., would be extant; intolerance, tyranny would rule. The learned, the intelligent, are the vital element, conspiring to enlightenment in all the departments of sociology, hence in governments and laws.

If we remember that governments imply a sovereignty,—a sovereign governing body as distinguished from the body governed and other sovereignties—and that sovereignty is implied in all laws, as also a body or community governed, we will at once understand that the same element which conduces to good governments and laws conduces likewise to liberal and enlightened sovereignty.

"Nation" presupposes more than the tribal condition connotes or denotes. It implies definite territorial limits, a sovereignty, or, rather, a government and laws. Hence, it implies more than that manifested in the condition or capabilities of the masses now-a-days, and a fortiori more than that manifested by the tribal communities of this or past ages.

As indicated, nation implies the existence of laws. This is corroborated by Austin, Amos, Bentham, Savigny, Thibaut, Montesquieu, Fichte, &c. Mr Amos (Science of Law, chap. IV.) defines law: "A law, in the strictly political sense of the term" "is a command proceeding from the supreme political authority of a state, and addressed to the persons who are the subjects of that authority." And a state he defines: "An organized portion of the human family looked upon as a subject matter of government." Therefore law, when existing, implies as co-existing, an organized portion of the human family, who are governed by certain governors; the latter are called the supreme political authority, the former the subjects of that authority, and it further implies, as Mr. Austin has shown, (Province of Jurisprudence determined: a command,—i. e. an order, a duty and a sanction, as also the power to enforce the sanction within certain limits of territory through the recognition of a given community.

Now, when the people around it showed no laws, forms of government, or national existence as such, but lived in tribes; and Persia, Egypt, Greece, India, China, even Rome, were in a condition of intelligence peculiar to tribal communities, having, as yet, no national existence, or, what the same implies politically, government and laws, Judea had a national existence, and a government and had laws. And it had more, the intellectual force that displayed itself in thus early establishing a national existence, manifested itself in higher aspects, in a decalogue. A decalogue which in marvelously terse phraseology contains the essential principles of human conduct, the sum and substance of a Code of Ethics; and which, for the first time, originally, expounded, proclaimed, the notion of the Omnipotent Intelligence, of God.

These are reflections resulting from a study of comparative history and jurisprudence, and are to be accepted for what they are worth after a careful comparison of the history of the nations of antiquity. If they are substantially a correct exposition of the reality, they indicate that the Jewish nation of antiquity is the prime factor of civilization and enlightment; that the same serving as an architype revealed the conditions essential to the birth of thought and research and the attendant human activity.

Such a people reveal a genius; genius being a favor of the Omnipotent, such a people, in so far as they have genius or are favored by God, and, if no other people reveal the same genius, are the favored people of God. That which I favor, I indicate to be the object of my choice. It is my choice insofar as it has my favor and if no other person or thing has been similarly favored it is in this my only choice. Thus we understand how the Jewish nation of antiquity were the favored or chosen nation or people of God.—Jewish Chronicle.

By taking an active part in the wel[illegible] enlarges thereby becomes more of a man, who gradually requires a larger latitude for his sphere of action.

One of the most fatal temptations to the weak is a slight deviation from the truth, for the sake of apparent good.

DIED.

ADAMS—[illegible]ed—at 25, Erie, at Ventnor, Ontario, Canada, Lyell Adams, Esq., aged thirty-six years, two months and eleven days.

Brother Adams was a descendant of the old Adams family of Massachusetts, and among the first fruits of my labors in Canada, twenty-four years ago last August. Being in possession of good preaching talents, large benevolence, he was ever ready to extend a liberal hand to those who stood in need. He was a man of sound judgment, honest in character—a proper measure of gentility—a lover of everything that was godly, and a hater of everything that was debasing, low and base. He, with the glorious future was contemplated the family of God taken out of the whole world, and the setting up of the kingdom of the saints on the grand theatre of the old earth purified with a fiery ordeal, under the reign of Jesus, the Regulator of God, and his associated rulers. He fell in love with these glorious truths, taking Jesus for his pattern. His talents brought him often before public congregations, where he would be called upon to address them, which he was qualified to do.

For some twenty years he was a member of the town council, and more than twelve receiver of the township. But, like Daniel of old, he always maintained his integrity, and was never known to hold in his fist, for—as it was written the coming of Jesus as the restorer of all things predicted by the prophets of Israel. But, he sleeps in the glad of human redemption! A sleep from which none will ever awake to weep.

In his death Sister Adams and their children have met with a loss that never can be made up to them in this age. For he was a loving husband and father, a true friend to the writer, the Church of God, and the world. Truly did one remark that it would be a long time before there would be another Lord Adams!

His funeral sermon was preached by the writer, to a very large congregation, from Heb. xi. 17-22, in which was presented the believer's only hope of a future state, of life in the future, an incredible hope which leaves all in the oracle of death who are not embraced in it or the promise, "In thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed"—saved.

Price $1. Extra bound, $2.

Hasty Words.

Full oft a word that lightly leaves the tongue,
Another's breast unconsciously has wrung;
And were the wound but present to the eye,
We'd mourn the pain that solace might defy.

Was it a taunt—perhaps a thoughtless jest?
An idle ripple of the vacant breast?
But tiny shafts may yield a venomed death,
What need, to speed them, but a little breath.

We toy with hearts, as if the thousand chords
That vibrate to the touch of hasty words,
Could jar out discords all the live-long day,
Nor any tension cause them to give way.

Oh, strike them gently! every human heart
Is by a secret load of grief oppress'd;
Forbear to add a note of direful woe,
Where discords ever are so prone to flow.

Correspondence.

Editor Restitution:—After a sojourn here of about one month, I thought of asking you to communicate with loved ones, who might thus desire to hear a few things in regard to the "Summer Land."

This place is situated north from New Orleans about one hundred miles, on a direct line of railroad from thence via Cairo to Chicago, a distance of about eight hundred miles. In a belt of country, very rolling, covering an area of sixty or seventy miles either way, covered mostly with pine forests, intersected with beautiful streams, formed and fed by numerous springs, breaking forth everywhere from the hill sides, along these streams. On either side, usually narrow, are bottom lands, richer than the uplands covered with timber of a great variety of species. Among which may be noted the magnolia ar. evergreen, often two feet through, not surpassed in beauty, when covered with its fragrant large and most beautiful white flowers.

We came to this particular place more especially on account of its health giving promise. Being at an altitude of from four to five hundred feet above the gulf, thoroughly drained, with an abundance of the purest water. Unlike the land for which we hope, we have not "on either side the river of the tree of life." But on either side we have the tall, majestic pines, continually impregnating the air with their balmy and health giving fragrance. The little valleys and hill tops everywhere vocal with the melodious notes of the mocking bird. Not all the trees that are "beautiful to the sight are good for food," but many that are sublimely beautiful with apple, peach, pear, plum, fig, and many others, giving to man not spontaneously, but with very little labor, an abundance of delicious fruit. Neither can it be said of every man, under his own vine and fig tree with none to molest or make him afraid. But perhaps few places on the continent where the vine and fig do better. A land where the decree, "In the sweat of thy face" has by some, to their sorrow, and now full repentance been vainly resisted. Had their fathers a half century ago but realized this, educating their sons and daughters in useful arts of industry, to be self-relying and self-sustaining. Had the millions wasted in a devastating and relentless strife of brother with brother, been by a nation's common interest and common consent, peacefully employed, in developing the country, improving and beautifying the homes of a people, naturally the most hospitable, generous and noble. This would now be the happy home of a happy people, as it no doubt will be in less than a quarter of century hence. Owners of millions of acres now uncultivated all over this sunny land, are but anxiously waiting to greet with unfeigned welcome, whoever with honest purpose may come to develop the country and till the soil.

To those enjoying health and plenty where they are, we think there is no better motto than, "Let well enough alone;" but to those otherwise, who are determined to go to some place to better their condition, we would say before you start for the land of grasshoppers, pause and consider the claims of the South. If you are in search of health, I would most unhesitatingly recommend to you these pine woods. The land naturally most of it rather thin, though susceptible of a high state of cultivation. If you wish cheap and rich lands in a less healthy region, you may find them here in abundance in the more level bottom lands. Where once the land produced to the planter abundance of wealth, with a cultivation almost a century behind the times, compared with many other places. As to the people, so far as I have seen, it is due to them to say, they are truly hospitable, generous and kind, with as much intelligence and morality generally among the whites as in country places and small towns in other localities where I have been acquainted. Though but a stranger in their midst I am kindly invited to preach in their churches. A better day is dawning on this once beautiful, but now blighted land. With the genial climate, pure water, elevated surface, picturesque scenery and balmy atmosphere, you would at once be constrained to give credence to the unanimous testimony of its citizens as to the healthfulness of this locality.

Wife seems to be doing well, although by over exercising, she had a backset of about a week, which she has more than regained. Is now stronger than at any time since Christmas. It is hot now about like the latter part of May or first of June there. Plowing corn, sticking peas, cabbage and tomato plants out is now in order. Wife thinks she can never consent to return from this land of sunshine and flowers to the cold regions of the north. We are full of hope of a restoration of her health, or at least partially so in this present world with its curse, and look forward with glad anxiety to the time when there shall be no more curse, neither sorrow nor crying. May we meet you all there. D. T. HALSTEAD.

Editor Restitution:—I think it better to say something, even in an imperfect manner (my health being poor), than to be silent on a subject of great importance, and at the same time draw the attention of those who have the health and ability to write, along with the possession and love of the truth, and the interests of the scattered flock at heart. Heresies soon began after Jesus left the world, and heretics now and old continue to be propagated.

Years ago something appeared in the Gospel Banner, from a correspondent, concerning the paternity of our Lord,—setting forth that he was begotten by Joseph,—which was promptly answered and condemned. This deadly heresy appears again, and has its persistent adherents and promulgators among us. For a length of time I have known that a paper in Boston—Herald of the Age to Come—was published. I have now and then seen a copy; but the first one came to my address recently, having sent for it. In this Herald I see much to commend, and, alas! much to deplore. Matthew first and second chapters, are declared to be interpolated. Portions of other books, and some whole books, are called forgeries or doubtful. An authority is cited of whom scarcely any of us has heard before. Weight is attached to this man's (Reiser) writings. He says that the Apostle John could not have written the gospel by his name, because he was an unlettered man! I will not be lengthy in my observations [illegible] pertaining thereto. It seems late in the day to try to prove that our Lord was only the Son of Joseph. But the open setting forth of this cankerous error is likely to unsettle the minds of some weak ones.

A correspondent (Vinton) says it is proved by Luke i. that Mary was of the tribe of Levi, because she was Elizabeth's cousin. But observe, the very connection states the miraculous conception. If "Vinton" admits Luke's authority in his (V's) inference, he, to be consistent, must admit the same in the statement of the miraculous conception. It is only inferentially that "Vinton" can say that Mary was of the same tribe as Elizabeth; whereas Luke positively declares that Mary, a virgin, conceived. Deny Luke here, "Vinton," and your inference is groundless indeed? Mary's lineage to David, and to Judah, of course, is given by Luke, and she having a cousin of the tribe of Levi, does not overthrow the fact. Elizabeth and Mary could be cousins, and yet be of different tribes.

It is declared that Jesus must be of direct male parentage, and the writers in the Herald lay more stress on the Old than on the New Testament. But hear the word by Isaiah vii. 14: "Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a Son," etc. Here is miracle. Will ye, "Vinton" and others, say this is an interpolation? Pause, ye deceivers!

Should we, brethren and sisters, suffer certain fundamental truths contained in Hebrews, Revelation, and other writings of John (portions of the New Testament doubted by some) to slip, shipwreck is sure. Steadfast in the faith, let us stand, resisting Satanic error everywhere. I submit to those brethren of the RESTITUTION, who are jealous for the truth, and who realize their responsibility as those who must give account, the importance of keeping before the tried and scattered flock the fundamental doctrines of the gospel.

A writer in the Herald says, "this interpolation heresy" (the miraculous conception) "is the main pillar of antichrist's system!" A dogma of the "mother of harlots!" etc.

I will observe that antichrist is more served to his liking by denying the Divine sonship of our Lord, than by any popish error concerning his nature. We shall beware of those who are denying the Son. 1 John ii. 22.

The Coming.

The Greek word, translated brightness, is επιφανεια, epiphaneia, and occurs six times in the New Testament. It is derived from the verb επιφαινω, epiphaino, which signifies to appear; but, according to Schleusner, is properly applicable to brilliant celestial bodies when they shine out in splendor. In defining the noun epiphaneia, as employed classically, he says that its legitimate reference is to the appearance of such luminous and resplendent objects as the sun, moon, and stars. Hence it was used among the ancients, when speaking of any supernatural manifestations of their divinities, who were supposed always to be enveloped with dazzling glories.

The Greek word translated coming is παρουσια, parousia and occurs twenty-four times. It is derived from the verb παρειμι, pareimi, which strictly means to be present, and when connected with the idea of coming, it is generally an accomplished coming, the coming one has arrived so as to be present. We shall best apprehend the exact force of the noun by noticing the usage of the verb pareimi in a few places. In Matt. xxvi. 48, 50, we read concerning Judas: "Now he that betrayed him gave them a sign, saying, whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he; hold him fast. And forthwith he came to Jesus, and said, Hail, Master; and kissed him. And Jesus said unto him, Friend, wherefore art thou come?" The word "came" in verse 48, literally translated, would give one idea, while the word "come" in verse 50, would impress on our minds another shade of meaning, if literally rendered. While at a distance, and before approaching near to the object of his betrayal, the traitor gave a preconcerted sign; the movement toward Jesus and his disciples is there expressed thus, "And directly coming to Jesus" while coming is from another verb that signifies the act of approaching, or the movement in transitu. After the arrival, at the completion of the active coming, Jesus says to Judas, after he had kissed him, "Friend, wherefore art thou come?" The question used in common parlance among the common people would give almost the exact sense of our Savior's startling query: "Friend, what are you here coming for?" "What brings you here now?" "What are you come?"

We will give another illustration of our own. Some person promises to visit me on some certain day. I speak of this to an acquaintance, and say: "My friend A. B. is coming day after to-morrow." This would express the act of coming. After that person had arrived, I say, greeting that friend: "O, I am so glad that you are come;" which would express the idea of pareimi—being come, or present.

In this way the verb pareimi is used John xi. 28, where Martha, speaking to Mary, says, "The Master is come, and calleth for thee." In Acts xvii. 6, it was said of Paul and Silas, "These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also."

Now, the noun parousia derives its distinctive meaning from the verb, "I am glad of the coming of Stephanas and Fortunatus and Achaicus; for that which was lacking on your part they have supplied," says Paul, when writing to the Corinthian church. 1 Cor xvi. 17. In 2 Cor. vii. 6, 7, he writes of being comforted by the coming of Titus where nothing less than personal presence can be understood.

When the act of coming is expressed by parousia it always involves the idea of personal presence. When Paul anticipates visiting the Philippians, and speaks of coming to see them, they could have understood nothing less. The word is translated presence in ch. ii. 12. So the coming of the Son of Man will of necessity embrace the verifiable personality of Jesus Christ. It can by no possibility mean an effusion of the Holy Spirit, much less the coming of the Roman Army at the destruction of Jerusalem. This parousia, of the Son of Man is elsewhere spoken of as the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ when the saints will meet in his presence. 1 Thess. ii. 19; iii. 13.

By a careful consideration of Peter's account of the transfiguration scene we shall obtain a very clear and distinct impression of both the epiphaneia and the parousia: He says, "We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." 2 Pet. i. 16, 17.

At the transfiguration of Christ, when his face shone as the sun, and his raiment dazzled as the light, were blended both the epiphaneia and the parousia. It was the bright appearing of the Lord in his glorified personal presence. What the apostles saw on the holy mount of vision, will be displayed in surpassing grandeur in the higher azure above.

The day of wrath, which "no cry shall" cover the face of, before which the moon shall darken, the stars withdraw their shining, and the solar brightness as pale in a strange eclipse, as the vocal splendors from the heaven of heavens shall flood the empyrean vault with a deluge of brilliancy. A day deep in a magnificency of horror, more blinding than the lightning's vividest blaze, is the pavement of Earth's coming king, whom myriads on myriads of angels attend as his dazzling retinue into these beaming glories the saints, redeemed by the blood of this glorious One, are gathered by those celestial attendants. The Lord is coming but not yet come to earth. Were we to speak of the one or two things which are, from their very nature, inseparably connected in order to illustrate the one, we should say, that in this stage, the appearing is more manifest. It is the epiphaneia.

But he that comes for his saints will also come with them. The Lord affirmed by his own living being that this earth shall be filled with his glory, and here is the chosen instrumentality for the accomplishment of Jehovah's ultimate purpose. In due time the Lord descends with his princely cabinet of Kings and priests to ascend the throne of universal and eternal empire hereon the very earth where he was rejected and crucified, and where those saints drank the bitter cup of sufferings. He, with his glorified ones, descends to Olivet and takes his triumphal march to Jerusalem. He does not stop in Gethsemane to agonize and meet a traitor in the lead of murderers, nor does he enter the city to be maltreated and bear a cross to the place of execution on Calvary. He has come to take the sceptre of Earth's empire; he has come to take the crown of Israel; he has come to ascend David's throne to reign forever. Although the glory of the epiphaneia — of the appearing—attends the divine personality, yet the Lord himself is what the saints of all ages have looked for; it is for this that the church has wept, and creation groaned. It is the PAROUSIA. HE HAS COME.—ED.

Report of Quarterly Assembly.

The quarterly assembly of the church of God met according to announcement, at Middle Point school house, near Wolfville, Md., on the third first day in February. The meeting commenced on Friday night preceding, at Brother Harms, who, like Cornelius of old, had sent out and called together his kinsmen and near friends, to hear the Word.

After some introductory remarks by the writer, setting forth the object of the meeting, which was to distinguish ourselves as a peculiar people, called out by the gospel from among the Gentiles, for that only name given whereby we must be saved, Brother B. F. Boyer, by a right division of the word, showed what that gospel was; that it consisted in the promises made to the fathers, or the things concerning the kingdom of God, and name of Jesus Christ. He also showed that the whole human family was as so many criminals, under the sentence of death by that great Judge of all the earth, and unless reprieved by getting out of the first Adam into the second, according to the order of the Most High God, that the sentence would be executed, which will be everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power; but all whose names are found written in the lamb's book of life, having a part in the first resurrection, on such the second death will have no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. (Brother Boyer is one of the eight sons of old Brother William Boyer, who has been a faithful soldier of the cross for many years. He has lived to see them all,—the mother, and three daughters, a family of thirteen,—we trust, become heirs to the eternal inheritance; and one of whom bids fair to make an able, faithful and true witness in the cause of our blessed Master.) After following with some concluding remarks, I invited some consultation with regard to the further proceedings of the meeting. Led by the sweet and melodious voice of Brother Jas. Brown, the brethren then joined in celebrating the praise of our king, for the hope set before us of meeting in the glorious future with that great and general assembly, and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven, and in praise to God, the Judge of all.

On Saturday night, we assembled at Middle Point. The service was about the same as on Friday night, in the presence of a well filled house, who seemed to be interested in what was going on in the revival. On Sunday, we met three times. Brother Boyer and I alternately opened, and alleged out of the scriptures to an increasing congregation, in order to prove that they, being Gentiles, could become fellow heirs and of the same body, our Church of God, which we profess to be, and partakers of the promises in Christ by the gospel; that the gospel is the power of God, unto salvation to every one that believeth, that being baptized into Christ, we put on Christ, that there is neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free, neither male nor female; for we are all one in Christ Jesus; and if Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.

As some of the brethren had to leave for their homes on Monday morning, at the close of the meeting on Sunday night, while singing one of the sweet songs of Zion, as our usual farewell greeting, the brethren and sisters,—some of them for the first time,—with loving hearts gave each other the right hand of fellowship with encouraging words, to hold out faithful to the end, so if they should never meet again in this life, that they might meet in the resurrection morn to part no more; and that our meeting had just given us a foretaste of that great meeting of the saints of all ages,

"Who will in harmony meet,
Their Savior and brethren transported to greet;
While anthems of rapture unceasingly roll,
And the smile of the Lord be the feast of the soul."

By the request of the people, and consent of the brethren and friends, we moved the meeting to Highland, a more spacious building, three miles from Middle Point, to continue until over the fourth Sunday. When we arrived there on Monday evening, before it was quite night, the house was crowded. Here were many aged and middle-aged fathers and mothers, who warmly said they had heard me preach often and that they wanted to hear me again. But some were trine immersionists, who believe in three dips, and some trinne, who believe in three in one, and some none at all: and all believing that they had immortal souls to go to heaven or hell at death. Now here was a most excellent opportunity for a soldier of Jesus to show himself a workman, approved unto God, so I went to work. But first, in order to give no offense to any one, I delivered an introductory discourse, in which I stated that there was but one common school of Christ in the world, and if they had but one truth, they were that far advanced in the school; and admitting that some of them had advanced as far as the eloquent Apollos of old, who was mighty in the Scriptures, and fervent in the spirit, and taught diligently the things of the Lord, yet an humble Aquila and Priscilla, could take him and expound unto him the way of God more perfectly; and although they might compare with Cornelius, the centurion, a devout man, and one that feard God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always, yet he had something to do to be saved, according to the order of God, which was, "to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ," for the remission of sins, which I went on, by a right division of the word, to prove. Seeing some uneasiness, I stopped and said to the congregation that I would make a suggestion, which I hoped would enable us all to see the responsibility we were under on the occasion, which was that I should address them as so many sworn jurors; that I saw a goodly number present who doubtless had taken the oath required of one acting in that capacity,—to give a verdict according to the testimony,—and I a sworn witness by that court from which there can be no appeal to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing else but the truth. After this, better attention I never saw, until the meeting closed.

To prove that man in the present state does not possess an immortal soul, I answered by reasoning out of the Scriptures the question, "What is man?" plainly showing that he is a living soul, composed of bones and sinews, and flesh and blood; and that he could have had eternal life in that state, if the decree had not gone forth. That the soul that sineth shall die; but all men having sinned in the first Adam, death, or mortality, passed upon all, so all are mortally wounded, and therefore, all, under the present constitution of things, are mortal. And although it is written, that flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God, yet it is nowhere said that flesh and blood shall not enter the kingdom. So I showed by the true sayings of God, that for the race to live under the decree of the Most High to die is mortality, and to live again under his eternal decree to never die, will be immortality. I clear called on Job for proof, who said, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." Then Ezekiel, who saw the whole house of Israel in the resurrection, says bones came together, bone to his bone, and lo! the sinews and the flesh came upon them, and the skin covered them above; and then, at the word of the Lord God to the four winds (not immortal souls above the skies) breath came into them, and says the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth, they lived and reigned with him upon the earth. Now, in order that we be thus blessed, I showed that we must believe the things concerning the kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ, which had been fully set forth during the meeting, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins.

I plainly showed that all names had a significance, as Adam, meaning red earth; and he called his wife name Eve, because she was the mother of all living. So the angel said to Mary, Thou shalt bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for, or because, he shall save his people from their sins,—Jesus meaning; savior, and Christ, anointed king; so for condemned criminals, or sinners of the first Adam's race, to have their sins remitted, or be saved from their sins, they must have the saving name "Jesus," named upon them in baptism as their Savior, and Christ, as their king, under whose banner we enlist to go out and fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life. I showed conclusively that the saving name Jesus Christ is not in the trine or trinne formula of the Father and of the Son of the Holy Ghost. Several of the trine, as well as the trinne friends, and some who have never observed the right in any way, some out plainly on the Lord's side and said they were convinced that I had preached the truth, and three of whom were baptized in the saving name, Jesus Christ, for the remission of their sins, one from each element for a start.

After the meeting at Highland, like a Lydia of old, the Lord opened the heart of Sister Wolf, at Wolfville, and she, with her much esteemed husband, not only permitted me to abide in their house, and partake of the comforts of life, and enjoy their society and the society of their interesting sons, but on Monday night, had a respectable congregation in their house, to whom I preached the Word. I read the 37th Psalm with its connection, to show that the earth will be the final abode of the righteous; but the wicked shall perish, and the time will come when his place shall be diligently considered and it shall not be. Then, by invitation from the brethren, in imitation of the primitive worthies, I went from house to house and preached the Word to attentive congregations. Brother Harm, one of the new converts who bids fair to be a bright ornament in the church, ever ready at the close of the services to strike up and sing, assisted by Brother R. Stottlemyer, who understands the rudiments of music, and sang as if with the spirit, and with the understanding also.

"Beautiful Zion, dear to me, Beautiful everything I see,"

and a few other good pieces, such as "We are traveling home to God in the way the fathers trod," etc. After which some time was generally spent in reasoning together on some portion of the word of God, which was to me joy inexpressible to see such fruit of the toil, labor and persecution for years, of one who is seeking, not his own, but others' wealth, wages to life everlasting or a bride for his Master—the Lord of life and glory.

On the first, First day (2 March, I preached my farewell discourse at Brother R. Stottlemyer's, to quite a congregation, from the 21st chapter of the Apocalypse, in which I showed that there are three grand stages of earth's history to be developed; and we were standing on the close of the first, and only one, to be ruled by mortal man. That the second would come under the jurisdiction of Christ and his saints. The third, the new heaven and new earth state, (as set forth in the chapter before us, and the following and last chapter) that the glorious restitution, so long hoped for by the good, would then obtain. That all the works of God so long under the burden of sin and death, would be delivered from every curse, and be restored back to that, not only good, but very good state, in which they first came from the plastic hand of Jehovah. And thus, the covenant made with Abraham, will be fully carried out, that, in him and his seed, all nations shall be blessed; and that this was the good tidings which the angel announced to the shepherds as they watched their flock by night, significant of the true shepherds, or elders of the flock of Christ, whose duty it is to watch over them in this dark night of sin and death, until the great and mighty angel comes with the glad news, "well done thou good and faithful servant, as thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler of many."

I left the little body in good working order, (Brother James Brown being their elder, will serve them faithfully) with the understanding, that I will, if the Lord will, visit them again the first of June, when I expect another good harvest in the name of the Lord.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates what is found in the writings of all Nigers who have "spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates such means as, to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God in the earth, with Jesus Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal exaltation to which His holy followers, at the resurrection of the dead—the Restitution of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also presents a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for that salvation.

The Gospel of The Kingdom—No. 2.

BY T. DIXS.

We have succeeded in finding the establishment of the kingdom, and also where it was rent in two, and continued for a long time in its divided state, and then both divisions of it were overthrown by the same power that organized it, or by his decree. The same God that says I will overturn it, says it shall be no more until he comes whose right it is, and I will give it him. Let us now find whose right it is to reign on David's throne, or the kingdom of God.

In 1 Chron. xvii. 11-14, God says to David, by the mouth of Nathan: "And it shall come to pass, when thy days be expired that thou must go to be with thy fathers, that I will raise up thy seed after thee, which shall be of thy sons; and I will establish his kingdom. He shall build me a house, and I will establish his throne for ever. I will be his father, and he shall be my son: and I will not take my mercy away from him, as I took it from him that was before thee. But I will settle him in mine house and in my kingdom for ever: and his throne shall be established for evermore." Now here is a promise to David that God would raise up his seed after David should sleep with his father, and would establish his throne and kingdom for evermore. All will admit that that seed is Christ; and God will fulfill that promise, and establish the throne and kingdom of David, with Christ as king over the house of Jacob, or Israel. It is no conditional prophecy, but it is confirmed by the oath of God. See Psalm lxxxii. 11, and onward. Holy men of old, moved by the Holy Spirit, recorded their testimony to the same fact. Hear the prophet Isaiah ix. 6, 7: "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, (or Father of the everlasting age), the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgement and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." The Lord has a zeal to perform his word, and not one jot or tittle of it will ever fail. This same thing was so understood by the Angel Gabriel, when he made the wonderful announcement to the Virgin Mary, that she should conceive and bring forth a son, and call his name Jesus. "He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David. And he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

Peter also has given us his testimony to the same truth, in that memorable sermon delivered in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost. In speaking of David, he says, "Therefore, being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne." The restoration of the kingdom to Israel was undoubtedly the understanding of Christ and all his apostles, for we find that when they had come together, after his resurrection, that they asked him if he would not, at that time, restore again the kingdom to Israel. He did not tell them, as many do in these days, that it would never be restored to them; but he confirmed them in their belief in the restoration of the kingdom, by telling them that it was not for them to know the times and seasons the Father had put in his own power.

The prophet Ezekiel so understood the restoration of the kingdom (xxxvii. 21, 22, 24): "Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land. And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king over them all, and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all." Jeremiah says (23 chapter): "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous branch, and a king shall reign and prosper, and execute judgment and justice in the earth. And in his day Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely." Have these predictions ever been fulfilled? I answer, no! Judah and Israel have never been brought together upon the mountains of Israel and had one king over them all, for when that comes to pass, they are to dwell in the land that God gave to their fathers, even they and their children, and their children's children forever. Neither has the righteous branch of David reigned and executed judgment and justice in the earth yet, but he has been raised up, and Peter says, "him hath God exalted to be a prince (or king) and as Savior to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins." We find, at the announcement of his birth, that the wise men from the east came to Jerusalem, saying, "where is he that is born king of the Jews?" The first proclamation made after he was born, was made by John the Baptist, in the land of Judea, saying, "Reform, for the Royal Majesty of the heavens has approached." (Emphatic Diaglott.)

And Jesus himself soon began to preach the same thing. And the burden of all the preaching that was done by Jesus and all his disciples was in reference to Jesus Christ, as a life giver, and future king to reign on David's throne over the nations of the earth, when God shall establish him in his own kingdom upon the throne of David, over the house of Jacob for ever. And he shall execute judgment and justice in the earth when he shall reign from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth; when his feet shall stand upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the mountain shall cleave in the midst thereof from east to west and the land turned as a plain and lifted up above the hills, and the Lord's house established upon the top of the mountains, and exalted above the hills, and people shall flow unto it. And the law shall go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among many people, and shall rebuke strong nations afar off, and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree, and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it. In that day, saith the Lord, "I will assemble her that halteth, and I will gather her that was driven out, and her that I have afflicted. And I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast off a strong nation, and the Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion from henceforth even for ever."

Peter says unto Jesus, "Behold, we have forsaken all and followed thee; what shall we have therefore?" Jesus said, "Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration (or restoration), when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones judging or ruling the twelve tribes of Israel."

John, the revelator, says, "the seventh angel sounded and there were great voices in heaven saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever."

And who, I ask, are to reign with him? We will let the Bible answer. Rev. i. 6, says, "And hast made us kings and priests unto God." And ii. 26, says, "And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron." iii. 21, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I am overcome and am set down with my Father in his throne." v. 9: "And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book and open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth." And the 10th verse says, "And every creature which is in heaven and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea and all that are in them heard I saying, Blessing and honor and glory and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever."

Oh, glorious day! then will be fulfilled that promise to Abraham, that in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blest. And now, dear reader, the time is about fulfilled, and the signs that were to precede the coming of Jesus Christ to earth the second time, to establish this kingdom, and take his great power and reign, are all in the past. And soon his ready saints will be caught up to meet him in the air, there to celebrate the marriage supper of the Lamb, in the New Jerusalem, the antitype of the large upper room furnished; and there, upon the sea of glass, with the harps of God sing the song of Moses and the Lamb, prior to their coming down upon the Mount of Olives, and the establishment of his kingdom on the earth. May the writer and the reader be of that number that shall have on the wedding garment, and go through the gates into the city, and hear the welcome plaudit, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.

The Day of Judgment.

J. D. SHERIDAN,

[illegible] but the Testament has it [illegible] xxv.

In an exposition of the above Scripture, and its context my purpose is to present my understanding of its true significance.

Taking the position that "God is love," 1 Jno. iv. 8, and that the Lord is good to all; and his tender mercies are over all his works." Psa. cxlv. 9. And that Jesus is a true and perfect representation of the same lovely and amiable character, or disposition; consequently any view taken of the proceedings described in the above Scripture, which might lead any one to conclude that either party arraigned before the Judge, were to receive at his hand tyrannical or cruel treatment; or punishment transcending the crime of the guilty party, cannot be the true view.

In 25th chap. of Matt., there is presented to our view a graphic description of the most grand, sublime and awful scene that the human mind can possibly contemplate. It is no less than a representation of the glorified Christ, surrounded by the redeemed of all the past ages, and before him are gathered all the nations for judgment.

I shall assume and undertake to prove by Divine testimony, that there are four distinct classes of the human family represented in this august assembly.

With this view I expect to meet opposition; for it is generally taught, and I suppose universally conceded, that there are but two, namely, saint and sinner.

There are objections to this view, that at first sight seem weighty. But to the law, and to the testimony; if they hear me not out in my conclusions, I stand reproved, and desire of being set right.

That Christ and his saints glorified, at that time, constitute a separate and distinct class, I think I shall be able to show conclusively.

When Jesus he was the mediatorial seat at the right hand of the Father, while on his way to earth, to take possession of his inheritance, he is met by his espoused, who have been united with him by faith and practice in this life, and are risen and there made one in fact. The true church will be crowned with immortality, having their vile bodies changed and made like unto his glorious body, and being invested with royalty, will come with him and constitute the Judge's royal cabinet. See Phil. iii. 21; 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52; 1 Thess. iv. 13-17; Zech. xiv. 5; Jude 14, 15; Rev. ii. 26, 27; Matt. xix. 28; Psa. cxlix. 5-9.

From the testimonies above referred to, it is evident to my mind that all those having formed a union with Christ's divine nature, will meet the Lord before he makes his public manifestation to take part in the administration of the government.

For we read, "If so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." Rom. viii. 17. "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him." 2 Tim. ii. 12.

In the formation of any government first the head must be chosen, then the body or cabinet are selected before the tribunal of subjects takes place.

In the scene before us all the nations are assembled for trial, consequently the joint heirs with Christ are seated with him, invested with power and authority to execute his decree.

If the testimonies already adduced are reliable, then the saints are not to be found among the sheep in the gathering brought to our view; but are a separate class, occupying a much higher position in the kingdom than subjects.

I will now pass on to inquire who are meant by "the least of these, my brethren." 40th ver. In the gathering of the [illegible] pre-eminent place. Although they have not attained to that which they sought after, because they sought it not by faith. And that which was offered them on condition of obedience. Exo. xix. 5. Yet no one will deny that the descendants of Jacob are in the most primary sense of the term Christ's brethren. This being true, who has any right to conclude that the Hebrew nation are not meant in the language of Christ to the waiting multitude? And it will also follow that Israel is not among the class styled "sheep," but are a separate and distinct class, those having received favors from the former class.

That the Hebrew nation will constitute an essential and distinct element, in the coming kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ can be shown by any amount of Divine testimony.

I will here notice that any kingdom, to be complete, must be composed of four essential elements.

First the king and his cabinet or subordinate rulers; second the principles or laws; third the subjects; and fourth a country for those subjects to occupy.

I will here refer the reader to a few of the many Divine affirmations concerning the Hebrew nation, showing conclusively that the brethren of Christ according to the flesh, will occupy a prominent place, and constitute a distinct class in Messiah's kingdom.

The Prophet Isaiah testifies of the Son that should be born to us, upon whose shoulder the government should rest; of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end; upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. Isa. ix. 6, 7.

No one, I presume, will question the fact that the Son given, here spoken of, is Messiah, David's son and Lord, or that the principle part of David's subjects were Hebrews, and this being true, it follows that when the rightful heir to that kingdom comes to claim his title, see Ezek. xxi. 25-27. The same nation, as well as the same country, must be included in the inheritance. This is a matter of much importance that a messenger is sent from heaven to announce the birth of that royal Son, and he bears the intelligence that his name should be called Jesus, "And the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever." Here it is emphatically stated by Gabriel, who stands in the presence of God, that "Jesus shall reign over the house of Jacob." Luke i. 32, 33.

It would seem that the above testimony ought to settle the question beyond a doubt, that the descendants of Israel must constitute a distinct element, and separate class in "the kingdom of God."

From the above it is also implied that there will be a future gathering of those scattered tribes.

But as we are not left to settle this question by inference alone, I will refer to a few declarations of the holy prophets.

By the mouth of Ezekiel, God speaks of the mountains of Israel, "Behold, I am for you, and ye shall be tilled and sown. And I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel, even all of it; and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes shall be builded; and I will multiply upon you man and beast, and they shall increase and bring fruit; and I will settle you after your old estates; and I will do better unto you than at your beginnings." Ezek. xxxvi. 9-11. Again God says of all Israel: "I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land." 24th ver. Again Jehovah saith: "And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel; and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them.... And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their own land which I have given them, saith the Lord God." Amos ix. 14, 15.

As the above unconditional promises have never had a fulfillment in the past, we are forced to look in the future for [illegible] accomplishment; if [illegible] who lies [illegible] pre-

Again, it has been made known to Israel that the kingdoms of Judah and Israel, are to become one nation, and one kingdom; "neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all. And one king shall be king to them." Ezek. xxxvii.

From the above testimonies, it is evident that the descendants of Jacob, who are now scattered into all countries, and among all the nations of the earth, must be gathered again and settled in their own land, and constitute a distinct class in the coming kingdom of Christ.

I freely admit that some texts of Scripture taken by themselves, seem to convey a different view of this subject.

For instance, Jesus taught that "Many shall come from the east and from the west, and shall sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven; but the children of the kingdom shall be cast out." Matt. viii. 82. Also St. Paul teaches, "That flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." 1 Cor. xv. 50.

At sight there seems to be a contradiction between these last testimonies, and the former.

But when we consider the fact that the first, or highest elements, or order in any kingdom, is royalty, while another and just as essential an element is known to be subjects, while it is freely admitted that the sons of Jacob are cast out from holding the highest position in the kingdom, yet they need not necessarily be excluded from the privilege of becoming subjects in that kingdom; if they as a people, on the return of the Nobleman, acknowledge him as their Messiah and King, and none can doubt that they will, if we believe what the prophets have said on this subject.

By reading the 65th chap. of Isaiah it will be seen that in the new heavens and new earth, flesh and blood, will inhabit that better country, for they will build houses, and plant vineyards, and propagate their species. See 22d ver. And St. John testifies to the same effect when he says, "The leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." Rev. xxii. Showing that the nations are yet in the flesh and blood state; or else they would not need any healing medicines.

As subjects of David's kingdom, which has been promised to Christ for an everlasting inheritance, the children of Israel may occupy and possess the land given to their fathers, and yet be cast out from the position they desired in the kingdom, on account of their rebellion, disobedience and unbelief, the royalty having been given to other more worthy.

Not only Israel, as flesh and blood, must become subjects in Christ's kingdom, but other nations also; for we read that after the last gathering of Israel, all flesh will come to Jerusalem to worship God. See Psa. lxv. 2; Isa. lxvi. 18-24; Zech. xiv.

If the above conclusions are correct, then it follows that Christ's brethren spoken of in the Scriptures under contemplation, are not the saints, that is, the bride, the Lamb's wife, but the Hebrew nation, who ever have been, and always will remain a separate and distinct nation or class of people.

Brevities.

One of George Smith's last purchases for the British Museum was a batch of cuneiform inscriptions—some 3,000 in all—found by the Arabs in the ruins of Babylon. They proved to be the trade records of a great banking and mercantile house, the Babylon Rothschild's apparently, and nearly cover the reigns of Nebuchadnezzar, Evil-merodach, Neriglsharezer, Nabonidus, Cyrus, Cambyses, Bardes, Naditabirus, the usurper, and Darius. The dates fully confirm Ptolemy's list of the Babylonian kings.

The Khan of Khelat, a province of Beloochistan, on condition of an annual subsidy of £10,000, and a promise of protection against all enemies, has ceded to Great Britain the right to occupy with troops the principal towns of his territory, and construct forts, railroads, and telegraph lines in it. Khelat has scarcely two million inhabitants, but its situation is very important strategically, inasmuch as it offers the best route by which an army can invade India.

Within the last ten years the United States has sold $43,000,000 worth of arms and munitions of war to Europe.

New Hampshire has aged clergymen. There is Rev. Abel Manning, who is 89—he is the oldest. The next oldest is Rev. Isaac Willey, who is in his 84th year. Then Dr. Heman Rood is 82, and Rev. Nathaniel Barker is 81.

Dr. Schliemann is going to bring out his new (Mycenæ) book at London and in English, but will, of course, publish a German edition. The work will contain 400 engravings from photographs. The doctor complains bitterly of the envious Greek antiquaries in general, and of the one assigned to the duty of watching his Mycenæ excavations in particular.

The Iltihat, a Turkish journal, says that six distinguished ladies of Damascus sent a petition to the Governor-General of Syria asking permission to accompany the army in the capacity of cicerdieres or as attaches of an ambulance corps. The same paper remarks that although the request will necessarily be denied, as inconsistent with the attitude taken by the Islam toward women, it is a sign that the women of Turkey are growing out of the absolute indifference to the interests of their country which has been so long characteristic of them. The Iltihat further states that in all the harems of Stamboul the women have been actively preparing bandages and other things needed by wounded soldiers.

An exalted personage at the Vatican has offered his services as mediator to effect a reconciliation between the Holy See and the Cabinet of Berlin. The Pope thanked this personage for his good intentions, but said that there could be no modus vivendi with error. The Church could not approve certain acts, and these must be annulled before reconciliation is attempted.

The Restitution.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APR. 18, 1877.

DO NOT, dear friends and brethren, fail to aid us, as we need some extra help all the time. You will lose nothing by helping the cause of truth.

WE HAVE been compelled to be absent some during the make-up of the present number; hence some communications that should have appeared in this number must be deferred till our next.

DEATH is doing its sad work. We were present at the funeral of Sister Lucy Shaffer, on Sunday afternoon, at 2 p. m. She was one of those of whom it may be said:

"None saw her but to praise,
None knew her but to love."

Will try to furnish something more full in our next.

MR. N. G. HARVEY is soliciting subscriptions for Zell's Encyclopedia. From a hasty examination of the work, we think it a marvel of condensed information. Though it is somewhat costly, it is the aim of the publishers to place it within the reach of all by adopting the installment plan of payment. Some, who use tobacco extravagantly, could pay for this grand work by economizing on this score alone.

WE INSERT two selections this week, sent us by Brother S. Russell, of Palmyra, Ontario, bearing on the Israelitish origin of the Anglo-Saxons. This is a topic exciting a great deal of interest among Millennarians in England and Scotland. We think it one worthy of investigation, and hope our friends will communicate anything that will tend to illustrate its correctness. We regard the question concerning the lost tribes as an open one that may possibly find a solution in accordance with the above hypothesis.

WE WILL not fail to express our gratitude to our Heavenly Father for furnishing us with the means for the uninterrupted issue of our paper weekly. To Him we prayerfully and trustingly commit ourself, and the interests of the loved RESTITUTION. We have confidence that God will aid us in our life-work while we aim to live for his glory, and desire to promote the interests of our dear Redeemer's cause during these closing days of the present dispensation. What we do in the vineyard, we must do at once, for the last items of prophecy, relating to the gospel age, are fast becoming history, and preaching and papers will soon be no longer needed.

Proclaim the Glad Tidings.

Tell the good news. Let it fly on the wings of the wind. Let it go to the uttermost parts of the earth. "Let the sea roar and the fullness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein. Let the floods clap their hands, let the hills be joyful together before the Lord for he cometh to judge the earth: with righteousness shall he judge the world and the people with equity!" He hath remembered his covenant forever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations, which covenant he made with Abraham and his oath unto Isaac, and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant, saying "Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan the lot of your inheritance."

The Lord will soon send the rod of his strength out of Zion. Christ will soon rule in the midst of his enemies. "He hath showed his people the power of his works that he may give them the heritage of the heathen." "He will be ever mindful of his covenant." "The seed of the Lord shall be mighty upon the earth." "His faithfulness is unto all generations." He "has established the earth and it abideth." "The earth hath he given to the children of men."

"The Lord hath chosen Zion: he hath desired it for his habitation. This is his rest forever; there will he dwell, for he hath desired it. There will he make the horn of David to bud; there has he ordained a lamp for his anointed. There will his enemies be clothed with shame, but upon himself shall his crown flourish."

"The Lord shall arise and have mercy upon Zion, for the time to favor her, yea the set time, is come. So the heathen shall fear the name of the Lord, and all the Kings of the earth his glory." For "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory."

Exegetical.

The Day of the Lord.

BY C. COLEGROVE.

In the Bible Banner for January is a reply to the following query: "Was the Lord's day, referred to in Rev. i. 10, the first or seventh day of the week?" If you will allow me space to record my own convictions, I will respectfully suggest, that in this case there is no reference whatever to either the first or seventh day of the week. Let us give the subject a careful examination.

Perhaps no one will dare it amiss if the Greek original is given, thus: [illegible] A very nearly exact rendering would be thus: "I became in spirit in the day of the Lord." The word kuriake, here is an adjective, and, if I mistake not, is used in this form in but one other place in the New Testament, that is, in 1 Cor. xi. 20. It is there kyriakon deipnon, or the "supper of the Lord." We have no adjective in the English corresponding to this Greek adjective. But we can very easily illustrate the use of this adjective form in analogous cases. For example, we say "Christian people," or "Christian ordinances," when we mean the people and ordinances of Christ. Or we may say, "Messianic dispensation" or "institutions," when we mean the dispensation or institutions of Messiah. But we cannot, I suppose, without coining a word, give an adjective form in English of the word "Lord."

What then is this day of the Lord? To my mind the answer is simple and unmistakable. The Apostle Paul says to the Thessalonians, "For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night." And Peter says the very same thing in the latter part of the second epistle. Again: Paul to the Corinthians protests, "even as ye also are ours in the day of the Lord Jesus." And again he suggests the end ordeal of Satanic oppression to gross delinquents, "that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." Again, he says to the Philippians: "That I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in vain, neither labored in vain."

In all these cases the meaning is perfectly plain. No one can have the slightest feeling of uncertainty in regard to the reference [illegible] and spiritual [illegible] well that the allusion [illegible] our Lord's second advent, the time of deliverances and reward: the first grand dispensation of divine grace in that exercise of power being the resurrection from the dead, or its equivalent to those who may be living—translation to immortality. Precisely the same meaning is found in another passage: "Who shall confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ." We might easily add to these quotations, both in the Old and New Testaments.

The question now occurs, how was John in the spirit in this day of the Lord? The article is wanting in the Greek, and literally John says, "I was in spirit in the day." The meaning is very transparent, having a pertinent illustration in the declaration of Paul, who says: "For though I be absent in body, yet I am with you in the spirit;" and again, "For I verily as absent in body, but present in spirit, have judged," etc. Whether the article is present or not, in such cases, we understand the meaning to be an intense mental sympathy, just as in a thousand instances we are brought into close mental proximity to absent friends by some circumstance of special interest, as a newly received letter, a telegraph dispatch, the visit of a mutual friend, or by the knowledge of important events affecting their interest. We are in spirit with those we love, who may be suffering keenly, or on the other hand, recipient of some great blessing. We sympathize with absent friends in temptation and affliction especially. I repeatedly visited the senate chamber in Washington, a year ago, and I can very easily re-visit this spot in imagination, while the great debates are going on, upon the absorbing question which engages the attention of the country.

It is very true that in subjects of a sacred nature, involving the welfare of Christians and the glory of God, the Holy Spirit by a special influence vivifies and gives efficiency to mental operations. Especially did it do so in apostolic days. And by this divine aid the Revelator was transported to scenes of extraordinary and exalted character, as in the case before us. The conclusion of the matter therefore is, that the seer of Patmos was mentally transported form the time in which he lived to that great day of wonder, which is yet future, and which comprehends a series of events of the most thrilling and eventful interest. It is very true that this view of the subject, which to my mind is beyond successful contradiction, may not be informed by many, especially inasmuch as the book of Revelation is regarded by them as comprehending events which extend through the entire eighteen centuries which have relatively elapsed since the ascension of our Lord. Yet, while there is no evidence, it may be, such a reference—while in a prophetic and figurative sense, this entire period may be embraced in every actual and essential meaning the latest and definite period of this closing Dispensation is intended. It follows that the grand transactions which are portrayed in the Apocalypse are properly all, or nearly all future, and mark in their magnitude and majesty, their mingled awfulness and glory, the times correctly connected with the second advent.

It is perfectly true that "a day with the Lord is as a thousand years," and therefore, I think, there is reference in the latter part of the Revelation to events located at the close of this millennial period. Yet the bulk of the transactions seems to be of characteristic of the earlier part of this long period, that is, introductory to it, and inaugurating it. Of course it is proper to speak with modesty. Those who hold contrary opinions are to be treated with courtesy and respect. Kindness is far better than a dictatorial style. However, I think it is a matter of great importance to have a right understanding of this question. It seems to me very natural to conclude that events involved in a change so stupendous as all prophecy assigns to a period antecedent to the established Kingdom of divine and universal light-holiness on earth, should have a special place assigned to them in prophetic delineation. The redemption of the earth will be a great achievement; and as the time of its accomplishment draws near, the opposition of evil forces may be expected to be desperate. The genius and energy of unholy men have wrought material changes hitherto unprecedented on earth. There is a pride of achievement which fosters a sense of mastery. Satan is remarkable for one thing, and that is tenacity, and he inspires the same spirit where he has dominion. The dominion of the enemy will not be surrendered without a violent struggle. It is a conflict both of strategy and of power. Amid the multitude of man's inventions, [illegible] those which quicken intercourse and render possible swift and vast combinations, we may expect opposition to Jesus to take determined and extraordinary development. Hence in the crisis of conflicting claims and opposing energies, we anticipate scenes such as earth has never known. To a representation of these evolutions of evil, we understand the book of Revelation to be devoted. It is a photograph of the final crisis and the final conflict. It represents judgment upon wickedness, and pre-pictures the measured strength of good and evil powers, of which awful storms and convulsions affire, the latter is compelled to succumb. The enemy is both by strategy and force defeated and held in long subjection, (while the glory of God fills the earth,) and last of all, annihilated.

Of course we all know that in the Old Testament are very striking and numerous allusions to these days. I think that it must be admitted that comparatively little space is given there to a prophetic description of the centuries of the Christian era already past. But the prophets abound with allusions to the fearful scenes of the latter days, together with those glories which are to follow the kingship and kingdom of Messiah on earth, when all shall know the Lord from the least unto the greatest.

It is true, I think, that a watching and read people will escape participation in these calamities, and may witness them with a feeling of interest which our present faculties cannot comprehend. Safe in the society of their divine Deliverer, and associated with him in whatever function he may graciously assign, they will probably be able to watch all the grand transactions of the closing apocalyptic scene. A happy deliverance is promised to the Philadelphian church.

We are living on the verge, I think, of soul-thrilling events. May we be ready for whatever God has in store for us. We have to endure trials, and a personal and particular interposition of Christ in what we look for, because we believe his time is very nearly come. Once, his hour of suffering was imminent. Now his hour of victory and power are at hand.

In regard to the seventh day, and its present obligatory position in Christian days and duties, I have no faith. It is true, but I can manifest courtesy towards those of an opposite opinion. I can exercise Christian kindness to them, while I wait in humble hope for the Son of God from heaven.—Bible Banner.

Repentance.

Mr Moody recently preached in Boston on the subject of repentance. His text was:

"God now commandeth all men everywhere to repent. Because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men in that he hath raised him from the dead."

In this review of his sermon I would mention its excellencies, and some of its defects. I regard Mr. Moody as a very eloquent and devoted man, far in advance of most of the preachers of the day, in fervor and efficiency. He is like Apollos "A Jew born at Alexandria, an eloquent man and mighty in the Scriptures." "This man was instructed in the way of the Lord, and being fervent in the spirit he spake and taught diligently the things of the Lord knowing only the baptism of John. And he began to speak boldly in the synagogue, whom when Aquilla and Priscilla had heard, they took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly." Afterward it is said, "He mightily convinced the Jews, and that publicly, showing by the Scriptures that Jesus was Christ." Acts xviii. 24.

If some modern Aquila would invite Mr. Moody in the "way of God more perfectly," he would be mightier in the Scriptures than now.

In this discourse, as in all his sermons, he follows the Master in using many parables, or illustrations, and these are drawn very much from the Scriptures; and hence "the common people hear him gladly."

He very properly tries to show what the commanded repentance is, and he urges his hearers to repent now. He says: "The best definition I can give of this word 'repentance' is, changing our course." Repentance is a translation from the Greek word metanoia, and such a change as shall be followed by change of course. So the exhortation of Peter was to repent and be converted—turn about; or, repent and change your course.

The bible everywhere makes a distinction between repentance and conversion or works meet for repentance. Repentance is a voluntary change of mind or purpose, involving the resolution to obey God instead of disobeying him, and is the effect of faith and godly sorrow, and an outward reformation, conversion or obedient works are the fruit of genuine repentance.

Mr. Moody shows that sorrow and fear are not repentance—that it will lead to confession of sin, and restitution and forgiveness. He does not tell his hearers to "repent and be baptized for the remission of sins" as Peter, on the day of Pentecost preached to the convicted thousands.

Mr. Moody admonishes the people that there is no repentance beyond the grave, because the Bible does not teach it. He says: "Repentance ain't conviction." Well, it is a trite saying that some mistake conviction for conversion. Although conviction is not identical with conversion, yet, if a man is thoroughly convicted or convinced of the truth, he will as certainly be converted as that water will run down an inclined plane. Take his illustration: "Suppose I wanted to go to Worcester, but should go to the wrong depot, and get aboard the train for Portland, and some Boston friend tells me of my error, and says, Moody, you are on the wrong train.' Well that convinces me, because I know that he lives here, and knows all about these trains. That is conviction: but if I remain there in that train I shall go to Portland just as though I was not convicted."

Now, I submit that if he were convinced that he was on the wrong train by his friend, who, he is satisfied, knows all about the trains, he will certainly leave the wrong train and get on the right one. If any man becomes fully convicted or convinced, it is the same as faith or a belief of the gospel, and to such an one the gospel will assuredly become the power of God unto salvation, whether he be Jew or Greek. See Romans i. 16. All the power necessary to convert the most hardened sinner, is the moral power of the gospel, if it is fully believed, and he may be kept by the same "power of God through faith unto salvation." Take notice that the salvation is one thing, and will be at the second coming of Christ by resurrection and change to immortality of the living saints; while the conversion and continuance in well-doing is another thing, to transpire during this probationary life. For Paul declares: "We are saved by hope." Not actually saved, but saving a hope of being saved; and the essential hope for is defined to be the adoption or redemption of the body, which can take place only at a future resurrection. "Unto them that look for him, he will appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Heb. ix. 28.

If, therefore, religious teachers inculcate the idea that the salvation and eternal life and kingdom are exclusively set up in the heart of the believer now, they confuse the people and break the native power of these future promised blessings. No one is authorized to substitute other than the true Bible motives to repentance, or any other power but the living gospel power of God.

Now, we complain of Mr Moody that he preaches for motive the going to heaven or hell at death, which the Bible nowhere teaches: and he neglects, to a great extent, the only scriptural hope of eternal life, an immortal life, and an incorruptible kingdom at the second appearing. If he speaks to them of entering the kingdom of God, he does not instruct them that the kingdom will be set up on this earth, and be possessed forever, even forever and ever, "under the whole heaven," by the saints of God; that "Jesus Christ will judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." Consequently his numerous hearers are left to infer, according to their previous teaching, that they may enter a sky-kingdom, at death. He did not use the mighty motive that his text contained, to persuade sinners to immediate repentance, "Because he has appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness," by his appointed king, "whereof he hath given assurance unto all men in that he hath raised him from the dead."

When Mr. Moody learns the way of God more perfectly, he will preach "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is nigh at hand." "Repent and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord, and he shall send Jesus Christ, which was before preached unto you, whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things which all the holy prophets have spoken of since the world began." Acts iii. Repent, because "the judge standeth at the door," and will shortly "judge the world in righteousness."

We are glad that Mr. Moody does search the scriptures. They are able to "make the man of God perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work," and make him "wise unto salvation." We are glad he is not ashamed to preach (sometimes) the words of Jesus and the apostles that relate to the return of the Nobleman from the far country to sway the sceptre of universal empire, and make "His dominion extend from sea to sea," and "from the river to the ends of the earth." May he be among the truly wise who shall at last "shine as the brightness of the firmament," and with those "who turn many to righteousness," to "shine as the sun in the kingdom of God," and "as the stars for ever and ever."

Adoration.

Oh let us cultivate the power of calling our minds from all else, to fix them in silent love upon our Savior. To work, to read, to pray, to praise, all are invaluable to us; but let us in our silent chamber, in the empty sanctuary, by the river, or the mighty sea,—beside the tranquil grave, beneath the shadow of a great rock or the brow of a lofty mountain—) while waiting for others—in sleepless nights or in suffering days—lift up our mental gaze and fix it steadfastly, lovingly, in mute, but intense adoration upon our God. Each attribute of God, each wonder of creation, event of history or our own lives might supply a special subject; but God in his infinity and in his love, as manifested in Jesus Christ,—these are the subjects that we love more and more devotedly the oftener we contemplate them.

The attention of Palestine explorers is called to "the information given in the historical book of the Maccabees II, ii. 4-5, wherein we are told that immediately before the Babylonish captivity the Prophet Jeremiah was instructed to deposit in Mount Nebo the most valuable treasures which the Temple contained—namely, the Tabernacle, the Sacred Ark, and, doubtless, the Tables of Stone, of which the Ark was merely the receptacle, on which was written the law of the Ten Commandments, traced there originally, we are told, by the finger of God himself. They were in that mountain said to be concealed, and if that historical book is to be relied on, we must credit the fact that these sacred treasures are there still. Would it not be worth the explorers' while to seek for these in the place specified? The discovery of them would throw great light upon the Old Testament and the language in which the Tables were written.—N. Y. Observer.

Jews Gathering at Palestine.

Monetre D. Conway, in a letter to the Cincinnati Commercial, dated London February 20th, 1877, says:

I observe that the Jewish press in America are disposed to question a statement made by me concerning the gathering of their race at Palestine. Probably, however, they simply mean to make my letter an occasion for admonishing their co-religionists against superstitious reverence for Palestine. The writers and leaders of Israel, both in America and England, show a very general disposition to keep as quiet as possible the fact that Judaism, like other religions, has had to undergo the inevitable divisions into "wings" which our time demands. There are Jews of the letter and Jews of the spirit; supernaturalists and rationalists, those who look only for literal, and those who look only for spiritual fulfillments of ancient prophecies and hopes. America has done a great deal towards increasing the strength of the rationalist wing, but still, so far as numbers are concerned, it is certain that the literalists are in a large majority among the ten millions at which their race is estimated. However unpleasant it may be to the liberal and free thinking Jews of America, the fact which I have stated concerning the tendency of their race to gather in Palestine is unquestionable. The phenomenon has been sufficiently pronounced to call forth a work by the Rev. James Neil, B. A., some time a clergyman in Jerusalem, which, along with a good deal of fanaticism, contains some interesting facts. The work is entitled "Palestine Repeopled; or, Scattered Israel's Gathering. A Sign of the Times." Mr. Neil shows that the population of Palestine is double what it was ten years ago, the new-comers being Jews and chiefly from Russia. Three years ago such an influx took place to Safed, one of the four holy cities in Galilee, that there were no houses to receive them, and many had to camp out. A plot of ground near Jerusalem was sold for twenty times its former price. Building goes on by night as well as day. Two little colonists have settled just outside Jaffa Gate. The real causes of this migration are, first, that only recently could a Jew own land in Palestine without becoming a Turkish subject; and, secondly, the new law in Russia (1874) by which all Jews must be enrolled for military service. It is probable that Russia until now contained one-third of the Jewish race; and just as soon as they begin to feel the pressure of these military demands upon them of Russia, albeit these mean their relief from some previous burdens, they find the old oppression of the "second woe" (as they used to call the Turkish rule which shut them up in one wretched quarter of Jerusalem) removed to a large extent. But it is evident that a large portion of the emigrants in Palestine are animated by religious enthusiasm. This is shared by Christian enthusiasts also, as is particularly the case with a German colony there known as the "Hoffmanites," their leader being a Dr. Hoffman, but calling themselves the "Society of the Temple." They are about a thousand, most of them from Wurtemburg, and have branches at Jerusalem, Jaffa an Haifia, where they are industrious mechanics and tradesmen and generally promote the welfare of the country. This society seems to have some Jewish proselytes, which have probably been obtained through their not maintaining the Christian sacraments or symbols, and their refusal to join in any missionary work. They believe that they are fulfilling prophecy by simply promoting prosperity of Palestine and living moral and benevolent lives. Of course the zealous missionary, Mr. Neil, regards all such facts as mere secondary agents in the divine plan, with which plan he is obviously familiar. Six thousand years of prevailing evil are to be now followed by a millennium of 360,000 literal years. This is a new light. According to Virgil the ghosts of the departed remained in Elysium one thousand years before they were reincarnate on earth, and the sacred cycle has found its place in the millennial theory. But Mr. Neil has multiplied the number by 360 on the queer ground that "Peter especially explains that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day!" You will not be surprised to learn that the Mount of Olives is to be cloven with a valley (Zech. xiv.) and Mt. Zion to be miraculously elevated and crowned with a mile-square temple, events which will at once fulfill prophecy and improve the feature of the country. Fanatical, no doubt; but fanaticism is still one of the forces which must be included in every wise forecast. It especially is notable to find the Christian missionary writing with admiration of Sir Moses Montefiore on account of what he has done for Jews in Palestine.

Near the End.

Shall I look back on many years,
And longing, because some years were sad?
Oh! long the day of glad hearers—
This heart of mine—will now be glad.

Those years are gone like to a dream;
I thought them long—but night will close:
A passing evening's death—tale they seem:
What contrast to the Morning of Rest!

But still the world is not won:
'Tis cruel yet: to nearly strife:
No time to rest, but urgencies,
For crown or sin, immortal life.

Pale watchers of the years now past,
Romance, time will soon be fled:
Eternity—no life we see the dead!
And then—the rising from the dead!

Age to Come.

"That in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of His grace in His kindness toward us through Christ Jesus. For by grace are ye saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." Eph. ii. 7-8.

This subject is not introduced for the sake of controversy, to ride a particular hobby; far from it, and I hope no one of our friends, and especially our Adventist friends, will feel at all sensitive by the introduction of this subject, in treating of which I propose to be brief; but I think I shall be able to show that there is only a paper wall which divides us after all.

In the text we find the apostle speaking of the ages to come, plural then the that in the series must be "The age, the ages, the restitution, or the Great Kingdom."

I trust, my dear friends that all of you for I take it for granted that you are anxiously looking for the King to soon reign on the holy hill of Zion) are praying with the spirit and with the understanding also; for the kingdom to come, and the will of God to be done on earth as it is done in heaven, which is in fact but using only a different phraseology expressive of the same thing, coming age or coming kingdom, terms which may with propriety be used interchangeably. I am well aware that our good friends will readily agree with us so far, but then we are not as yet prepared to associate the idea of probation, which the believers in the age to come so firmly believe. Well then, "to the law and the testimony, for it they speak not according to this word, there is no light in them."

Now to give our friends that benefit of their doubts we will say the probation is not a Bible term, but we will use the equivalent term trial, which is a Bible term. It must be admitted that all the "prophets since the world or age began, spake of the restitution of all things."

We will first enquire what we are to understand by the term restitution. It is simply to bring back, or restore something previously possessed, and subsequently lost; if anything should be suspended, it must necessarily be over or above a restitution. We will enquire then, was Adam, our federal head, placed on trial? Were the children of Israel put on trial when the kingdom was established? and will not the kingdom of God be the kingdom of Israel restored? See Acts i-viii; John xviii.—xxxvii.

No one can truthfully say that Christ is defacto king, but king dejure or prospectively king.

We will now enquire if subjects of a kingdom are not a necessary constituent of a kingdom? Every one who does not believe in a sky kingdom, or kingdom set up in the heart, but in a literal and tangible kingdom, will answer yes; and what are the characteristics of subjects? Are they mortal or immortal? What is implied in the office of king and priest? Was not the kingdom of Israel a kingdom in the type, and will it not be in the antitype? See Rev. v.-x.

Will one of the saints rule or be a mediator or priest over another?

The saints will have become immortal at the resurrection, and will they then need other priests to make atonement for them? After the nations are healed will they need the healing properties of the tree of life? They who are whole, need no medicine or a physician, but those who are sick. In Acts xv. 14, 17, we read the following viz: "Simon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out a people for his name."

And to this agree the words of the prophets, as it is written;

After this I will return and build the tabernacle of David that is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up.

That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord who does all these things.

I wish to note the following points, viz:

1. The taking out a people from the Gentiles to constitute Christ's household, is no part of the restitution; for they were never called God's chosen people, and they can become his people only by assimilation, or in other words, by being grafted into the good olive tree, contrary to the rule of effects of grafting. This was a mystery which had been hid for ages, but it was announced by the proclamation of the gospel that they should become fellow heirs with the Jews to the same inheritance the covenants of promise made to the fathers: so that when this is consummated, then there will be neither Jew nor Gentile, but consistion of one in Christ.

2. The building of the tabernacle again of David will constitute a part of the restitution, spoken of by the Prophet Amos. See Amos ix. xi. This tabernacle was of course an heavenly institution.

3. This setting up of the tabernacle, is that the residue of men might seek after the Lord—the remnant or the left of the nations which come against Jerusalem, and they shall go up from year to year to keep the feast of tabernacles. See Zech. xiv.

I would ask right here if this tabernacle type has ever in the past reached its antitype? If not, are we to look for its fulfillment in the present or the future age?

If words are the signs of ideas, then the idea if probation or trial is fully sustained.

Are the subjects of the kingdom mortal or immortal.

The candid reader will find the true answer to this question by consulting Isaiah's prophecy, lxv. 17, 25, and comparing it with Christ's answer to the Sadducees. In ver. 25th it reads, "They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble: for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord and their offspring with them."

Christ said to the Sadducees that they who are accounted worthy to obtain that world (kingdom or age) and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry or are given in marriage, but are as the angels who can die no more. Of course only the mortals can propagate their species; and in this age to come the life of man shall be as the age of a tree. The child shall die an hundred years old, but the sinner that is an hundred years old shall die accursed.

The return of the children of Israel to their own land, is another objection which is often urged against what is termed in common parlance, the age to come. The great objection which is urged against it is, that it savors too much of partiality; but this by no means follows necessarily. The Apostle Paul in Rom. xi., makes this matter plain, and fully answers the objection. The condition of salvation of the two are precisely the same.

The future of Israel is fully set forth in the following from the Prophet Jeremiah xxx. 11: "For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee; though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee; yet will I not make full end of thee, but I will correct thee in measure, and not leave thee altogether unpunished."

Please read this and the three following chapters: Ezek. xxviii. 25, 26; xxiv.-xxix, with many other passages of Scripture too voluminous to transcribe in this article; and if the perusal will not fully convince the candid reader who may differ with us in regard to the position we occupy, one thing I think is sure, and that is that we have ground on which to predicate our faith. But as before stated, this article is not designed for a hobby or a test; for I am well aware of the influence of early education; but I firmly believe that the gulf is not an impassable one. Let brotherly love continue and abound, and let us not fall out by the way, while traveling to Mount Zion; let the soon coming of the Lord be our great rallying cry—our watchword and the only Shibboleth. May we rally around this standard; for it is the standard of the cross; may it be our earnest cry, Come Lord Jesus—come quickly. M. I. LEWIS.

The Literal Advent.

Ten Scriptural passages proving that the coming of the Son of Man did not take place at the destruction of Jerusalem, and consequently, must be yet future:

1. "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i. 11. Just as certainly as Jesus went to heaven literally, so certainly will he return literally, not as an image or spirit but as a personal being. Now as there are but two comings of Christ mentioned in the Scriptures, the first and second, and as he was to come as he went away, and as Universalists admit that he did not come literally at the destruction of Jerusalem, it follows that he did not come at all.

2. "Behold he cometh with clouds," Rev. i. 7. This certainly did not take place at the destruction of Jerusalem. They tell us that by the coming of Christ the coming of Titus was intended. If this is the case, then Christ did not come; for Titus came on no cloud, and not in the clouds of heaven.

3. "The Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him." Matt. xxv. 31. Universalists contend that the Roman soldiers with Titus were what was meant by the angels. Yes, indeed; those wicked, abominable, blood-thirsty soldiers were a very fitting representation of the holy angels of God. If Titus and his soldiers fitly represented Christ and his angels, what would be required to represent the devil and his angels?

4. "Behold he cometh with ten thousands of his saints. Jude v. 14. If the Roman soldiers were the saints of the Lord, where should we go to find the children of the devil?

5. "For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." Lu. xxi. 35. Did the Roman army come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth? Where were the inhabitants of Europe, Africa, and the larger part of Asia? Did the destruction of Jerusalem come upon them? Did every eye see Christ during that campaign? The word every means all, they tell us. By thy words thou shalt be condemned.

6. "The Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of." Matt. xxiv. 50. Did the destruction of Jerusalem come when they were not looking for it? I hardly think so; the Jews well knew that the Roman army would come and prepared for it; so when destruction came upon them they were expecting it; hence it follows that Christ did not come then; for he is to come as a thief in the night.

7. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the arch-angel, and with the trump of God." 1 Thess. iv. 16. The voice of the arch-angel was not heard at the destruction of Jerusalem, and as for the trump of God, Paul declares that to be at the resurrection of the dead. This they all admit; hence the coming of the Lord is yet future.

8. "Now we beseech you brethren by the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him." 2 Thess. ii. 1. The saints were not gathered to Titus at the destruction of Jerusalem, for the Savior had commanded them to flee to the mountains as soon as they saw the approach of the Roman soldiers. If this were the gathering, what would their scattering signify?

9. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. iii. 4. Did the apostles appear with Titus in glory? not quite if they fled to the mountains in the way they were directed to do by their Savior. If those with Titus were in a state of glory, who, since the foundation of the world were ever in a state of infamy?

10. "But rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." 1 Pet. iv. 13. "Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. i. 13. "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." 1 Thess. iv. 18. Was it a comfort and consolation to the saints to reflect that Christ would come at the head of the Roman army to drive drive them from their homes to wander in sheepskins and goatskins into the dens and caves of the earth destitute and afflicted? Was this the kind of consolation held out to believers that they were to receive when Christ should come at the destruction of Jerusalem when Titus destroyed the city? and be glad with exceeding great joy when they should see such afflictions? If the Lord came in the person of Titus to bless men, the wonder is, how he would come if he were coming to curse them?

Pius IX. and the Sultan.

The Churchman is authority for the following: "We have been pretty plainly told, of late, that the sympathies of the Monsignors, investors in the Turkish loan, are very far from being with "the Christian peoples of the East," and the sympathy with them is frowned on at the Papal Court. Nor was it very long ago that we were officially informed how delegates were to be appointed by Pius IX. and the Sultan respectively, who were to arrange, among other things, for a closer alliance between the Ottoman Porte and the Court of Rome. Indeed, next to the British Government, the Papacy appears as the great European upholder of Turkish misrule, or rather no rule."

Heresy.

Within the bounds of our great state of Indiana, not long since, a minister belonging to a church not yet considered orthodox in certain quarters, asked a brother minister for the privilege of speaking in his pulpit. "You may if you will not preach heresy," was the quick response. The poor unfortunate (?) minister the right it better to hearken to God than to man at the risk of having the door of that church shut against him. It seems to me an arrogant claim on the part of those who make it, to assume the prerogative of saying what another shall preach, or forbear to preach. Of late we concede that the different religious bodies have a kind of legal right to foreclose against what they regard as heresy to the extent of shutting meeting house doors. But, then, what about Christian courtesy? And, what about their boast of fairness and religious freedom? And how is it possible under this exclusive spirit to obey the Apostle's injunction: "Prove all things and hold fast that which is good?" Perhaps they think that the privilege of speaking in their pulpits as an act of courtesy on their part demands as courtesy on our part, that we keep within the bounds of their creeds, or that we stay on common grounds. As to religious freedom and liberty of speech, these they will allow us to enjoy on any part of God's footstool not covered by their title deeds. And even here some of them (not all) have resorted to strategy, as we can testify. They have appealed time and again to the corporation trustee to lock school-houses against us on the plea of protecting school furniture and apparatus from being injured or destroyed—not by us or ours—but by their own bad boys. They do not seek to circumvent us in this way if they have no houses in which to worship except these same school houses. In this case they cry no-souls, soul-sleepers, false phrophets or some other hard names; or else misrepresent our views of God's word; thus sometimes defeating our purpose to reach the ears of some poor sinners with the message of life. But, then, we do not complain much, knowing that things will turn in our favor sometime. As to proving all things, they no doubt feel assured that this was done to their hands by the fathers, one, two or three centuries ago. That some Conference, Presbytery or Synod settled the points of doctrine—five or thirty-nine [illegible] cotyped them in creeds, and bequeathed these to generations to come. This saves labor, and the necessity of searching the scriptures.

Orthodox and heterodox are formidable words or names; but who should be honored with the first, or who branded with the second, are questions not to be settled by councils or by self-constituted popes. So far as any class of religionists has a plain "Thus saith the Lord," as the basis of faith, so far are they sound in the faith; and to the extent that they supplant the teachings of Inspiration by human opinions, they are unsound in faith. If the self-styled orthodox churches would submit to be tried by the only proper and fair test, the word of God without note or comment, they would find themselves so squarely confronted on more than one point, by plain testimony, that they would be obliged to abandon their creeds. To bring one of their doctrines to this test will be sufficient to illustrate what I have said. Is the soul of man, in this life, immortal? Let the Scripture that affirms this in explicit terms be forth-coming. But it is seen that the old book is silent as the grave on this popular doctrine, but lends its testimony in unmistakable language in support of quite a different doctrine, the entire morality of man; that he is to seek for immortality by patient continuance in well doing. Rom. ii. 7, and that eternal life will be rendered as a gift of grace and mercy through Jesus, the Christ. Rom. vi. 23.

Correspondence.

I would like to have you make a correction of an error of my own in reference to the North Air Passage, which as a matter of fact descends to a point near the ceiling of the Grand Gallery, but does not enter it, passing along down to the west side of the Ante Chamber, and then taking a 125 inch horizontal course, and opening into the King's Chamber. The error was due to a mis-construction of a diagram, which appeared to indicate that the Grand Gallery ceiling was pierced by the air passage, and such would be the natural inference. I shall feel especially under obligation to have the pamphlet free from errors, and subject it to careful examination before it is issued, that its statements may be relied on as authentic.

LONDON, April 6.—The Times' Philippopolis correspondent says that the dark rumors which were current this time last year are revived again. The Mussulmans have recommenced threatening, the same as preceded the last massacre. The inhabitants of Izvor, a village only three hours distant, have been informed that they had only a fortnight to live. The Christians are greatly alarmed.

A special dispatch to the Chicago Evening Journal, from St. Petersburg, April 11, says: "Europe probably within the next week will receive clear proof of Russia's determination to attain the end for which her troops have been concentrated on the frontier.

At St. Petersburg, on the 12th, it was stated that there is no hope that Turkey will accede to the demands of Europe

The Golos declares the present state of things is such as to leave scarcely any hope of a pacific solution. The Russian occupation of the Christian provinces of Turkey would be a logical consequence of the refusal of the Porte to carry out the demands of the protocol. Such occupation would exclude all idea of the ambitious designs attributed to Russia, who, by intervening in behalf of the Christians, would solely pursue humanitarian ends.

A clerical and Orleanist journal of Paris reports that Communist refugees in Switzerland have succeeded in introducing firearms in several departments of France with a view to future uprising. The government has ordered a more complete surveillance of the frontier.

VENICE, April 12.—A telegram from Cettinje says the Prince of Montenegro will reject any proposals for a prolonged armistice.

BUCHAREST, April 12.—The Russian troops are making a forward movement on the Roumanian frontier.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 12.—The Turkish circular was delivered to the Russian government this morning. It is described as categorically refusing the demands of the Powers, and putting an end to all further discussion.

A Vienna special says: "This government has lost all hope that peace will be maintained. From an official [illegible] Turks are de[illegible] Niesics in a few days, which will be the signal of an outbreak of hostilities. Thote has been great excitement in Vienna all day. Everybody apprehends that if war breaks out Austria will sooner or later be involved in the struggle."

LONDON, April 13.—A dispatch from Scutari to the Times says: "Fighting has been going on in the Mirdite country since Sunday. Dervish Pasha having rejected all overtures. The first day the Turks were beaten at Meundi, but on the second day they captured the position of Mucia, half a day's journey from Scutari. The result of the last two days' fighting is unknown.

A letter from Captain Burnaby says that a secret alliance exists between Russia and Persia.

Editor Restitution:—The Lord has spared my life thus far, although I am not able to sit up long at a time, having been very sick since I last wrote to you. The Lord will never see the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread. It has always been my practice to pay for anything I buy, or else not get it. When brother wanted me to take the paper, I did not know what it was but am now so well pleased with it that I would not like to do without it. I send you one dollar now, hoping you will receive it, and may you have life and health to spread the papers far and near. I am lying down as I try to sketch this, so excuse this. God bless you, is my prayer. O blessed thought. He leadeth me,—the Lord leadeth me—by his hand he leadeth me. LYDIA E. GIBBONS.

Editor Restitution:—Fortunately, I got to see a copy of the Pyramid number. A brief study of the cut enables me to discover certain important truths connected with, or relating to that diagram upon which no writer has yet touched. It will awaken a new interest, and will command the attention of all who are interested in this subject. Personal to myself I would say, that I am hopeful that the blessing of God will attend my labors here, and if so, I shall be found lending you and our beloved cause a helping hand. My heart goes out in sentiments of love and sympathy with you for the cause of truth. And, with you, I say "the paper must live." Let the editor continue to trust in God and verily he shall be fed, not only with the bread of this life, but the bread of which comes everlasting life.

St. Louis, Mo.

Editor Restitution:—I send you some help to get the RESTITUTION out of debt. I wish I could do more, but wages are low, and I have many calls to meet. The brethren of old had many trials and dangers to encounter, but in the last days they are more beguiling. The brethren are told to watch and pray in all things, and to stand fast; and it behooves us to do so as everything around us indicates the near approach of the Master. Hoping, dear brother, you may succeed in this life, and have an abundant entrance into the kingdom, I remain with love your brother in Christ.

Signs of the Times Across the Water.

A Mr. Ford recently from London, England, lately said in a Boston meeting:

"There is vastly more of what some people call 'enthusiasm' in Europe on the subject of the second coming of Christ, than there is in America. The potentates of Europe are seemingly strongly impressed with the belief that some extraordinary event is about to take place relative to our world and some power separate and distinct from this earth. Pope Pius IX. says 'there is a conflict impending between the arch-angel Michael and the devil;' Disraeli affirms that 'there is to be an overturning of the nations and a great change in the governmental systems of the world.' And other eminent European statesmen and religious as well as political philosophers, are anticipating some great demonstration hitherto not experienced by the inhabitants of earth. In London, of an evening, you will see men bearing large banners through the streets, on which are painted in prominent letters the words, "The Lord is coming!" — Messiah's Herald.

All things are possible, if they are but promised to him that believes.

DIED.

DANN—On Saturday, March 24, 1877, of consumption, Brother William O. Dann, aged forty-five years, husband of Ada Dann, of Aledo, Illinois.

The history of the Christian life of our beloved brother whose death now calls us here is a record that calls forth the admiration of those who were acquainted with it. He was truly a man of faith. His confidence in God and his blessed promises was of the highest order, and, when compared with the faith of many professed Christians, shone, as it were, with resplendent glory. Brother Dann and wife were connected with the Presbyterian church of this place, but by personal visits I had the pleasure of showing them the things "concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ," and after a thorough search of the Scriptures they confessed its truth, and on Sunday, August 6, 1876, put on Christ by baptism. Brother Dann often labored by and his strength in expounding the Word of God to his friends and neighbors who came to see him during his sickness, and I trust that precious seed has been sown, which will yet germinate and bear fruit. The glorious hope of the coming of Jesus gave him great joy. During the last hours of his life he said he was happy, and everything had a bright aspect.

Brother Thomas Wilson preached the funeral discourse, to a large audience, and, in accordance with the request of Brother Dann, gave the people a brief synopsis of his faith.

"Behold the western evening light
It melts in deepening gloom.
So calmly Christians sink away,
Descending to the tomb.

"The winds breathe low; the yellow leaf
Scarce whispers from the tree;
So gently flows the parting breath
When good men cease to be.

"How beautiful on all the hills
The crimson light is shed;
'Tis like the peace the Christian gives
To mourners round his bed.

"Night fairly but soon the morning light
Its glories shall restore;
And thus the eyes that sleep in death
Shall wake to close no more."

HAWK—April 2, 1877, after an illness of a few weeks, of pneumonia, Jesse Hawk, aged seventy-nine years.

He (Bro. Hawk) was born in Warren county, N. J. Came to this state about eight years ago. Embraced the gospel hope through the preaching of John Moore, of Galesburg, Neosho county, Kansas. A more patient sufferer I never saw,

Silently we laid him away to rest.
He was weary, weak, his body filled with pain
But it won't be long till Christ comes,
And our dead arise will live again.

Afterward.

Now, the sowing and the weeping
Working hard and waiting long;
Afterward, the golden reaping,
Harvest homes and grateful song.

Now, the pruning, sharp, unsparing,
Scattering blossom, bleeding shoot;
Afterward, the plenteous bearing
Of the Master's pleasant fruit.

Now, the long and toilsome duty,
Stone by stone to carve and bring;
Afterward the perfect beauty
Of the palace of the King.

Now, the turning and the tension,
Wailing minors, discord strong;
Afterward, the grand ascension
Of the hallelujah song.

Now, the spirit conflict-riven,
Wounded heart, unequal strife;
Afterward, the triumph given,
And the victor's shout of life.

Now, the trusting strange and lowly,
Unexplained and tedious now;
Afterward, the service holy,
And the Master's "Enter thou!"

The Lost House of Israel.

To the Editor of the Times, St. Thomas, Ont.

SIR,—In your issue of the 22d inst., I noticed an article on "The Lost House of Israel." I was very glad to see the subject thus brought before the numerous readers of your valuable paper, for I do not hesitate to say that the theory of the identification of the British nation, or the Anglo-Saxon race, with the Ten Lost Tribes of Israel, is an all-important subject which should command itself to every patriotic mind, as well as to every thoughtful student of God's Word of Truth. Mr. Hine says that the people who first colonized America from England were undoubtedly the tribe of Manasseh. According to the prophetic words of Jacob, Genesis xlviii. 19, "He also shall become a people" (or nation), he also "shall be great." "But truly his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations." And again, Deut xxxiii. 17, "His glory is like the firstling of a bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them shall he push the people together to the ends of the earth; and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and the thousands of Manasseh." This seems very probable, for that small colony has become a great nation. But Ephraim, as representing England, has become a multitude of nations, and the pushing propensities of both people are alike driving the aborigines to the ends of the earth.

Mr. Hine has not merely a speculative mind, giving his leisure time to the study of this subject. He has given his whole life to the work, and has lectured on the subject in most of the large cities and towns in England to large audiences, challenging all the talent and learning of our Universities to disprove this theory. They have tried their utmost and failed. Not only has Mr. Hine been successful as a lecturer on the subject, but also as a journalist, being editor of a monthly magazine and a weekly journal, both of which are ably conducted. In this work he is aided by an efficient staff of contributors, among whom I may mention Revs. F. R. A. Glover, M. A.; I. G. Tipper, M. A.; Hibbert Newton, B. A.; I. K. Verdon; R. Polwheel, Vicar of Avenbury; Canon Titcomb, Vicar of Southwark, London; A. F. Grimaldi, editor of the Standard of Israel. All these, besides other contributors to the magazine, have written works on the identification. Among the lay contributors to these works are men occupying prominent positions in the scientific and literary world, such as Prof. Piazzi Smyth, Astronomer Royal, Scotland; Stacy Grimaldi, F. S. A.; Prothroe Smith, M. D.; Col. Gawler, Keeper of the Crown Jewels; W. Carpenter, E. W. Bird, John Wilson, author of "Our Israelitish Origin," "Title Deeds to the Holy Land," "The Mission of Elijah," &c.; W. Cockburn Muir, F. G. S.; Major R. W. Nickle; L. O. Groom Napier, R. N.; Commander Roberts, R. N.; Capt. Palmer, R. N.; Robt. Mempriss, author of "The Gospel Treasury," and "The Gospel Harmony." So we see that the theory is not confined to Edward Hine. Those above mentioned are only a few of the most prominent writers on the subject, many more might be named—thousands are rejoicing in the light it throws on the sacred pages of God's Word of Truth; and in the grand future it opens up to us as a people destined to universal Empire. That this is our future is obvious. We possess already one-third of the habitable globe. We sway the sceptre over one-fourth of the inhabitants, possessing the gates of our enemies, assuming the dictatorship of the world. And to this high position we have attained in our blindness—ignorant of our ancestry; in ignorance of the designs of God in us, through us, and by us. Whilst men with their mighty intellects but darkened minds, have been questioning and disputing the inspiration of God's Word of Truth as given by the mouth of all his prophets since the world began, God who inspired the prophets to write, has been working out in the minutest detail, in our national history, all they gave utterance to. A Bishop Colenso may write to prove that the Pentateuch is not inspired, but the God of Abraham, of Isaac and of Jacob, who appeared to Moses in the burning bush at Horeb and amid the thunders of Sinai, giving his law to our forefathers, has, in our national history, fulfilled his promise made in that unconditional covenant to Abraham as recorded in Genesis xxii. 17 and 5, "As for me, behold my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be a father of many nations, and I will make thee exceeding fruitful and I will make nations of thee." We know that this was not realized while his descendants the Israelites were in Palestine. But according to Ezekiel xx. 37, after they had sinned and been thrust out of their land and scattered among the nations, disinherited, cast out, punished for their sins, God would bring them into the wilderness, plead with them, and fulfill in them the promises made to them in the Covenant. God has fulfilled his word in us and to us. He brought our Scythian forefathers into the place appointed—the Isles of the West. He has been pleading with us by the Gospel, and by it has brought us into the bond of the Covenant as Sons of God—Hosea i. 10. He has fulfilled his promise in making us exceeding fruitful, thus fulfilling the many promises of God's Word: "The number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which can neither be measured nor numbered;" "I will sow her unto me in the earth;" "They that come of Jacob shall take root, Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the earth with fruit." These prophecies have been fulfilled in us in a remarkable manner during the first three quarters of the present century. At the commencement of that time we were only about thirty millions, all told, in all parts of the globe. Now we are almost ninety millions strong. Compare this with a statement of the Economiste Francaise, written by an eminent French statistician. At the rate they have increased during the same period, it would take the French 354 years to double their population. And yet France and England are near neighbors, and are about as similar countries as can be found anywhere. They run into the same latitudes. They share the same geographical and commercial advantages [illegible] in climate and soil); they have much that is common in their history; and many other elements are apparently alike. Yet France decreases while England increases in fecundity. Why is this? Just because God is fulfilling his promise to our father Abraham.

According to an article which appeared in the London Times of July 6, 1876, the British or Anglo-Saxons, are the most increasing people in the world, filling continents, fringing the oceans, and making the whole world their home, thus fulfilling the Word of God to the ten tribes after they were in exile: "I will preserve thee and give thee for a covenant of the people to establish the earth." "Thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left, and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited." To Jacob God said: "Thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth; thou shalt spread abroad to the west, (to Britain and America), and to the east (to India and China), to the north (to the Hudson Bay Territory and Arctic circles), and to the south (to Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, and the South and West African settlements)," Gen. xxviii. 14. To prove the identity of the British or Anglo-Saxon with the Ten Tribes, there must be three distinguishing marks. If we have them there can be no mistake in the identity, for God declares with an oath that he will not give his glory to another, for the gifts and callings of God are without repentance, for he is infinitely wise and unchangeable in purpose. The first mark is that we must be a multitudinous race, increasing and filling the earth; not known as Israel, but as sons of the Living God, and the messengers and witnesses for God. The second mark is that we must be high above all nations in influence, in wealth, and power. The third is that we must have the sign of God, and that sign is the observance of the Sabbath. We maintain that we have these marks, and claim the inheritance, and before we give up this claim our opponents must prove and bring forward another people that have these marks in a higher degree than we have.

Yours, in behalf of the truth,

JOSEPH BRENT.

Anglo-Israel.

The Rev. W. H. Poole, of Toronto, lectured Tuesday in the City Hall at London, Ont., on "The Israelitish Origin of the English Nation." Judging by the large audience, this subject must be becoming popular. The Rev. Canon Innes occupied the chair, and was surrounded by several clergymen and others. A few verses of a familiar hymn were sung, and the Rev. Dr. Cooper led in prayer.

The Rev. Mr. Poole is a tall and portly gentleman, possessed of an excellent voice, and great rapidity of utterance. It is impossible to report in full the address of nearly two hours, so we must content ourselves with giving the outlines of the argument. The lecturer remarked that "numerous theories had been framed to show that the tribes which are popularly supposed to have been lost possess a present-day existence. The Nestorians, the North American Indians, the tribes of Afghanistan, and others have been declared their legitimate descendants. Those who see in them the Saxons of to-day have the best of it." The scriptural distinction we carefully pointed out between "the House of Judah" and "the house of Israel." "If 500 Gentile skulls were placed on view, and one Jewish skull among them, the ethnologist would easily discern that of the Jew. The Jews were to be known by the show of their countenance, their physiognomy and phrenology, and to the present they remain among the nations as a fulfillment of Scripture prediction." The captivity of Israel was then carefully traced, being completed by Shalmeneser's carrying them away into Media after they had enjoyed a separate existence of 254 years. "This captivity had been foretold, and reasons assigned by the prophets. They had had their Elijah and Elisha, but they chose the worship of Baal; and for this they were carried away, and temporarily lost." The lecturer then asserted that "not till the student has swept away the rubbish of preconceived notions, and the ideas of professional book-makers, and come right back to God's word, could he expect to understand the subject." Parallel columns were then drawn to show the distinction between the two houses, and the lecturer said: "For 2850 years has God kept these people apart; let not the Bible student confound them. History proves that the Jews have been persecuted as it [illegible]; if the predictions of persecution have been fulfilled, why should not the predictions of blessing to Israel be also true?' (A voice—"We would like to see you prove it.") Authorities were quoted to prove the existence of Israel. "Christ said, 'I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the House of Israel.' The apostles were commanded to go to these. The cities to the south of Judea had no share in their ministry; they went north and west to find the lost sheep. The Epistle of James and also of Peter were to these people. Paul, in Romans, refers to them frequently. A celebrated Jewish doctor in Amsterdam wrote, 'If the ten tribes have not flown into the air, or been drowned in the deep, they must be in the north-west of Europe.'" Referring to Palestine, the lecturer proceeded: "For 3,000 years the Lord has kept this land, having declared beforehand it should not be sold. There it lies, between three continents, and yet in these days of speculation it is not in the market. Twenty-seven times has Jerusalem been captured, but no one has owned it, or claims it now. Does it not seem as if God is keeping it for his peculiar people to return it to?"

The origin of the Saxon people was next traced. "The name was to come from God. In one of the lesser prophets Israel was called 'Sons of Isaac.' Paul said, 'In Isaac shall thy seed be called.'" By an ingenious piece of word-changing, the term "Saxons" was evolved by the speaker from "Isaac," and its meaning was asserted to be "Sons of Isaac." Ancient authors, such as Strabo, Herodotus, Pliny, &c., were quoted, showing that the Saxons were from a great Scythian tribe east of the Caspian, just where Israel was led captive. "In 516, B. C., Darius Hystaspes inscribed on a stone slab that the Caucasians had revolted from him." This stone has been found, and corroborates the histories of the time. The sections of land apportioned to the sons of Noah were next pointed out, and the passages alluding to "Tarshish" examined. Tarshish was understood as meaning Britain. "The command had been 'Pass as a river through the land, O daughter of Tarshish.' How does a river pass? As if it meant it. And so as a river the Saxons had crossed Europe to the western isles. It is a curious sidelight on Jonah's history that when fleeing from Nineveh, he thought to get as far away as possible, so he set out in a ship for Tarshish, that is, England." The history of the tribe of Dan was next sketched, and some interesting probabilities started. "Dan was a maritime tribe, his possession was on the sea-coast. Their propensity was ship-building and sailing. In their westward voyages they reached the west coast of Ireland, and founded a colony called 'the Danes.'" Dr. Smith in his history of Greece asserts the Danaans were very brave. The name of Dan may be found all along southern Europe, as in Danube, Don, &c. The Irish had a 'Dan' in every house down to Dan O'Connell, daughter and applause. This little gave the and its greatness at the time of which Moore writes in his poem on 'The Harp which hung in Tara's Halls.' Rain-worship prevailed in land, as evinced in fire round towers and many other remains. But one [illegible], a daughter of Zedekiah, was wed to the Irish ruler on condition of the [illegible] tion of Baal-worship. Adam Clarke asserts, 'Ireland never got her religion from Rome, but from the East; many customs I have noticed being Asiatic in their character.'" The lecturer alluded lastly to the corroboration between the promises spoken of Israel in the Word, and the character of the English people. Some of these were very forcible. "Israel was to have large colonies. England only has them. Spain not even a good step-mother, let alone a mother of nations. Italy—where popes and cardinals dress up like old grandmothers—(laughter) is not a good mother. England has fifty-four young nations which have sprung from her. Israel was to be the first naval power. English tonnage has more than all other nations put together. Israel was to be invincible; England is. Israel was to possess the gates of the enemies. England does—the Hellespont, Suez, Gibraltar, Sydney, Quebec, &c. Israel was to sin by burying the carcasses of the kings in God's houses. England does so, as in the case of Westminister Abbey. Israel was to be a Sabbath-keeping nation. The English alone have laws governing the observance of the Sabbath." The lecturer drew many more analogies, similarly forcible; and after an allusion to the Anglican Church weekly praying for Israel's blessing, though they knew it not, and quoting the words of Wesley:

"The Sheep of Israel's fold
In England's pastures feed,"

he resumed his seat amid loud applause. A vote of thanks, moved by the Rev. Mr. Gemley and seconded by Col. Walker, was unanimously carried and tendered Mr. Poole, who briefly acknowled it by saying, "If you're satisfied, I'm gratified." The audience then retired to do battle with the elements. —Western Advertiser.

Sententious Paragraphs.

The most beautiful sight to behold is to see a man and wife living in harmony and love, each trying to add to each other's happiness, both striving to refine themselves through intellectual advancement, leading in everything an exemplary life. Such a couple bring up children who become the pillars of society, who are in fact God's representatives on earth.

Too many embrace religion from the same motives that they take a companion in wedlock, not from true love of the person, but because of a large dowry.

Make use of time if thou lovest eternity; know that yesterday can not be recalled; to-morrow cannot be assured; to-day is only thine, which if thou procrastinate thou losest; which lost is lost forever; one to-day is worth two to-morrows.

To be despondent over failure is to give up the fair chances of life. Be cheerful and work, work with a good will, even if the heart is broken and the eyes are filling with bitter, disappointed tears! Work, hard work, is the only salvation for disappointed hopes.

Napoleon, the greatest of modern heroes, said "Impossible" is a word to be found only in the vocabulary of fools. When told the Alps were in his way, "There shall be no Alps," he replied, and the road across the Simplon was the result.

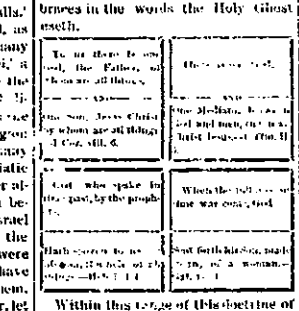
Some sons who happen to have a father who through his talents and industry made a mark in the world, now pride themselves on their birth, while they themselves do nothing to add to the lustre of the honored name they bear.

Pascal has said somewhere that the more mind man has, the more he finds original people. It is your commonplace person who sees no difference between one man and another.

Although men are accused for not knowing their weakness, yet perhaps as few know their own strength. It is in men as in soils, where sometimes there is a vein of gold which the owner knows not of.

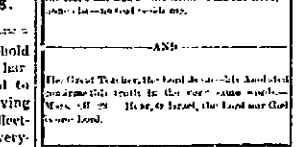
The Divinity of Christ.

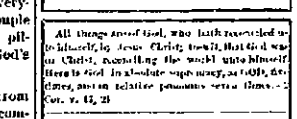
In correspondence with a dear friend, I was reminded that I embraced the lowest side of the circle of revealed truth, on this vital doctrine. There it took this to be, which I consider for the foundation. Again as if to carry the voice of this misunderstanding of doctrine, I am told the danger of taking the lower side. I accept the caution, but must not be fearful and unbelieving as to the most positive and plain assertions of God; of Jesus; and of the Holy Ghost through his inspired [illegible]. Let us then take in the circle, and observe what it embraces in the words the Holy Ghost useth.



Within this range of this doctrine of Christ, there are at least a thousand patriarchal, prophetic and apostolic testimonies that confirm and establish it absolutely. God the father, Jesus the Son of the Father, in truth and love, and the Holy Ghost belong to this circle. But no veiled aspect of the Son can be made to fill it. No! No!

The Holy Ghost through St. Paul gives the order of headship at several stages of being. The woman is not head to herself or does not fill the circle of humanity, for her head is the man. The man has not the headship of man in himself (as now constituted under and from the fallen Adam) for his head is Christ!! Thence, on this same line of fact and Scripture statement, we mount by faith to the loftiest and all comprehending headship,—The headship of Christ is God!!! This range of fact and revelation make out this upper and lower side of the circle of truth at its several stages essential to its completion,—The head of Christ is God!!! 1 John i. 1-3; v. 5, 13. With this all nature agrees; for no created body is complete without its head. Nay, the most fundamental and all embracing assertions of Holy Scripture make the Fatherhood and Son; ship correlative, yet absolutely distinctive terms.—The head of Christ is God!! Amen.





There is no other such sweep of inspired statement to break the force of this! Try it who may.

"When all things shall be subdued unto Him, (God) then shall the son also Himself be subject unto Him (God) who put all things under Him, that God may be all in all" 1 Cor. xv. 28. Then all things will appear as they are of God. "For of Him and through him and to Him are all things!" Rom. xi. 33-36.

The mystery—the doubt and darkness and indecision, and confusion, that belong to this doctrine belong to Babylon. Rev. xviii. From Rome to the Rocky mount ins, mystery reigns, but "Grace reigns through the righteousness of faith unto Eternal Life by Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. v. 21; Eph. ii. 6-8. Father, Son and Holy Ghost admit of no accretions from fallen humanity.

If this be at all, it is always so; for God is unchangeable! See Mal. iii. 6. No human view of this subject has the least claim on our faith. With the Word of God we are held to faith in it alone. The falling away apostasy—the apostasy or departure from the faith—the awful picture of the last times of this age—by all the apostles, (2 Thess. i; ii; 1 Tim. iv. 1-3; 2 Tim. iv. 1-4; 2 Pet. ii; Jude v. 16; Rev. xii. to xix.) are all verified by the existing facts. Surely all creature trust is in vain and like to cut and cut idolatry, (Isa. xxx. 1-3; Jer. xvii. 5-8;) all which perish with the using. True, those who will have it so, plead plausibly; but only as did the poor Jews—God's ancient people—"on whom wrath came to the end." 1 Thess. ii. 14-16; John viii. 21-24.

The spirit of truth operates in the sphere of the Word; not of any sect. But into this I'll not now enter. Please read once sweet text, Rom. xv. 30, as the heart-felt appeal of your loving friend,

The Infidel's Hope.

We recently saw in the Intercepter an obituary notice of a man eighty-eight years of age, who had been for sixty-five years an infidel. "He retained the use of his faculties to the last, and the day before his death a liberal friend was conversing with him, and asked him if he had changed his opinions in view of the near approach of death. He produced a slip of paper upon which was written the fourth verse of the one hundred and forty-sixth Psalm, and stated that that expressed his views, and he had copied it off himself. 'His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish.'"

This, then, was his hope—after sixty-five years of unbelief. He was bowed down by the weight of long years spent in blaspheming God and sneering at God's word. His race was nearly run, and death stood at the door. No hope lights up the portals of the tomb, and he has only "A certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries." In this hour of terrible need he remembers the old Book,—at which he has so often sneered. His philosophy fails; his "liberal" friends cannot help him. Nowhere else in the universe can consolation be found, and he reaches out his trembling hand at last—towards the Bible! He finds a declaration that the dead are unconscious, and he hangs to it as his only hope. He copies it—slowly and laboriously, for the hand is feeble and the eye is dim—but it is his only hope; and he copies it patiently—the words of the Book—for comfort in his dying hour. It is placed near him or under his pillow, so that when his reasoning fails, he may be comforted with the declaration that when he returns to the earth his thoughts shall perish. Surely there is comfort in this, for his "thoughts" have tortured him in many a dark hour, and he looks forward to the sleep of death as a time when conscience may at last be still. He hopes only for a relief from the thoughts that will perish, and the conscience that will cease its upbraidings.

He does not read the next verse, or if he does it has no hope for him. It is the exultant exclamation—"Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help;" but the dying sceptic has no anchor here, no "hope in the Lord his God." The fondest dream that he dares to cherish is that he may be for ever hidden in the ground—that he may never waken to meet the eye of the Judge. His highest ambition is the total loss of life and principles. His strongest consolation is a vision of the cold waters of oblivion. His brightest hope is eternal death.

And this is the substitute that Infidelity offers for the Christian religion! It offers us despair instead of hope. It offers us misery instead of happiness; it offers us death, instead of life.

But "Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God." These words point triumphantly to life beyond the grave—to a rescue from the bonds of death, and deliverance for his captives. It lights with glory even the portals of the tomb, for the God of Jacob is a tower of strength, and he that hath him for his help is safe, not only in the quiet sleep where he resteth in hope, but safe in that glad morning when the call of the King shall ring through the valleys of earth, and wake the sleeping dead—safe when the jewels are gathered from land and sea to gleam in the crown of the King—safe when the reign of death is forever past, and the river of life gushes from beneath the throne—safe when the pearly gates of the city are opened and the children of the King pass through with crowns of everlasting joy upon their heads. LIZZIE A. REED.

A Rome dispatch has the following: "The retirement of Bismarck, if only temporary, is looked upon by the Vatican as an opportune moment for resuming the negotiations with Germany with a view to resuming the relations between the church and state, and stopping the antagonism of the last few years. Fanfaula states that the representatives of the foreign powers accredited to the holy see have been informed by their governments that in view of possible events in Rome they can not leave during the coming summer."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Signs of the Times.

The "eastern question" as it is termed, is developing steadily and surely that situation that must obtain before the advent. Events are tending in the right direction,—and show to the Scripturally wise that the day of release is at hand. In your paper I see occasionally extracts from various Orthodox writers on prophecy, who, though not very definite and clear on any Scriptural topic, are, nevertheless, in their speculations concerning the advent, symptomatic of the times. This class of writers treat all Bible subjects alike,—that is, resolve everything into an opinion, overshadowed with doubt and misgiving. In fact, this is the case with many who ought to be more confident, and who treat even the first principles of the gospel with a laxity that is unpardonable. 'Tis true this is "no time for jangling," but it is very necessary that the truth as a whole, should be unequivocally stated, and enforced. It is not the form of godliness only that is wanted, but the power thereof. It is not whether a man is a respectable son of Adam, moral and pious after the fashion of the world, making plausible speeches and a fair show in the flesh; but whether he be indoctrinated with Divine ideas attested by the Word of God. Servants of God are witnesses for the truth, and it is their duty to give testimony faithfully, speaking the word in love,—not charitably in the popular sense of quoting everything that is doctrinally distasteful to the "old man" of the flesh, but affectionately contending firmly for the truth, and obeying it conscientiously in the fear of God. Pardon me for this digression. I call attention only to that doctrinal laxity which is excused under the title of liberality and spurious charity. We sometimes hear persons deplore "moral laxity," who seem but to understand, that looseness in morals, is the fruit of looseness in doctrine. Man who cast the Word of God behind them in any of its doctrinal points, will most assuredly not scruple to deny it practically whenever opportunity offers them scope. This state of things is a sign of the times, and indicates, that while events in the east show that the day of the Lord hastens and the Judge is at the door, that some are saying, not with their tongues, but "in their hearts," my Lord delayeth his coming. That is, they manifest an indifference to the Word, though apparently active in proselyting. They are apparently zealous, but still not in earnest,—active, but not valiant,—believing professedly, but not courageous. They approach the truth, but feebly,—they speak it apparently,—but in a doubting and equivocating manner. They think to make the truth palatable to the flesh, but the effect is a vain one. The natural man does not like the wholesome restraint imposed by the truth, and will never feel that it is good to be governed by the teachings of the Spirit, until he surrenders all.

But of this I have said enough, more than I wish it was necessary to say. 'Tis not pleasant to be in a complaining mood, and gladly would I refrain from noticing this feature of the situation if the utterances of some did not give occasion. Come with me to the east, and behold the effects of the sixth vial. For upwards of thirty years its drying up influence has been visible to those who have been watching and waiting for the end. It is, I believe, a settled question, that the symbolical Euphrates represents the Ottoman Empire. The Turkoman tribes under Togrel Beg, were the overflowing of the Euphratean waters—peoples. These waters must be dried up—that is, they must evaporate politically until that power in its abominating desolation no longer overshadows the Holy Land. Now, that is just what is meant by the drying up of the Euphrates; and, moreover, that is what the events of the day show us, is being surely done. The Holy Land must come to the front in connection with the Jews, God's ancient people. The Ottoman Empire would occupy no very prominent place in prophecy, were it not for the relation that it sustains to the Land and people, upon whom the name of Deity is called. The time has come for God to "favor Zion" and to remember his cast off people, and to reward his servants, who have suffered and died for his truth, many of them, and the way must now be prepared. The world understands it not, but Christ's servants do understand. They know from the prophetic word, that the time for Christ and his brethren to rule the world is at hand, even at the door, and that the drying up of the Euphratean waters means that events in the east will eventuate in the return of many Jews to the land of their fathers and in their improving that country, and making it, to some considerable extent, fruitful and plenteous in its products, and the high road of commerce between Europe and Asia.

We must not permit our eyes to be diverted from the land Deity promised Abraham and his seed, if we would be wise in the things pertaining to the time of the end. The condition of that land must be improved, Jerusalem and her surroundings must arise and shake off the dust and darkness of ages, and the thraldom of Mohammedan superstition and misrule. The Dormant patriotism of the Jews, as a people, must be aroused and quickened into active and vigorous efforts to reclaim the land of their fathers from the long dreary night of desolation. Indeed, even now do we behold these things coming to pass. God is causing these things to transpire before our own eyes. Are they marvellous, and do they excite our wonder? In a year or two more, we shall see more wonderful things than have yet been seen. Already events have set in and indicate what is coming. The Montefiore testimonial enterprise instituted for the purpose of honoring the great Jewish philanthropist, but by him made to do a great work towards improving the condition of poor Jews in the Holy Land. This event itself tends to show the direction in which the mind of the Jew is being providentially turned. They are turning their faces toward Zion, and rising to hail with gladness Jerusalem's release. The day of deliverance is dawning, and Israel must assume a place among the nations, which they themselves can hardly believe.

As confirmatory of my statements I give the following quotation from the Jewish Chronicle, published in England: "At a time when the existence of the Ottoman Empire trembles in the balance, and politicians begin to speculate on the possible heirs of the Ottoman dominions, the idea naturally suggests itself that there exist claimants to a portion of the succession whose right cannot be disputed. The subject has been only very lately fully discussed in these columns. We need not travel over the same ground again. Whatever the aspirations of Orthodox Jews may be—and we do not deny our sympathy with them—it is quite clear while the obstacles pointed out are in the way, this desideratum cannot be accomplished. But there is another desideratum next to it in importance, which is quite realizable, and in which the numerous friends of the dominant faith, who long to witness this achievement, and in whose minds it is associated with some of the holiest cravings, could lend us a helping hand. It is not in the power of the Jews to bring about their restoration; but it is in the power of individuals among them to go there to purchase land, to form settlements, and to organize communities that shall obey the law of Moses in those hundreds of particulars which cannot be observed, beyond the confines of the Holy Land. This process can only be gradual; but it requires means. An agency for promoting the material welfare of such settlers is already in existence. A fund is being collected in the name of the Montefiore Testimonial Fund, and administered by an influential and practical committee in our metropolis. Let those Gentile friends who long to see Israel's restoration, come forward. Let those among them who wish to see this consummation, lend a helping hand."

Thus it will be seen that the Jews are on the alert for their share of the sick man's estate. The promised land rightfully belongs to them, and it is an auspicious sign of the times, to see the course of events so shaping things, that what heretofore has been regarded only as a dream, is about to become a living reality. Recently a Jewish conference was held in Paris, in which representatives, it is said, from all nations were present. They discussed the future of Palestine, and the present opportunity offered of securing the possession of that land to the Jew. They did not hesitate to affirm, that, with the downfall of the Ottoman Empire, they, as a people, should insist on the possession of their rightful inheritance. The reader will perceive that something more is to come out of the eastern question, than the redress of oppressed Christians. Russia pleads the cause of the Greek Christians and the Sclavic race. But God is working out providentially the way for the "kings out of a sun's rising."

The drying up of the apocalyptical Euphrates being taken to signify the removal of the Ottoman Power, or, in other words, the cessation of Turkish rule, it follows, as a necessity, that the prophetic situation of the end is steadily assuming form, and the Lord's coming at hand.

As to the immediate future, I can only say that the progress of events in the east will doubtless more and more unfold, and reveal the hand of Deity in bringing about a condition of things in Palestine that fulfill the word of Ezek. xxxviii. and Dan. xii. The eastern question during the past three months has passed through the conference phase, and still is unsettled. It has now come up in a different form, and the Great Powers have signed a protocol, which they purpose to press on the Turkish government, asking, in substance, what was proposed in the conference, and which the Turks rejected defiantly. But diplomacy must have its day. Russia seeks to alienate England from Turkey, and she has almost accomplished her end. But there is no concealing the truth that the real parties to the struggle are the Bear and the Lion,—Russia and England. These two powers will yet battle for Empire and the world's dominion. The land that God says is mine, and shall not be sold forever, will constitute the battle ground, where their armies will assemble for mortal combat.

But I do not believe the time is fully come yet for the struggle. England will not go to war for Turkey, but in case war is declared by Russia, will occupy Egypt and Syria, and leave the Ottoman Empire to its fate. Diplomacy may establish a temporary peace,—but to say settle the question, is more than diplomacy can do. The "eastern question" and the "Roman question" will never be settled until it is done by the Lord "mighty in battle." His presence and almighty power is only adequate to eradicate the papal system from Europe, and determine the question of the world's commerce and dominion. His purpose is to make Israel the head of nations, and the renowned people of the world. He has chosen those whom he designs to exalt to the rulership and royalty of his kingdom, and his purpose is to bring the masses of mankind under their tutorship and authority. This cannot be done while the world rulers are in the ascendency,—they must first be taken out of the way, and the civil and ecclesiastical systems of their creation must be destroyed. Before the crisis comes, the Papal question will come to the surface again, and the "woman now divorced and widowed and in mourning," must take her seat on the "beast, and say I am no widow and shall see no sorrow." The coming year will be a remarkable one,—great and startling events are before us. "Blessed is he that watcheth." G. MAYER.

Hebrew Poetry.

The art of the Hebrew is true art to those who can rise to the level of his passion. But religious conviction is supreme where it exists at all. And the aesthetic necessity that all things in heaven and earth shall bend to God's purpose of salvation revealed to the poet's faith, is also the ethical necessity on which the whole religious life depends. That the things which are impossible with men are possible with God is the first axiom of a religion that shall rise with triumphant assurance over all the powers of evil and all the woes of life. To assert with unwavering confidence the victories of spiritual certainties over all empirical contradiction, to vanquish earthly fear in the assurance of transcendental fellowship with God, to lay down for all ages the pattern of a faith which endures as seeing him who is invisible—such is the great work for which the poetic genius of the Hebrews was consecrated by the providence and inspiration of the Most High. How nobly this work was served by that Hebrew intensity which carries one supreme conviction with irresistible poetic fire through all things in heaven or earth that rise up against it, may be read alike in the personal utterances of the Psalter and in the Messianic hopes of the prophets. Thus it was that the Psalmist, surrounded on all sides by the contradiction of sinners, bowed with sickness and grief, oppressed by the consciousness of guilt, was yet able so to cling to the unfailing certainty of his living fellowship with a redeeming God, that danger, and sickness, and sin itself, were left behind, and he pressed forward beyond the fear of death, to the assurance of immortality at God's right hand. Thus it was that the prophets gazing on the certainty of Jehovah's righteousness and grace saw the creation, now stained with sin and blasted by the strokes of divine indignation, transformed in new perfection and holy loveliness, and instinct in all its parts with a sweet intelligence, so that from voice to voice of things now deemed inanimate, the prayer of man goes up to God and the answer of God descends on man.—British Quarterly Review.

Jephthah's Vow: The Sacred Spring.

With no purpose to discuss or settle the question of Jephthah's rash vow or the fate of his daughter, as related in the eleventh chapter of Judges, but simply to show that there is no improbability in such a vow having been made, and that it may have been carried out to the letter—though we are inclined to believe it was not—we give below, what will probably be interesting (possibly new) to some, an account of what is known to readers of the classics as the Ver Sacrum, or Sacred Spring. Vows have been made by individuals in all ages, from the time of Jacob to the present day, in view of some imminent peril or prospective advantage. But the "Sacred Spring" was a national custom among the early inhabitants of Italy, especially the Sabines, of vowing to their deities, in times of great danger and distress, everything born in the next spring, from the calends (1st) of March to the calends of May, if the danger or calamity under which they labored was removed. At first this vow included men, cattle, and domestic animals, and there is hardly a doubt but that these were sacrificed. But in later times it was thought cruel to sacrifice so many infants, and the expedient was adopted of allowing these to grow up, and in their twentieth or twenty-first year to drive them, with their faces covered, across the borders of their native land, to perish or survive, as the case might be. Two instances of a Ver Sacrum vowed by the Romans are mentioned by Livy,—one after the battle of Trasimenus, and the other at the close of the second Punic war. In these, however, only cattle were included; human beings were not named as among the things to be offered. The form of the decree can be seen in Livy, lxi. 22; 10.—H. M. B., in Observer.

The Present Turkish Crisis.

Not many years ago there was discovered amid the ruins of Rome, the pillar of Phocas, who conceded the title of "Universal Bishop" to the Pope of Rome, notwithstanding the declaration of Pope Gregory the Great that the assumption of that title a few years before by the Patriarch of Constantinople was a certain proof of his being the forerunner of "Antichrist." The inscription on Phocas' Pillar shows it to have been erected A. D. 608, the same year in which he marked his favor to the Pope by dedicating to him the Pantheon. Upon the year-day theory, the Pope's ecclesiastical and political power was to last for the period of 1,260 years. And certain it is that within two years of Phocas' decree, counting forward from A. D. 610, when Boniface concentrated the Pantheon, we are brought to the year 1870, a notable era in the history of the Papacy, when, happily for the good of mankind, the temporal power was finally overthrown, and the first sprinkling of those tremendous judgments was foreshadowed, which have yet to fall upon that guilty and apostate Church which is described in the word of God: "Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots and Abominations of the Earth."

Luther, in his "Table Talk," makes the remark that "the Pope and Turk both began almost at one time under the Emperor Phocas." This is true so far that, within a few years after the Pope's 1,260 years began by his assumption of the title of Universal Bishop, the Mohammedan 1,260 years may be said to have commenced with the well known era of the Hegira A. D. 622, and which therefore brings us to the year 1881-2, by which time we have reason to expect that its power over Christians will terminate and come to an end. And it is worthy of note that the year 1881, according to some chronologers, synchronizes with the year 6,000 A. M.—or, more correctly speaking, the 6,000th year since the creation of Adam.

The rise of the Mohammedan power appears to be clearly predicted in the ninth chapter of Revelation (in its year-day fulfillment,) which describes more particularly what may be termed the Saracenic woe, and which was to last in its intensity for the period of "five (prophetic) months," or 150 years; from A. D. 622 to 772. It is, however, with the Turkish portion of the predicted woe that we are now more especially concerned, and of which the prophecy in the latter portion of this same chapter gives such minute details as to forbid any reasonable doubt on the subject. That "the great river Euphrates" spoken of in v. 14 refers to the Mohammedan power, seems to be admitted by all. And the 391 years of their conquests of the Turkish territory lasted from 1057 to 1448—the date of their capture of Constantinople. . . .

According to a recent estimate carefully prepared by the Director of the Statistical Office at Belgrade, the population of European Turkey, with its tributary States, amounts to 14,305,000 souls, of which number only 8,559,800 are Musulmans. Thus the Christians out-number their oppressors by about five to two.

Notwithstanding all the boastful and fanatical raging of the Turks, the doom of their empire has been pronounced in the unerring word of God; and all the signs of the times seem to show that her end is drawing nigh. The war which Russia and Austria unitedly waged against Turkey, and which ended in April, 1791—just as the French Revolution commenced, with a treaty very humiliating to the Mohammedan power—proclaimed to the world the incipient deadness of the Turkoman power. The dissolution or conquest of its Empire had become thenceforth only a question of time and of European policy. Within thirty years of that date, the predicted "drying up of the Euphrates" (Rev. xvi. 12) became marked and rapid, or as Lamartine said, in the French chambers upwards of forty years ago, "Turkey is drying up for want of Turks!" It is probable, however, that the duration of the Turkish woe will not finally end until the year 1882, or within six years of the present period, when the 1,260 years—counting from the Hegira—shall have expired.

The following singular prediction is from a Roman Catholic work, in the Augustinian Library at Rome, which claims an antiquity of two centuries, and reads as follows:

"Before the middle of the nineteenth century, schisms will be excited everywhere in Europe, Republics will rise, kings will be put to death, with the nobility and ecclesiastics, and the religious will desert their convents. Famine, pestilence and earthquakes will spread desolation over many cities. Rome will lose her sceptre; the Pope will be made captive by his own people, and the church of God will be placed under tribute and divested of its temporal power. A Prince from the North will overrun Europe with a great army, destroy the Republics and exterminate all rebels. (2) His sword wielded by God, will vigorously defend the Church of Christ, uphold the orthodox faith and subdue Mohammedan power. Then a new Pastor—the final one—will come; and there will be the fulness of peace throughout the world, as it is written: 'The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock. . . . They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord.'" (Isa. lxv. 25.)—Rev. B. W. Savile, in London Christian Herald.

Brevities.

The London Spectator says: "A curious rumor is afloat, for which we do not vouch, that the Porte, in its eagerness for money, has offered to sell the Hereditary Pashalic of the Holy Land to any candidate accepted by the Jews, in return for a loan. The transaction would be one of the most singular in history, but it is not beyond the range of possibility. Palestine needs nothing but irrigation and trees, and though the Jews dislike agriculture, fellaheen sufficient might be attracted from Egypt."

Communications have been exchanged between the Cardinal Secretary of the Pope and the Court of Russia, tending, as many believe, to future friendly relations between the Vatican and the Czar.

The largest fortune amassed during the last twelve centuries, if not in all time, certainly was that of the late Baron Rothschild, of Paris, who left behind him a thousand millions of francs (£40,000,000), a huge, almost incomprehensible total. He was the richest member of a family, all of whose members were rich; but as he left his wealth among them, there may be now a Rothschild worth as much; and if so, beyond doubt he is the wealthiest of living men.

A London Daily News dispatch from Rome says General Garette presented to Cardinal Simeoni an album containing the signatures of over 30,000 volunteers prepared to shed their blood for the temporal power of the Pope.

The New York Graphic's man says the cat is not mentioned in the Bible, though the word "roof" occurs eleven times, "tongs" five times, and "hurl" three times.

When Edhem Pacha, the present Grand Vizier, was a boy, he was sold as a slave to the Turkish statesman Khosrev, who, upon discovering his extraordinary abilities, gave him his liberty and sent him to Paris to be educated. He was born in 1826 at Chio, his parents being Circassian. After remaining at Paris three years his patron induced him to study mining engineering, and for four years he followed this pursuit in France, Germany, and Switzerland. Returning to Constantinople in 1850, he was appointed a captain on the general staff, and ten years later was made an aide-de-camp to the Sultan, subsequently attaining the ranks of General, Chamberlain of the Palace, and member of the Council of State. He has also been minister of Foreign Affairs and Turkish Ambassador to various European courts. His political affiliation is with the young Turkish party.

The Restitution.

E. V. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APR. 25, 1877.

MANUSCRIPT accumulate. We will do all we can for our respected correspondents and for the best interests of the paper.

"BEHOLD, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." So spake the Sweet Singer of Israel. The apostle, however, shows that the grand aim of the gospel teaching is bring all who hear its joyful sound to a "unity of the faith." Men are to be instructed and brought to a comprehension of the truth as it is in Jesus. Let us be exceedingly careful about compromising the truth. We can be kind and conciliating without abandoning either the faith or hope of the gospel. In fact, multitudes are anxious to know the truth. For ourself we are becoming very definite in our exhibitions of God's holy word as we preach it in different localities.

WE shall most probably be compelled to suspend the publication of the RESTITUTION for one or two weeks. For some reason quite a number are falling behind, and, of necessity, we must revise our mailing list. The prosperity of the paper in the future will depend upon the prompt payment on the part of its patrons, and on keeping out of debt, on the part of its conductors. If all dus the office from subscriptions were paid up there would be no embarrassment. Sad experience has taught the lesson that but a small portion of past dues to newspapers are ever realized. We must guard against two things the present year in order to give an uninterrmitting weekly issue of the paper hereafter, which are, incurring a load of indebtedness, and sending the paper to hundreds that will not pay. Hence we must keep our mailing list revised strictly up to paying subscribers. We must have some few intermission, probably during the current year, but hope they may be few and far between. We will make all the sacrifice we can for the paper's prosperity. The times are ominous, and it ought to go abroad every week.

THERE is no break in the dark war cloud that has gathered over the Orient. Everything does on the part of Russia has the appearance of adroit manœuvering to gain time and be better prepared for the impending conflict. It is notable, however, that the two powers that have marshalled their hosts to submit unsettled questions to the arbitrament of arms, seem alike to have an instinctive dread of engaging in the contest. It is furthermore notable that the impression is very general in the best informed cabinets and councils that the on-coming strife will result in uncommon and extraordinary issues. This dread in the parties most intimately concerned, and this impression in the minds of those whose interest is more remote, is not without foundation. It is not the evening of life that gives us the "mystical lore," but the sure word of prophecy that enables us to say that if the coming war brings wo to the vanquished, it will bring wo, wo, to the vanquisher. However this war may commence, in whatever manner it may progress, whatever may be its intermissions, and however long it may continue, its final battles will take place on the mountains of Israel. The Monarch of the future is not the Czar of all the Russias. The Muscovite and the Moslem are only the advance contestants in the battle of the great day of God Almighty which will result in giving the sceptre of the empire of earth to the Heavenly Heir of David's throne. Let us watch and keep our garments unspotted from the world. This dispensation nears its close, and the fashion of the world, as it now is, will soon pass away. Would that we had the means to send out our paper every week to keep the great themes of prophecy continually before our readers. May the Lord help us all to be faithful, and may we do our life-work well.

The Very Latest.

LONDON, April 24.

A St. Petersburgh telegram says the first dragoman of the Russian Embassy will remain at Constantinople until Wednesday to deliver the declaration of war which will be delivered in St. Petersburgh to the Turkish Charge de Affairs simultaneously with the publication of the Imperial manifesto.

The God of "the true, the good, and the beautiful" is painting everything that grows in this part of the earth in colors beyond the power of man to transfer to canvas. Flowers, grass, tree, sky—in fact everything that comes from his created hand, attest the faultless taste, the wonderful wisdom of him who reigns on high.

Exegetical.

Observations on Matt. x. 23.

But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another: for verily I say unto you, ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of Man be come.

This text is a part of our Lord's charge to His twelve Apostles, on the occasion of their ordination to the apostolic office. It is a favorite passage of the opponents of premillenarianism, who quote it as a proof that the coming of Christ, so often predicted in other passages of the New Testament, meant something that was to occur in the days of the apostles.

Some suppose it to mean that, before the apostles should complete their earthly career, Jerusalem would be destroyed. Some, that while the apostles yet lived, Christ would be raised from the dead, and establish his spiritual kingdom. Dr. J. Addison Alexander says of this text: "Until the Son of Man be come, an indefinite expression, meaning sometimes more and sometimes less, but here equivalent to saying: 'till the object of your mission be accomplished.'"

In order to teach us what our Lord really meant in this particular case, the Holy Spirit has given us a parallel passage in Luke x. 1. "After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face, into every city and place whither he himself would come." No one can doubt what the coming of the Lord means. They were to go before Him, and prepare the people to receive and welcome Him at His actual personal coming. Making Capernaum His head quarters, our Lord made itinerary excursions in different directions through the cities and villages of Galilee, returning frequently to the house of Simon and Andrew, at Capernaum. At first He sent His apostles to prepare the people for His reception. "These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. And as ye go, preach saying, The Kingdom of heaven is at hand."

As His fame spread, and the labor became too great for the twelve, He said: "The harvest truly is great but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest." And he appointed the seventy to perform this preliminary duty and to prepare the way for the great Teacher.

The instructions to the twelve and to the seventy, are extremely similar and, in many respects, identical, as will be seen by the following parallel passages. May we not reasonably conclude that the coming of Christ referred to in connection with each discourse is the same, viz., an actual personal visitation, which was to follow that of His disciples thus sent, to prepare the way for Him.

Note the coincidence of these extracts from the two discourses:

Charge to the Apostles.	Charge to the Seventy.
Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves.	Go your ways: behold I send you forth as lambs among wolves.
Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses, nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves.	Carry neither purse nor scrip, nor shoes.
And when ye come into a house, salute it. And if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it; but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you.	And into whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be to this house. And if the son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon it: if not it shall turn to you again.
And into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, enquire who in it is worthy; and there abide until ye go thence.	And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give: for the laborer is worthy of his hire. Go not from house to house.
As ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, cast out devils.	Heal the sick that are therein, and say unto them, The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.
And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house, or city, shake off the dust of your feet.	But into whatsoever city ye enter and they receive you not, go your ways out into the streets of the same and say, Even the very dust of your city, which cleaveth on us, we do wipe off against you.
Verily I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for that city.	But I say unto you, that it shall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom than for that city.

Dr. Joseph Addison Alexander, in his commentary on the gospel of Matthew, his last work, alludes to the interpretation I have given the the following language:

"There is another explanation of this clause, which refers it to Christ's following the twelve in their first mission, as he did the seventy. (Luke x. 1.) The meaning then is, that before they had fulfilled the task assigned them, He would be Himself upon the spot to protect them or direct them further. The objection to this otherwise good sense is simply that it disregards the reasons which have been already given, for considering this portion of the chapter as a subsequent or supplementary discourse relating not to the immediate mission then before them, but to later and more trying times."

It is strange that Dr. Alexander should object to what he acknowledges to be an otherwise good sense, upon this ground; since the same objection would apply with equal force to the passage he refers to in Luke, where no other interpretation can, by any possibility, be put upon the meaning of the words indeed, the commencement of the address in Luke to the seventy, and of what Dr. Alexander supposes to be the "supplementary discourse" to the twelve in Matthew, are identical.—E. H. in the Prophetic Times.

Travels and Labors.

I visited Tunnel city and Angelo as announced in the RESTITUTION. Those meetings which were held nearly two weeks, were well attended, and the best of interest prevailed. They have commodious houses in which to hold meetings at both of those places. Through the indefatigable labors of brother Putnam, two flourishing churches have been raised up in these two communities; and not only here but in many parts of Northern Wisconsin have the labors of our venerable brother been signally blessed. He preaches by example as well as by precept. He fills the pattern of an elder in the Church of God, in that he is not only apt to teach, but that he is of good report with them without. Those who exemplify his teachings and examples, are epistles read and known of all with whom they are associated. As a neighbor, citizen, friend and christian, no man in the communities in which he resides, stands higher. Having been intimately acquainted with brother Putnam for a score of years, I know whereof I affirm. His whole heart and means are concentrated to the blessed cause for whose formation he has nearly worn out his life. Sister Putnam and her estimable daughter are equally devoted to the cause of their divine master They all contributed liberally of their means to build and furnish their snug little house in which the church of God convene every Sunday—in which also they have an interesting Sunday School, and Bible class, as well as preaching by brother Putnam every Sunday. Brother Putnam commenced his labors in Tunnel City about six years ago, soon after which he was united in marriage with sister Winship, an estimable woman and sister in Christ. Since that time their house has been a pilgrim home for all the worthy, the same as it had been previously. Until recently he has divided his labors with Angelo. It was principally through his labors that an ecclesia of about thirty members was raised up there. During the past six weeks his health has not permitted him to travel or labor from home much. The weight of near three score years and ten are upon him. A giant constitution is bowed beneath the weight of years. The time has come when he must husband his waning strength or hasten his exit from the busy scenes of life, with all its activities and responsibilities. The cause of truth cannot spare him, because we have but few generals who can go to war at their own expense. He not only secures no remuneration for his time and labor, but contributes liberally to aid others in the proclamation of the word. Northern Wisconsin is a promising field for missionary work. The friends of truth are generally poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which God has promised to them that love him.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

Seek God,

There is an individual seeking of God which by many is but faintly realized, if realized at all. I speak not of mankind generally, or of the masses called Greek, Roman or Protestant—mis-called Christians—many of whom profess nothing, and many again who suppose ceremonies to be all of religion necessary for them. I speak more particularly of such as consider a knowledge of the Gospel, belief thereof, and baptism into the name of Jesus the Anointed, essential to obtaining admission into the promised kingdom. Obedience thus far may be all correct; but what then? The warfare is begun; the new life must be lived. Unless we now to the spirit, what will be our end but rejection and condemnation? We are responsible to God. He requires our service, and we must become God-like. Seeking God is a constant work. We are in the flesh, and with the flesh we must war. We are in the world, and the world we must overcome. If we neglect seeking God, we shall be defiled and unacceptable. We must seek Him with clean hands. A godly, righteous and sober life, He justly demands. Rendering to all their dues, is a part of our duty. We must not wink at unrighteousness. Opportunities to smuggle, to defraud the revenue by omission of stamps, etc., may be open to us and tempting. Fools, would many call us, did we not take the chances; but righteousness is a characteristic of the true servant of the living God, and he our circumstances what they may, it is for us to render every cent demanded by law. The unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Let righteousness be our "watchplate," cost what it may. The duty in some situations of life may seem indeed hard, but let us press it trusting in God. The thoughts of our hearts are known to God. "Let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts," are words spoken by the spirit through Isaiah. Yes, the thoughts and intents of the heart are known unto God. Heart purity is required; and to those who have this, is the inestimable promise—they shall see God. Let us in the closet daily, with simplicity and sincerity, seek God, and our prayers will not be in vain. With assurance may the humble disciple "ask and receive," and his "joy be full." Strength, consolation, mercy; all sustaining power, are ready for him at his request. And his prayers will not be for himself alone; he will, like Epaphras, pray fervently for others. See Col. iv. 12.

Let us seek God by searching the Word, with the honest purpose to learn the things of God therefrom, whatever may become of our "views." So let us live, growing daily in grace and wisdom; ready for our Lord's appearing. H. HEVES.

"Eph. vi 16. Here the right-eousness which is of God by faith (Phil iii. 9) is probably meant; but we must be righteous nevertheless v. See I John iii. 7.

War Inevitable.

All Europe stands aghast. Black clouds of war are fast gathering above the horizon of international politics. England's truckling policy is bringing to light its legitimate fruits in the present haughty attitude taken by Turkey in the reply to the protocol of the signatory Powers. The Ottoman Turk asserts his sovereignty, his independence; and, last and not least, he bids defiance to all Europe. But for England, the Turk would have been long ago dislodged from his camping ground. He is even to this very day, in blood, language and religion, an alien amid the Europeans—notwithstanding the fact that he has had dwelling place within the land for six centuries. He destroyed the civilization he found there on his arrival. On his part, he has made no progress. On the contrary, the evidence of history proves that he has been steadily retrograding.

To all appearances, diplomacy has, at last, exhausted all its resources in the attempted settlement of an irrepressible conflict in European Turkey. Alas! it is impossible, in the nature of the case, that such a conflict could be adjusted either by diplomacy or arbitration. The differences are irreconcilable. On the one side it is freedom, on the other it is oppression. The two opposing forces must be forever in antagonism. One or the other must gain the ascendency. The time for the final conflict seems to have come. This means war—war to the hilt. War is now inevitable. The time of a downtrodden and oppressed people, and of its final deliverance from a cruel and hated bondage, seems to be near at hand.

The war will be bloody and sharply contested. It is too early yet to determine its range. It is to be devoutly hoped that it may be limited and localized; to believe it, however, may be too great a stretch of our credulity in a problem so complicated as the Eastern question.

The English Government, both by its relation to the late protocol and by public sentiment, is necessarily, for a time at least, committed to a policy of neutrality. Outspoken and deep-rooted public opinion in England is fast gaining the ascendency over former prejudice; and the Government's time-honored fear and jealousy of Russia is gradually giving away under the blows dealt out to Turkish cruelty by such men as Freeman and Gladstone. It may, therefore, be assumed that the conflict will be limited in the outset to Russia and Turkey.

In this conflict the Turk will contend for existence. But it is practically an existence in a country inhabited by another race—speaking a different language, professing a religious faith in direct antagonism to that of his own. The people will be arrayed in arms against their alien ruler and oppressor. Russia, on the other hand, comes to the rescue of an oppressed people who are in race, language and religion kindreds with her own, and who look to her for a glorious deliverance from bondage. All Russia is, therefore, in hearty sympathy with their aspirations, and she devoutly prays for their success. The Turkish army consists of 650,000 men, the Russian army of 1,500,000 men. If Russia and Turkey are left to themselves to fight their own battles, the final outcome can scarcely be doubtful. But if other nations take a hand in the actual conflict, it is destined to become one of the bloodiest wars known to history.—Chicago Evening Journal.

Correspondence.

Editor Restitution:—We have closed our meeting at the Willow Slough school house. Seven were baptized. Our beloved brother, H. Corbaley, held forth the word of life ably ten days, teaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ to the people of this vicinity. The prophecies concerning the future greatness and glory of Jesus in and over the whole earth purified, and which is then to be the saints' inheritance, were also ably presented.

We number about twenty, and keep up Sunday school, Bible class and worship every Lord's day to the best of our ability. We hold the Bible as a sufficient guide for faith and practice in all things pertaining to life and Godliness. We are known as the Church of God.

Our worthy Brother Corbaley asked me to make a report of our meeting; and if you think proper to put this, or any part of it in the RESTITUTION, please correct errors, and oblige

Your brother in hope,
P. A. STRONG.

Brelland, Ont., March 31, 1877.

Editor Restitution:—The wise man has said, "Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend." That is, the look of approbation, the word of encouragment and gospel cheer to those of like precious faith "while engaged in the Master's work, is of great importance. It comforts, strengthens, and lessens the burdens of life by the co-operation and christian fellowship of those interested in us and our labors for Christ. And for this purpose I have again taken my humble pen to send you a few lines of christian greeting, and my appreciation of your loving mission as editor of the RESTITUTION. I feel that your work will bear investigation, and that you are fully able to bring out of God's great "house "things new and old," thereby "giving the meat in due season." And while many things you write comfort and instruct, I am also comforted whenever I see the names of Brother and Sister Willard in your columns, as they were the first to lead me into the light of Advent truth, so dear to my heart. May God bless them for their perseverance toward one who, though honest in her convictions of truth, yet was afraid to receive any thing else, lest it should set aside Baptist teaching. But as time sped on and the letters continued to come filled with strong and loving arguments, until the darkness gave place to the glorious light of gospel truth, which enabled me to lay aside everything else but the teachings of Jesus and his apostles, and being "made free by the Son," I was "free indeed, and like one of old, have ever since "gone on my way rejoicing." And still more so as I see the day approaching. "The signs proclaim him near, and my heart rejoices at every new indication of his approach. The pillar of witness, the Great Pyramid, interests me greatly, as it will doubtless throw much additional light upon the prophetic page. That, with the incidents of the Eastern question, all concurring together, will surely bring an array of testimony before the world that will convince many candid minds now in search of the truth But as I only designed a few lines of gospel cheer and encouragement in your labors, I will not take up your columns with a lengthy article, but will close with the comforting words of the poet:

"Resting by and by, there's resting by and by,
We shall not always labor, we shall not always cry,
The end is drawing nearer, the end for which we sigh,
We'll lay our heavy burdens down, there's resting by and by."

Your sister in the blessed hope,
MARY A. TIBBETS.

Tilsonburg, Ont., April 16th, 1877.

A singular book, entitled "Armageddon," made its appearance in the Ohio valley and that vicinity several years before the war of the rebellion began, and created considerable interest by the distinctness of its prophecies concerning affairs in the the United States and elsewhere. Strange to say, its predictions as to the extinction of slavery and its attendant events were wonderfully fulfilled, and the readers of the volume have ever since been deeply impressed by its wisdom and prescience. Among other things foretold by this obscure prophet, was the present impending European war. He said it was to begin in April, 1877, and the prediction is that Russia will succeed. An Ohio paper adds: His idea of the return of the Jews to Palestine is, too, quite remarkable. Much dispute has existed in theological circles as to whether a literal return would ever occur, or whether the Scriptural allusions were simply metaphorical. But it has been known that of late there has been a reviving interest among the Jews on the subject of the return, and large numbers have gathered near Jerusalem. If, now, they have arranged with Russia for the freedom of the land, Palestine will again be occupied by the Israelitish people. If so, it will be very suggestive of other prophesied events.

Jerusalem and Turkey.

There is no city in the whole world which fills so important a place in the Word of God as Jerusalem. There are several others which are more prominent in the world's politics, but in the great economy of God, as revealed in sacred Scripture, Jerusalem stands out among them all.

We Englishmen think London with its vast population and enormous wealth, as the leading city of the world. The French look upon Paris as the most beautiful city of Europe, and the centre of European influence; but unless it is the predicted seat of the Beast, which some people are disposed to consider it, it is literally nowhere in the word of God. And Rome, which all regard with something of awe and veneration, as being associated with the most thrilling histories of the past, is described in the prophetic Word as the seven-hilled city on which is seated the mystic Babylon, the great whore of the Apocalypse.

But the whole of sacred Scripture abounds in allusions to Jerusalem. History, poetry and prophecy are full of it. It is described as "beautiful for situation," and the joy of the whole earth. The people of God are taught to pray for it, and the promise is given that those who love it shall prosper. The sacred feet of the Son of God trod the pavement of its temple, and we are assured that it will never disappear from God's dealings with mankind, until the New Jerusalem shall descend from heaven from our God, and there shall be new heavens and a new earth at the coming of the Lord of glory.

Our blessed Savior, in the remarkable prophecy contained in the twenty-first of Luke, told His disciples that Jerusalem should be "trodden under foot of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled."

What are the Gentile powers which have trodden down Jerusalem? They are Rome and the successive forms of that Mohammedan power of which the present head is Turkey. Rome trod her down at the siege of Jerusalem, and Turkey holds her down now. Rome cast her to the ground, and when she was down, Turkey set its foot on her neck. Rome hurled her to the dust, and Turkey now tramples her in the mire. Rome destroyed God's temple, and actually plowed up the sacred ground on which it stood. Turkey maintains on the sacred site the Mosque of Omar: and on that holy hill where Abraham offered Isaac, where David offered the oxen of Araunah, where Solomon built his temple, and where the Lord Jesus the Son of David, cast all out that was unholy; there, by Turkish authority, now stands a Mohammedan mosque; and there no Jew is permitted to set his foot, the only privilege allowed him being to kneel in the street, standing outside the enclosure, and there weep at the desolation of Jerusalem.

There is something very remarkable in this fact, because these are the two powers especially connected with the two great predicted apostacies, Popery and Mohammedanism.

And now what is the present position of these two powers? And how do they stand in Europe? What is the condition, and what the prospect, of these two great oppressors of Jerusalem? As for Rome, as a political power, it has ceased to exist. According to Sir G. Bonar, in the Times of November 10, 1874, "The Pope has been dethroned, and all his dominions and property have been reduced to a palace, a church, and a garden."

But what shall we say of the second? of that Turkey which is the only power now treading down Jerusalem? Is there any politician in Europe who has the least expectation of Turkey remaining in its present position for another ten years? Whatever little political power it retains is dying out as rapidly as it can die. Its exchequer is bankrupt. Its character for good faith is at an end. Its subject populations are rising against the intolerable burdens of its injustice and oppression; and the Turks themselves have lost heart in the melancholy conviction that their days are numbered.

Thus, of the two powers that have trodden down Jerusalem, one is already extinct, and the head of the other is at its last gasp. The foot of the Sick Man is the only foot remaining on the neck of Jerusalem, and the Sick Man is dying. Surely it is not unreasonable to ask the question, "when he dies, why should not Jerusalem arise and be free?"

Turkey is now treading her down: but its decay is begun, and its days are numbered; so that we may earnestly hope that it will be but a little while, possibly a very little while—within the lives of many present—when the promise of God shall be fulfilled, and according to the prophecy, "The moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before His ancients gloriously." God grant that all may be found looking for His appearing, and ready to welcome Him with their lamps burning brightly, when the cry is heard, "The Bridegroom cometh!"—Rev. Edward Hoare, Canon of Canterbury, England.

Experience and Hope.

Sad, lonely, weak, and weary,
I lay me down to rest;
And hopeful wait the coming day
To be with Jesus blest.

So with that life abounding—
Release'd from grief and pain—
I'll strive to paradise gain here
That boundless bliss to gain.

To rest from loving Savior
A home beyond the flood,
When all life's ills are over
In Paradise of God.

O God of grace and mercy,
In love remember me;
And grant thy kingdom soon may come
To set thy people free.

Then Christ will sit on David's throne
Surrounded by his saints;
Those who have kept their garments clean
From sin's dark stains and taints.

Hasten that time, thou God of love,
When righteousness shall reign—
Proclaimed by Zion's happy band
Through all earth's vast domains.

The Day of Judgment.

J. D. SHERIDAN.

(Concluded from last week.)

I will now pass on to notice who are meant by the class called sheep. In God's covenant to Abraham all families of the earth were to be blessed. Gen. xii. 3. At the same time, punishment was threatened against those who should curse Abraham. In the waiting assembly which is represented as standing before the Son of man when he sits upon his glorious throne.

Those styled sheep are commended, not for their faith in him, as members of the household, Gal. vi. 10; not for having "suffered with him," or "overcome the world," but simply for having shown themselves charitable towards Christ's brethren; they are to be blessed because they have rendered assistance to Abraham's seed. Neither do they claim to have done anything to commend them to the favor of the Judge.

It may be well to notice here that none are represented as being present in the scene before us, but the living nations of the last generation of the present dispensation, with the exception of those who have part in the first resurrection, which have been made priests of God and of Christ to reign with him. "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." Rev. xx. 5, 6.

The sons of Israel are now scattered among all the nations, and according to the words spoken by the prophets, the Gentiles are to take an active part in their restoration to their own land. "Thus saith the Lord God, behold I will lift mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people, and they shall bring thy sons in their arms; and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders." Isa. xlix. 22. Read from the thirteenth to the twenty-third verse, inclusive. The multitude will be so great that the land formerly occupied by them will be too narrow by reason of the inhabitants, and they that swallowed her up shall be far away, (verse 19,) while those who have oppressed Israel are to be far away, yet there are others who are to serve as plowmen, vinedressers, etc. See Isa. liv. 2-8; lv. 5; lxi. 4.

In the time of Solomon's reign over that kingdom it was spoken of as the most model one ever known. The number of strangers employed in his work was 153,000.

When the Queen of Sheba saw the glory and wisdom displayed there, "there was no more spirit in her." She exclaimed, "Happy are those thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and hear thy wisdom." 2 Chron. ix. 7.

If men were made happy in that court, what must be the blessedness of those who are permitted to stand and minister before the "greater than Solomon," when he shall have rebuilt that throne so long in ruins, to more than its original beauty and glory?

But it is written, "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand (the sheep), come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Can it be possible that Christ and the saints, Israel, and strangers, are all to inherit one and the same kingdom?

I will try to show, by illustration, that such a thing may be.

The kingdom of Great Britain is composed of the queen, her subordinate rulers, the British lords, another class who lease the land, who sub-lease to another class. The first class inherit or possess that kingdom in the highest sense; yet no one will for a moment deny that either of the other classes, can establish a just claim of their title of inheritance in the same kingdom. The lowest class who lease their three or five acres, hold an undisputed possession of their title in that land, so long as they pay the stipulated price. In the same sense the alien, or stranger, will inherit with Israel when the land is again settled by that people, and divided for the last time, "it shall come to pass that in what tribe the stranger sojourneth, there shall ye give him his inheritance," Ezek. xlvii. 23. By reading the two last chapters of Ezekiel it will be seen that in the last great gathering of the tribes of Israel the land will be divided in a different shape, and extend over a much larger extent of country than in the days of Joshua.

Here also it is distinctly stated that the stranger shall inherit with Israel.

Having, as I think, established the fact that the elect, or little flock, the descendants of Jacob, and strangers, may all participate in that kingdom promised to Christ, I will now pass on to notice those on the left hand of the great King, denominated goats.

These are condemned for having failed to show pity, or give relief to Christ's brethren when they had seen them needy and in distress.

Much the larger number of captive Jews are at the present time scattered among the Greek and Catholic churches and also the followers of Mahomet, who are taught to love, cherish, and befriend their their own brethren, but to hate and oppress the Jew. At the same time there are others who from a growing sympathy with that people are ready to lend a helping hand in every time of need or distress; and in the return of their captivity will render valuable assistance for which they will not lose their reward; while the other class, which have refused charity, and have cursed Abraham, will be cursed in turn. They will not be permitted to participate in the joys of the redeemed.

"They that swallowed thee (Israel) up shall be far away." Isa. lxix. 18. On whom might this sentence more justly rest than on those employed in wasting and oppressing God's heritage. Psa. xciv. 5, Jer. l. 11.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment." Matt. xx. 46.

The Emphatic Diaglott renders the text "And these shall go forth to the aionian cutting off; but the righteous to aionian life." The Greek word rendered cutting off, or punishment, is kolasin. This word, in its various forms, only occurs in three other places in the New Testament. Acts. iv. 21; 2 Peter ii. 9; 1 John iv. 18. It is derived from kolazoo, which signifies, 1, to cut off, as lopping off branches of trees, to prune; 2, to restrain, to repress; 3, to chastise, to punish. "To cut off an individual from life or society is esteemed as punishment," says the foot note in the Emphatic Diaglott.

In the establishment of God's kingdom on the earth, in the beginning it will be in the "mustard seed" phase to "increase until it fills the whole earth."

To be cut off from life, or to be driven far away from the land covenanted to Abraham - where the curse will first be removed, and the "inhabitants shall not say, I am sick; and the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity," Isa. xxxiii. 24,—that now barren and desolate country, beautified with dwellings for the redeemed, gardens of fruits, adorned with flowers of every variety, and vineyards giving "wine that maketh glad the heart of man," would be a severe punishment, in my estimation. The objector might here say that the King will say to "them on his left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels." To this I will reply: In Bible phraseology the word fire is used primarily to signify destruction to whatever should be consigned to its power; but like other words it is often used in a different sense. In Psa. lxvi., the prophet in speaking of God's dealing with his chosen people, in causing them to pass through afflictions, trials, and punishment for their sins, compares them to fire.

"Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads, we went through fire and water." Psa. lxvi. 12. See Psa. lvii. 4; lxxviii. 21; Isa. xxxi. 9; xlii. 24, 25.

God's judgments as denounced by the mouth of Jeremiah, recorded in the fourth chapter, against that people for their evil doings, are compared to fire God says, "I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them." Verse 14. Here it is stated that the Jews were to be devoured by fire, yet there is mercy in store for that same people. "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned; for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." Isa. xl. 12. According to these testimonies the sword, famine, pestilence and captivity, were the devouring fire that God used to punish a people favored with greater light, blessings and privileges than any other people have ever received at his hand; and they are to be pardoned and receive still greater blessings in the future.

"The Lord is merciful and gracious; slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy." Psa. viii. 8. If so he will never punish any one beyond his deserts, or continue the chastisement beyond what is for the good of his creature This being true, he will not consign any one to endless, ceaseless misery, and the fire spoken of in the text will put an end to the life of those cast into it, or it them for future subjects in that kingdom which will increase until all the families of the earth are blessed through the administration of its government.

In human governments great criminals are often reprieved before the time of their punishment has expired. Who dare charge the Infinite God with being less compassionate than mortal man?

That the effect of the punishment spoken of in the text will be to subdue and reclaim those worthy of it, and to make loyal and happy subjects of them, may be inferred by more testimonies in Sacred Writ than those which might be construed to teach an opposite view.

For instance, "The Son of man is come to save that which was lost." Matt. xviii. 11. "Having made known unto us the mystery of his will.... that in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all thing in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in him." Eph. i. 9, 10. See also Rom. viii. 18-23. Phil. iii. 21.

From the above testimonies, and many more of like import, it may be inferred, to say the least, that the lost of the human race are finally to be saved, either as heirs with Christ or subjects in God's kingdom.

I will close by adding a solemn warning or sounding an alarm. See Joel ii. Before that good time, so much desired by all and foretold by the prophets, can put in its appearance, the church must pass through a baptism of fire which will cleanse and purify a part, while the remainder will be consumed by its devouring heat.

Reasoning from analogy, as well as from Revelation, such an event must take place.

Before the Israelites were permitted to enter the promised land to receive temporal blessings they were caused to pass through fiery trials, and temptations, and the result was, only two of six hundred thousand proved themselves worthy of those blessings. See Deut. viii. 3, 5, and Num. xxvi. 63-65. After a trial of that church for a period of more than twenty-five hundred years they were immersed in a fire that consumed them. See history of the Jewish wars.

A little flock of faithful followers of Jesus, after passing through a baptism of persecution, fiery trial and temptation, (for testimony read the Acts of the Apostles,) these were permitted to escape the scorching heat of that fire which devoured the Jewish people with the exception of a very small remnant, which were carried captives into all countries, there to pine away in the most abject servitude.

Rebellion, unbelief, and pride, were the cause of all this suffering and wretchedness.

Revelation teaches us that church history will repeat itself. As the Jewish church was tried and found wanting, so the Christian church will fail of the "high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Phil iii. 14.

As the sword of the Lord, which is the wicked, (see Psa. xvii. 13,) has been used to punish the "house of Moses for their infidelity and lewdness," so the same means will be used to chastise the house of the Lord which has apostatized from him to whom she has been espoused, and united herself to another, even the world.

God is about to raise up a power which shall claim divine honor and worship, and he will cause all who are willing to bow down to his image, to receive a "mark in the right hand or in the forehead," and those not willing to render divine homage to him will be put to death. See Rev. xiii. 12-17. Doubtless all those not having their "names written in the book of life from the foundation of the world" will be taken in the snare. xvii. 8. This persecuting power will be of short duration; see 10th verse. After this the vials of God's wrath will be poured out upon the wicked, and they will desire death to come and free them from the pain and anguish inflicted upon them. See Rev. ix. 6, and xvi. And the remnant who escape the general destruction of the plagues of the last days will be "affrighted and give glory to the God of heaven." xi. 13.

From the above testimonies, it appears that the world, as well as the church, is to feel the scorching heat of that fiery baptism that is hastening to fall upon us. Who will heed the admonition, choose the first, and escape the second fire.

Report of Union Conference.

In harmony with a call made by A. N. Seymour, A. M. Smith, E. B. Scott, and O. R. L. Crozier, and an invitation of the church at Galesburgh, Mich., the following preaching brethren met in conference at Galesburgh, Michigan, March 22, 1874: E. B. Scott, Daniel Weaver, A. N. Seymour, Samuel Pope, T. C. Grundy, C. D. Berry, Leslie Bower, O. R. L. Crozier, James Ferris, Philip Boller, M. E. King, B. H. McCain, Brother Cranmer.

Organized temporarily by electing Brother Daniel Weaver, of Hesperia, chairman, and Brother Berry secretary.

On motion a committee of three was appointed, consisting of brethren Crozier, Ferris and Seymour, to nominate officers for a permanent organization.

According to their recommendation, Brother Weaver was elected president, and Brother C. D. Berry, of Assyria secretary.

This was done after Brother Scott asked: "Will this call or organization interfere with any other organization?" Answered by Brother Bristol. "No."

Brother Crozier explained that the "organization into which we are entering is only for the present meeting."

A motion was made and carried that the chair appoint a committee of five to prepare business for the meeting. The committee consisted of Brethren Pope, Grundy, Scott, Boller and Bower.

Question from business committee: "Is it expected that this committee will nominate the sub-committees?" Answered by the chair, "Yes."

Report: Committee on devotion—Brethren Bristol, Wilson, and Crozier. On Singing—Brother Berry.

By vote, the pastor of the Baptist church, being present, was invited to take part in the devotional exercises.

The business committee presented the following question: "Shall we organize a conference to be known as The Union Conference of Believers in Christ?"

After a discussion of the subject, a motion was made that the chair appoint a committee of seven to propose a plan for the union of Adventists.

Committee: Brethren Crozier, Pope, Ferris, Bower, Scott, Bristol, and Grundy. By a vote Brother Weaver was added to the committee.

Report of the union committee: "We, as a committee appointed to take measures to bring about a more perfect harmony among those believing in, looking for, and loving the coming of Christ, recommend that the brethren present consult together and with others about the interests of the cause; and that the committee of eight take steps to call a union conference at an early day.

This was adopted.

Then by vote the committee of eight were authorized to take steps looking toward the holding of a union camp-meeting, at some central point in the state of Michigan, the coming season.

Brother Bristol then tendered his resignation as one of the committe, which was accepted, and Brother Seymour was put in his place.

The following preamble and resolutions were then passed:

WHEREAS, The opinions and customs which divide Adventists are not vital to Christian character; therefore,

Resolved, That they should be held subordinate to that charity which is the bond of unity and perfectness;

Resolved, That we do not wish to organize a new conference, but prefer to see those now existing united and acting in harmony.

The secretary was also instructed to make out, and the president to sign, a letter of recommendation for Brother Samuel Pope as a minister of the gospel.

A motion was then passed requesting the secretary to forward copies of the proceedings of this meeting to the World's Crisis, Advent Christian Times, and the RESTITUTION, for publication.

The conference then adjourned.

While in my life I have been permitted to attend a number of conference meetings, I never, I think, attended one where a better feeling and harmony prevailed. We felt that it was truly good for us to be there; and we felt so long more than ever for that glorious meeting that will never break up.

O. D. BERRY, Sec.

The Union Conference.

REPORT OF THE DEVOTIONAL COMMITTEE.

"Called to Christ, united to one another."

It was thought best that the devotional committee of the Galesburg Union Conference make a report additional to that of the secretary.

There was no special effort made for harmony; yet in the twenty sessions for business and devotions, not a jar was noticeable. Ten discourses were preached by nine different persons. There was no dictation or suggestion what should be spoken. Each speaker chose his own subject, and presented it in his own way; yet the whole constituted a unity of doctrine as perfect as though it had been most sedulously planned. The meetings for conference, exhortation and prayer, and the Lord's supper Sunday evening, were very precious sessions. The proper close was on Monday morning, when seven persons were baptized and received the right hand of fellowship—a very affecting scene, great joy and peace in faith and obedience.

The conference, as a whole, made a very salutary impression upon the church, the brethren from abroad, and the community. The "call" was amply honored; we "worshipped together, edified and exhorted one another, and devised plans for gospel work." We proved, for the time, at least, that it is "good and pleasant for brethren to dwell together in unity." Psalms cxxxiii.

The conference suggested—The essential unity of Adventists; that their differences are trivial; that to make this real union apparent and practical, they only need faith in one another as well as in God, and to meet together and work together.

We all felt that it was well to have had this meeting, even if nothing more should come of it.

Of the committee, O. R. L. C.

Eastern Items.

Both Russia and Turkey are eager for the opening of the war, which will soon take place. Both powers expect hard and heavy fighting; but each is confident of success over the other. It is but a short march that the vast Russian army near the Pruth will have to make to meet the vast Turkish army that is waiting for it; and we may be sure that the first collision between them will be of a character to test their qualities. The cable despatches that are reaching us in these times are pregnant with interest.

The Agence Russe states that as the protocol, in virtue of England's declaration, is annulled, Russia, whose hands are thus freed, will endeavor to accomplish Europe's mission in regard to Turkey.

LONDON, April 18.—A Paris correspondent states that the Mediterranean squadron of the United States has obtained the requisite permission to pass through the Dardanelles from the Porte, and will immediately proceed to the Bosphorus.

The Vienna Deutsche Zeitung announced that the Cabinets of Vienna, London and Paris have notified Roumania that the privileges she enjoys by virtue of the treaty of Paris would be considered null and void should she actively co-operate with Russia.

A dispatch from Bucharest reports that the Roumanian Government has resolved to concentrate 100,000 men for the protection of the capital against any sudden attack of Turkish irregular troops.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 19.—The Russian Steamboat Company has announced a suspension of their service. The last boat to Odessa sails Friday.

PESTH, April 19.—A communication published by official papers declares that Austro Hungary will only remain neutral so long as its interests in the East are not menaced.

LONDON, April 19.—The Times' Berlin special represents that Persia at Russia's bidding threatens the Asiatic frontier of Turkey.

A dispatch from Pera says it is reported that the Russians are moving troops from Odessa, with a view of attacking Turkey on the Asiatic side.

A Vienna special confirms the programme reported by the Times' Paris correspondent, and adds: "Russia seems determined to avoid a real declaration of war. Her troops in Europe will remain on the defensive, but in Asia, it is believed she will commence hostilities at the least at the end of next week."

LONDON, April 19.—Russia is negotiating an alliance with Persia, and the Shah is offering 40,000 men to join the army in Anatolia.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 19.—Layard is expected to-night. He will have an interview with Edhem Pasha and Safvet Pasha to-morrow, but no hope is entertained of avoiding war.

Hobart Pasha, Commander-in-Chief of the Turkish navy, has left for the Danube.

The plague is increasing in Bagdad.

BELGRADE, April 19.—The rainy season will probably delay the general advance into the alluvial plains of Roumania, where the roads are impassable after heavy rains. The Danube is also very high, and rising rapidly. It is, therefore, scarcely probable that any extensive military movements will be attempted for three weeks at least.

BERLIN, April 19. The National Zeitung learns that the Czar will not travel through Moscow in going to Kischeneff, which occasions considerable surprise in Russia. It is stated, however, the Czar will make a short stay at Kischeneff, visit Moscow when returning, and issue his war-manifesto there.

LONDON, April 20.—A Constantinople dispatch says Turkey is dismayed at the prospect of imminent war, and would gladly listen to propositions for a pacific arrangement if it were not too late.

Editor Restitution:—If I can not render the RESTITUTION any special aid, I am delighted to read what others are doing.

To me, you are all strangers, yet known and beloved in Christ. You are a body; and often seeing each other in meetings and conferences, you can render mutual aid and comfort.

Such sunshine is denied me; such Christian radiation seldom reaches me.

If I get chilly, I have but one fire that can impart any warmth; no ministerial association or sympathy. I work alone, under all the pressure incident to an unpopular cause.

Much seed has been sown; some fruit appears. We have believers among all the churches, who would come out were it not against a flood-tide. The RESTITUTION has done a good work, yet it has its bitter enemies. I spent Christmas holidays with a church of believers in Meigs county. It was an excellent meeting.

The brethren have built an exellent meeting house and paid for it.

I read the article by Canon Hoare. I am pleased with his views.

I should be pleased to have you read a little book I send you, carefully, also some articles on Dan. vii., entitled "Session of the Ancient of Days," published in Boston in 1849, as I see that you take an interest in prophecy. Mr. Hoare's views relative to the judgment are there fully expressed and explained.

Yours, J. P. WEETHEE.

[Should be pleased to see this last named work. Will Brother Weethee please write on these themes?—ED.]

Editor Restitution:—We have been attending a protracted meeting of the Congregationalists for more than a week, and have not heard a single word about the kingdom, baptism, or the resurrection. The minister said heaven was located beyond the most distant star. One said that God's Word was a mystery which he expected to spend an eternity in searching out. I told him after the sermon, that if he should ever be so fortunate as to get into that promised rest, he would fill some other position, and that it is necessary to search out these things, that he called mysteries, in this present life. I asked him if he called what Peter told the people on the day of Pentecost a mystery, as I had not heard him say anything about it.

I fear many will come short of eternal life on account of not obeying such mysteries as Peter made plain on that day.

They knowingly err, making void the Word of God, instead of which they have the traditions of men, and for such things God will bring them to account in that day when Jesus comes to judge the world in righteousness.

DIED.

SHAFFER—At her home, three miles south of Plymouth, Ind., on Saturday, April 11, of consumption, Sister Mary Shaffer, wife of Hiram Shaffer, aged thirty years, eight months and nineteen days.

Sister Shaffer embraced the gospel faith and hope in 1866, and was baptized by Brother R. Carlisle, in June of that year. Her life, since yielding the obedience of faith, has been consistent with the requirements of the gospel. In her case death was disarmed of its sting. Her expressions of confidence in the Redeemer were those of that character that Christianity alone can inspire. Resting her trust on the Lord Jesus Christ, looking forward to his coming and the resurrection, anticipating eternal life in the world to come, she calmly died in the Lord, and now sleeps in Jesus. Though we must hereafter find her seat vacant, and miss her presence in the house of God, we expect soon to meet her in the home of the redeemed. Brother H. V. Reed preached an appropriate discourse from Psa. viii. to a large audience.—ED.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"DEPARTED, READY FOR US."

Myself and wife being about to leave for England, permit me to say that my letters, etc., for me after May 7, may be addressed to me at Pilkington, near Warrington, Lancashire, England.

Always Rejoicing.

My life flows on in endless song
Above earth's lamentation;
I catch the sweet though far off hymn
That hails a new creation.
Through all the tumult and the strife
I hear the music ringing.
It finds an echo in my soul—
How can I keep from singing!

What though my joys and comforts die?
The Lord my Savior liveth;
What though the darkness gather round?
Songs in the night he giveth.
No storm can shake my inmost calm
While to that refuge clinging;
Since Christ is Lord of heaven and earth,
How can I keep from singing!

I lift my eyes—the cloud grows thin;
I see the blue above it.
And day by day this pathway smooths
Since first I learned to love it!
The peace of God makes fresh my heart
A fountain ever springing;
All things are mine since I am his—
How can I keep from singing!

Great Things—Closing With a Great Wedding.

Late years have made familiar many great things. Great wars and peace achievements, great results of inventions, great openings of science, theories and evolution, and all inviting inspections. A half dozen great expositions—national and world's fairs—have extorted loud praise and wonder. But so used to the great things of these days have we become that men go home and say, "It was a big thing," and soon the wonder ceases.

An earthquake or an ocean wave, submerging city and country, destroying millions of lives, and bringing starvation on a whole nation excites pity and some pain and sorrow till the terrible becomes a little old and stale.

Great results often follow small causes, as "a little fire kindleth a great matter." The birth of Napoleon was an obscure and small thing of no note to the obscure Islanders of Corsica, or the world. But what mighty followings; national shakings, overturnings and political earthquakes. The birth of a son thousands of years since, to an aged couple, living among strangers—a son by promise from God—was as a setting of a Scion, whose branches shall grow to shadow the earth, and fill the world with fruit.

The terrible discipline of Egypt's proud King and people, and the fatality and overthrow following the deliverance and bringing out of Israel from bondage and servile subjection, were the consequence of saving the babe Moses from the Nile through the fancy of a young princess. And the driving out of nations of iniquitous incumbents of forfeited rights, and establishing the Israelites in the sequestered homes of Canaan, were the more remote results. These results confined to localities must have been a seven or nine years' wonder to all who knew or heard of them. But results far more remote and not local but universal, of ages on ages in duration, have followed, and still are following, and are yet to follow. Europe and America, two mighty continents, with islands of the seas, have long ago professedly come under an improved form of Judaism in religion and thinking, in the foundation of laws and theology. The mighty change from the degradations and poverty of universal paganism, has gone out of Judea with great benefits and permanent influence over the world.

Great stories are preceded by much smaller indications than such things as excite general alarm. The small whirlwind, the rustling of leaves, low sounds of wind and lowering of clouds, may admonish the observant; so great armaments and full arsenals, great war movements and developments of strength; great talks, great councils and great pacific measures; risings and fallings, weakness of power and drying up, may be the the skirmishings, before the greatest dashings, lashings, and mowing down, subverting and crushing; the effects of which the world and the world's history must forever feel and declare. They may be the preluding symphony that prepares the band for the greatest performance.

The above premonitions, not small or trifling in themselves, are sure to be followed, either near or remotely, by the mighty upheaving and overturning of all the foundations of society; how near or remote no one can tell; but the sequence no one need doubt. And the great overturn and the reconstruction of all nationalities under one head will be greatly related to what we may call the world's wedding, as it will lastingly affect the whole world, and will be by a thousand times the greatest marriage that ever took place in the world; and none such will ever follow. Our authority for calling this a great and the greatest of weddings is from the sacred record:

"And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready." Rev. xix. 6, 7.

Let no man put this aside as merely a fancy. There are no fancy sketches in holy writ that have no meaning. And John, whose sight and hearing were carried forward to things twenty centuries away, as God by his power of inspiration was able to carry them, says he heard these words of the mighty proclamation from a vast assembly; whose voice from such a nation of loud voices was like the roaring waves or deafening cataracts, and like the sound of mighty thunderings. What a monster gathering of individuals; and what a mighty volume of voices united as one! It will be heard at great distance there is no doubt, when it comes to pass; for it is yet to come. As sure as it was brought before John in pre-enactment, that he might see and hear and record it for the world's information by God, who had then all his arrangements made for his servants and the world's future, just so surely will it come in real, tangible, existing and abiding reality.

Its important effect on the world, as also on the great assembly who are so intimately interested, as their proclamation shows, will belittle all the marriages of Europe that have ever taken place; though these, some of them, have been like the hail and tempest charged with evil, and some like the mild opening of spring time and blessedness to the countries under their effects.

This marriage will be in the duration of its consequence, not limited by the length of one man's or one woman's life; but for all following time. The marriage that took place in England after the death of Edward the VI., between Mary, daughter of Henry the VIII. and Philip, a Spanish prince, son of Charles V. and a Catholic, was a letting loose of woes on the English people, that never ceased till bloody Mary's death. Catholic burnings and beheadings—but mostly burning at the stake—began with the flames which destroyed John Rogers, and included 270, some say 290, men, women and some children, for conscience, among whom were Latimer, Ridley and Cranmer, church dignitaries who avowed the doctrines of Wickliff and the Reformation. If Mary had married a Protestant, all would have been different without doubt.

The marriage of William the prince of Orange with Mary, the daughter of James II., who came to the throne of England after the [illegible] ascending of popish James, brought great peace and happiness to the nation and strength in politics and religion.

But what has been the full effect of the failure of a marriage of the king's son, as we read in the parabolic delineation of Matt. xxii. 2-9, no man can tell. We know this much, that the kingdom of God had been preached thoroughly, as at hand, and near and truly, too, we believe; that multitudes had been baptized unto repentance—reformation—for the remission of their sins, in preparation for the the coming and near kingdom of God. And we know that Jesus said in the opening words of the parable afterwards, that "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king which made a marriage for his son." All may read the particulars; how it is represented that the wedding failed. It was truly ready; all things were ready, but the bidden guests were not worthy. Disbelieving in the king's son and in the marriage, they made light of it. We can see the effect in the long, dreary desolation of the house of Judah and then land; who did not know in this, their day, the things that belonged to their peace. It was hidden from their eyes and they refused to be gathered as the hen gathers her brood under protecting wings; they might have been gathered, but would not. We know that nearly two thousand years, have since rolled away, and the kingdom of God and the marriage have not come. The times and the seasons the Father hath put in his own power, to bring on when he will. He never quite made known the date, and could reasonably and consistently set back the time two thousand years or to any date. It is evident that the delay will be the riches of a vast number of Gentiles, from highways and by places outside of cultivated Judea; of pagan heathens, who never could have become of the first fruits, had the kingdom come at that time, when it was at hand. As it is, lost heirships and lost crowns, will cause wailing and gnashing of teeth, when dispersed Israel are again gathered.

There is a pertinency and great force in the record of John, considering the unreadiness, unwillingness and unworthiness of those once invited; but made light of the invitation, in the saying, "And his wife hath made herself ready." We do not look for any failure when the bride is ready. We do not see in the Jew's case a failure, except for them. God who never fails was pleased to prove his readiness. Isa. vi., will show that all was foreseen centuries before. The prophet was sent to say, "Hear ye indeed, but understand not." "Make"—show or manifest—"the heart of this people fat," etc. "How long?" the prophet ask; Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant . . . and the land be utterly desolate." 9-11 ver.

"The Lamb," was the name used by John: "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," pointing him out to the Jews as the sin-bearer. And in no very long time he was led as a Lamb to the slaughter. Why, "without the shedding of blood there is no remission" of sins, may or may not, be a mystery. But death is the penalty of sin, and blood the only purgation. The principal value of sacrifice from Abel down to times of Jewish altars smoking with bodies of beasts whose blood was shed was in the obedience to such a faith as then existed, by this sort of substituted death. Also the vivid idea kept before the minds of men in such offerings; of some great life to be made a sacrifice for an effectual offering for sins. At least so it looks; "For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats"—or any beasts—"could take away sins." Heb. x. 4.

The name calls ever to mind, and keeps in unfading freshness of memory through all following time, the power and availability of the sacrifice of the Lamb to all appreciative applicants; and goes back to the sins of all who, like Abel, by faith offered the more excellent sacrifice than did those without faith.

He has caused this proclamation of himself to be made: "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen." Death was but a short period to his existence; for he liveth, and ever liveth. By God's appointment having been made the heir of all things; he will be Imperator Universal. "But now we see not yet all things put under him." Heb. i. 2; ii. 8.

Glorious words are written in Psa. xlv., of him: "Thou art fairer than the children of men; grace is poured into thy lips; therefore God has blessed thee forever. Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O most Mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty. Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever; the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre. King's daughters were among thy honorable women; upon thy right hand did stand the queen in gold of Ophir." These things are prophetic of realities. The sword girded on, is for war and conquest when terms of peace have failed. Might and majesty are to go forth with the glory of the conqueror, to make defiant majesties and their people fall under him, and to establish his throne forever; in opposition to the kings of the earth and people, who will imagine a vain thing, as in Psa. 2.

To the bride: "Hearken, O daughter, and consider and incline thine ear; forget thine own people and thy father's house. So shall the king greatly desire thy beauty; for he is thy Lord; and worship thou him. The king's daughter is all glorious within; her clothing is of wrought gold." The duties are briefly expressed; but contain everything. Hearken, and consider, and incline thine ear, are first of all. Emotional excitements, moods and feelings, cannot be substituted. Turning away the ears from truth and persistence in error is the crime and death of the children of disobedience; though their hearts burst with emotion and be on fire with feeling. No one can be brought to conversion under the truth, unless by hearkening and considering. Pagans and Jews never lacked for religion, zeal and feelings; but would not hearken; the former easily moved to stone the apostles, and to cry with great warmth for two hours: "Great is Diana of the Ephesians;" and the latter killed the Lord Jesus and Stephen in the warmth of religion; rather than hear. No one can be brought under the truth without putting out of mind and forsaking old lines of thought and belief; forgetting old sympathies and old fallacies, such as the masses of men retain, and wherein he was born. In short, forgetting his own people and his father's house; if such old religious relations are a compact void of the purity of truth. A character formed by attention to the speech of truth, is such as the King greatly desires; but the beauty of which most men do not appreciate nor covet. It makes the pure in heart all glorious within, and an outward clothing of humility is comparable to wrought gold.

Such is the training and preparation of the bride to be: so abject socially in her nativity, that her own people and father's house cannot be tolerated; but must be forever discarded. She must separate from them in order to be raised; forget them for more honorable and higher relations. A position equal to the highest of creation, and queen of all the earth includes; is her's in prospect. The root and offspring of David, the bright and morning star is to her the Lamb. The blessed and only potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords, is gentle and loving to the preparing bride, who worships him; and whom all the angels of God will worship when he cometh again into the world. Heb. i. 6. Things in heaven, things in earth, and things under the earth, will bend to him. He will have the royal diadem and be crowned Lord of all. Language can rise no higher, or add more to greatness. The hope attached to her calling, is that she may become the riches of the glory of his inheritance, in the saints. Christ loved the church and gave himself—became the Lamb—for it, that he might present it to himself a glorious church. Concerning Christ and the church there is a great mystery. For we—the church—are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones; as husband and wife are called one flesh, so we, being many, are one in Christ; for we, being many, one bread—one loaf; divisible into many parts or pieces.

It is not expected that the majority of men will be glad and rejoice much when the marriage comes. They see it not, far or near; and are in no way preparing. But those of the day and of light, can see and are watching. "Peace and safety," say the evil doers; there is sudden, unawares, surprise and destruction for them. The Lamb of the bride, will be the Lion to them. Then the prey of a great spoil will be divided; the lame take the prey. The lame—put down; no winners in the strifes and races of the world; always hitherto halting and in the hands of spoilers—then become the spoilers of principalities and powers. The cross entails the wealth and the crowns. Joy and relief—the majority of minors attained: the purchased possession redeemed; the earth soon established; dixedness and sure good order replace commotions, and the balancing of loss and gain in politics, and the uncertainties now in all things. No more counsels turned to foolishness. "These, that have turned the world upside down, are come hither also," said the old pagans of Greece, when Paul came setting forth strange gods, as some perceived. That was prophetic of more than they thought or knew. That preaching ends only with breaking up the great foundations; sinking and bringing up of all things in a new order, like the new heavens and earth after the flood, completely changing all the old geographical arrangements.

Blessed are they which are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb. The world now cannot bear any illiberality. Will this be churlish exclusiveness, when selections are made? Ah, men of the world and liberal Christians, you must submit; you cannot take away the blessing, nor can you enlarge and widen it. Having said, Lord, Lord, prophecying or preaching in his name, casting out demons, doing many great works with great activity, cannot be, and will not be accepted, in substitution for the brief lesson: Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear. Illiberal! well, bread is illiberal, and thousands cannot get it. The commandments of Christ and the New Testament, are not all duties of doing; a large portion are to be heard, thought and believed. Obedience of faith has no false belief mixed up with it. "Many"—it is, oh, so illiberal—"will seek to enter in and shall not be able." These claim the name, Lord, Lord, in some mistaken way, by not hearkening.

Such a vast corporate bride, wedded to the Lamb, composed of those who will be glad and rejoice in realized expectation, will make an occasion such as never was, and will not be again. The great design of putting down all rule and all authority of human functionaries will then be carried out. Happy, happy, for those who keep the commands of God and have the testimony of Jesus. A glorious testimony to the waiting, expectant bride.

A portion of the great meteor which passed over northern Vermont a few weeks ago is reported found near the town of Jay, embedded about four feet in the earth. It is said to have the appearance of iron-ore lava and soapstone, and to weigh about two tons. Report says this is the largest aerolite ever discovered in this country.

Prominent European capitalists have been negotiating for some time, and at last successfully, with the Land Commissioners of Florida for $8,000,000 worth of orange lands. They intend to bring into the State 2,000 or 3,000 hardy farmers from England, Germany, France and Italy.

"The Issue of the Faith."

"Receiving the end of your faith, the salvation of your souls." 1 Pet. i. 9.

In all well arranged plans of men there must be an outcome, or issue. All primary, intermediate and proximate steps are taken with reference to this end. It is the incentive to action, the pole-star of hope, and the prevailing motive. So in the great plan of salvation there is an outcome to which all the workings, operations and developments are tending. There is an issue of the faith, and God in his revelation has not left us to conjecture as to the when and where of hopes, the goal, or reward; nor has he left us in doubt and uncertainty in regard to what shall constitute the great reward. Take "time" and "place" (the when and where) and "what" (the things we hope for) out of prophecy and promise, and what is left? Nothing in point of fact; therefore both faith and hope would be left without ground of support.

God's promises are definite. He has not said to his children that at some time, in some place, I will give you something as a reward for your labor and suffering. This would be altogether too vague and indefinite to serve as a motive to human faith and conduct, and would defeat the end in view. The creature's inquiry is, what shall I have, and when and where shall I realize and enjoy it? Revelation is found beautifully harmonizing with this inquiry of helpless humanity. God, in love to his obedient children, has promised to give them many good things, and if they fail to secure the things he has promised they will be destitute indeed. The contingency is on our part. Want of faith and obedience will jeopardize our claims to the riches of the inheritance of the holy ones in light. Paul tells us a number of times that "He is faithful" who made the promise. God demands faith, on the part of the creature, in his promises, and he who says "it makes no difference what we believe," sets at naught the promises of God, and makes null the glorious gospel of Christ.

In order to see the importance of faith in the promises of God I will single out the one relating to the inheritance of the land of Canaan. This promise was made to Abraham and to Christ, the one seed. Gal. iii. 17, and through Christ to all true believers. "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." verse 29. This promise of the everlasting inheritance, carrying with it the promise of everlasting life, was designed for both Jew and Gentile. "But the Scripture hath concluded all under sin that the promise, by faith of Jesus Christ, might be given to them that believe." verses 21 and 22. This promise is given to all of Abraham's seed by faith, and this implies accepting it by faith. To say that this promise pertains to the natural seed, under the law covenant, and is not a matter of faith in Christ, is a virtual rejection of the Abrahamic faith and invalidates the claim to heirship with Christ so far as this promise is concerned. Abraham embraced this promise. See Heb. xi. 8 and 9, and especially 13. Christ embraced it, for Paul testifies that "He was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God to confirm the promises made unto the fathers," Rom. xv. 8, including this one under consideration.

God is faithful. He does not lightly regard his own word. He has pledged himself by covenant and oath to fulfill his word. This being true it follows that we are to esteem his promises of greater value than rubies. To treat them with indifference, to scoff at those holding a childish faith in them, and to change the time and place of their fulfillment; and further, to do what is done by many religionists who profess to tremble at God's word, substitute their own fancies for these exceeding precious promises, will surely incur God's displeasure. These remarks are designed to show the importance of belief in what God has promised. Indeed, this is absolutely essential to a belief of the gospel, for this is made up of promises mainly, and if these are not accepted by faith as they stand recorded in the written revelation, they are not accepted at all.

I started out with the subject, "The issue of the faith." This is the Diaglott rendering of a part of my text. The issue of the faith is the fulfillment of gospel promises relating to the future state of believers. All these good things are proffered to us as gifts of God's grace and mercy in the Lord our Savior. They come through him. They do not descend to us by natural birthright. Our faith must have reference to them. All christian effort and labor, suffering and patience find their reward in them. Hope of martyrs and prophets was set aglow by the light of the promised glory. That which constituted the hope of patriarch and prophet, apostle and martyr, is the hope of the believer to-day. God do s not change his plan and purpose to suit the fancies and metaphysical speculations of men. "There is one hope," says Paul. This stands with the unity of God the Father. Raise a doubt about the one, then may you call in question the other. The realization of the hope will be the realization of the promises of the gospel. Whatever men of Bible times and primitive christianity embraced, believed, hoped for, gave a reason for, looked and prayed for, serves to cheer and comfort the few who are now looking for speedy redemption. God, in the gospel of his Son, has promised eternal life. "In hope of eternal, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began." Tit. i. 2. When will it be given? "In the world (age) to come eternal life." Mark x. 30. When will the martyr be rewarded with life? "Whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it." Matt. xvi. 25. When? "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels, and then shall he reward every man according to his works," verse 27. John says: "And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life." 1 John ii. 25. "And this life is in his Son." v. 11. "Hid with Christ in God." Col. iii. 3. "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye, also, appear with him in glory." verse 4.

This lively hope, or hope of life, was begotten in us by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. With this life comes the incorruptible inheritance and the salvation which Peter says is "ready," or prepared "to be revealed in the last time." 1 Pet. i. 5. To those who seek for glory, honor and immortality, God will render eternal life (Ro. ii. 7) in the day when he shall judge the secrets of men, by Jesus Christ, according to Paul's gospel. 16 verse. When will that be? "Therefore judge nothing before the time until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the councils of the hearts." 1 Cor. iv. 5. To say that we have immortality and eternal life by creation, is contradicting the record, setting aside the promise, and is, certainly, to this extent, preaching another gospel; and those who thus preach incur a risk.

"The salvation of your souls," announced in my text, does not take place till the last time when the things, spoken of by Peter, in the 4th and 5th verses, shall be revealed. The style of the writers of the epistles to the churches differs very widely in one respect from that of letters written to churches at the present day by many claiming to be sound in the faith. The spired letter writers continually direct our faith and hope to the Lord's coming as the point in time where eternal, deathless and fadeless things set in. They are eschatologists. They couple the fulfillment of not one of the promises with what is termed the "intermediate state." Let us hear Peter again in this opening chapter on the issue of the faith. These christian strangers are represented by him as greatly rejoicing in this hope, although at that time they were passing under severe trials. Now, when will this faith, tried as gold is tried in fire, be rewarded? "That the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ." verse 7. In the 13th verse, the appeal in his exhortation is based upon this glorious outcome of the faith. "Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace to be brought unto at the revelation of Jesus Christ." I marvel that popular christianity does not discover its mistake. There is plainly a departure from the faith in reference to the hope of the apostolic church. From the pulpit and press, from synod and conference, from divinity schools and seminaries, from men eminent for learning and piety, and from the class meeting and prayer circle, comes up a voice that jars like discord with the voice of the prophets. The hymnology of the present time is carefully compiled suitably to this notion of judgment and reward at death. While we do not expect to bring the churches back en masse to the old paths, we do expect to win some from among them over to the blessed truth that Jesus is soon coming to verify the ancient promises. To this end may we labor in love.

As amber attracts a straw, so does beauty admiration, which only lasts while the warmth continues; but virtue, goodness, wisdom and real worth, like loadstones, never lose their power. These are the true graces, which, as Homer feigns, are linked and tied hand in hand because it is by their influence that human hearts are so firmly united to each other.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christian King at its head, and the immortal rulers as Presidents with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the translation of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a living belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

What it is to Be a Christian.

To be a Christian, is to change our relationship from an alien, to a child of God. The alien is indifferent, the child's heart is full of affection. The alien is without hope, the child is an heir. In Christ all things are ours. We are "redeemed with the precious blood of Christ."

The foreigner, if a true man, if in earnest in changing his relationship, on becoming naturalized, loves his adopted country, loves to obey her laws, defend her rights, and trust his safety to her strong right arm. He loves her, because she has become his country, because she has given him citizenship, with all the pleasures, immunities and privileges belonging to the home-born child. Her banner is his banner; her laws are his laws; her interests are his interests. So it is with the alien from the commonwealth of Israel. Let him change his relationship, let him become by faith a citizen of the world to come, let him hold in his hand the naturalization papers that give him citizenship in a renewed earth, let him feel that the laws of that country are his laws, that its promised ruler is his redeemer, that its God is his God, and he will endure every manner of privation, rather than give up his purchased birthright.

Just so with the adopted child. He was an orphan. He had no one to care for him, no one to love him. But a dear Christian pair saw him in his grief and loneliness. They felt for him in his wretched condition, wandering through the thronged streets, hungry, homeless, and half-clad. They said to him, "Come with us, and you shall have bread and clothes and home." "Come and abide with us and be our child, and all that we have shall be yours. No matter about your despised name, you shall take our name. It is a worthy one. It will shield you like a fortress from your foes. No matter about your degradation, the misstep you have made, we will lift you up, and put you in the right way. Your condition is a hopeless one, but it shall be changed. You shall have peace and rest now, and the promise of a sure inheritance when you come to manhood." How that child's heart bounded within him as he heard the glad news! And how joy and love fills his heart when he once becomes an inmate of that happy family. When the conditions of adoption are complied with and he is really a child and an heir! What warm affections are enkindled within him to know that all this has been done out of love and pity for him! That he has now a dear father and mother to love, and to love him who will do all in their power for his welfare and happiness. He loves them with all his heart. He loves them because they first loved him. He loves them because they have made him their child, and because of all the good things they have, and will bestow upon him. He knows the things promised are sure, because they are people of truth, and because they have given him their name and made him their son. He yields a ready, implicit obedience to all their commands, because he has faith in their word, and that faith must make itself known by deeds of love. He obeys them, works for them, because he believes in them. He came when they called, because he believed. He complied with the conditions of adoption because he believed. His manner of life, his conversation, e'en his inmost thoughts are moulded in accordance with their expressed desires, and in view of the promised inheritance. He would please them in all things. He would make himself worthy of the exalted name he bears; worthy of the inheritance.

Just so it is with us. We were orphans. We were without God and without hope in the world. We were poor and blind and naked. We had no power to save ourselves. We could not ransom our souls from the power of the grave. We could not get out from under the sentence of condemnation through any power of our own. The law made us guilty before God, the law condemned us to death. There was the inheritance, made sure by him who conquered death, ratifying by his blood the everlasting covenant to all God's loyal children. But we were not children. We could have no part in the decded inheritance. There was eternal life made sure to all the adopted ones by him who died and rose again, and who has the keys of death and of the death-state. But we were not children; we could have no hope of future life. There were the crowns, the glory promised to the victors in the race. But we were not children. We could not lawfully strive. But we heard the voice of Jesus when "out on the hills away, away from the streets of gold." He said, "Come!" "I have the words of eternal life." "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." "Because I live, ye shall live also." "I have ratified by my death the everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure." "I have broken down the middle wall of the partition between Gentile and Jew." I have set you over, where you may with Abraham and his seed, become heirs of the inheritance through the righteousness of faith. "Come! take my name! Be adopted into my Father's family. Become a child, become an heir. Lay hold of the promises. The inheritance shall be yours. 'The meek shall inherit the earth.' 'The willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land.' 'Put off the old man and put on the new.' 'The blood of Christ cleanseth from all iniquity.' Come! and all things are yours. The inheritance is yours, the eternal life is yours, the crowns are yours, the glory is yours; all as a gift, all bought with the precious blood of Christ! Come! that you may be rich. Come! that you may be clothed! 'Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard; neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive of the things God hath prepared for them that love him.'" We heard the voice. We believed the tidings. We took the name. We received the pardon. We passed out from under the sentence of condemnation. We accepted the promises. And oh! joy! we are children now! We are "sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty," heirs of the kingdom, and of the hope and promise of eternal life. Our relationship is changed. We can say our Father now. The old things are passed away. We are no longer at enmity with God. All things have become new.

As the child's affections for his parents proceed from the simple fact of the relationship, so our love to God grows out of our relationship to him. "We love him because he first loved us;" because he brought us into that relationship by the blood and righteousness of his Son. We love him, because when we were aliens, enemies, rebels, he opened a way whereby we might become the sons of God. We "were redeemed (restored) by the precious blood of Christ as of a lamb without blemish and without spot." In the entombing waters our guilt has been washed away and we have risen with Christ to walk in a new life. He has delivered us from the bondage of fear. We are no longer in dread of the monster death, for his chains have been broken for Christ, and they shall be broken for us, by him who hath been made priest after the power of an endless life.

And now, that we are children, now that we have tasted that the Lord is gracious, now that we have come unto him as unto a living stone, and as lively stones, have been built into a spiritual house, and are an holy priesthood offering up spiritual sacrifices to God, we must lay aside all malice, and all guile and all hypocrisies and envies and evil speakings, and as new-born babes desire the sincere milk of the Word that we may grow thereby. Until the evil is laid aside, we cannot hope to have the holy desires. The world's praise and blame are naught to us now, so that we stand approved of God. "Not their honors do we court, not their plaudits do we crave." Yet we are to walk honestly toward them that are without, that the Word of the Lord be not condemned. And to walk honestly, we must be ever on guard. The heart is deceitful, and must be watched lest it lead us astray. There must be no evil speaking. The tongue must be bridled. The heart and the tongue must both be converted to God, and must be kept in subjection to the law of his Word. There must be no enmities, no dread, lest another supplant or undermine us. We are all servants of Christ, and as such, must serve one another in love. "To be carnally minded is death." If we speak evil, if we hate, if we envy, if we harbor malice, if we are unforgiving, we are carnally minded—and the end of these things is death. The works of the flesh cannot be indulged in the heart, if the heavenly affections would be kept alive. We are exhorted to holiness because we have been born again; not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God which liveth and abideth forever. The motive to holiness springs out of the new relationship in which we stand to God. We are "to walk in newness of life." "be at peace among ourselves." "Live peaceably with all men." "Be ye holy for I am holy." "Crucify your affections and lusts." "Desire the sincere milk of the Word." The new-born babe grows when fed from its proper fountain. No other food can so sustain its life. The Christian grows when he comes to the Word. He cannot grow unless he does come to the Word. He can grow on nothing else. Other things may help him, but his food must come from God. There, in the Word that testifies of Jesus, is the water, which, if we drink, we shall never thirst; but it shall be in us a well of water springing up into everlasting life. "The first food of the new creature is Christ Jesus, is that which comes from God himself in his blessed Word. Books, preachings and Christian society are a delight and a benefit; but to grow, we must "search the Scriptures," must "dig as for hid treasures." There we can learn of Jesus. There we can get acquainted with him. There we can learn to abide in him. It is a blessed thing to abide in Jesus, to have an immovable dwelling place. I have found it so. I have found him precious. I have found rest in him. I have found peace in him. "These things have I spoken," says Jesus, "that in me ye might have peace." "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." "And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." But how may we abide in Jesus? How make him our sure dwelling place? "If ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love." Every man that hath heard and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me." "If a man love me he will keep my words." If we would abide in Jesus, we must hold to the truth, his Word must abide in us. We must keep the faith as Paul kept it. "The object of all truth, is, that we may grow thereby." But the mere knowledge of truth will not make us grow. There must be the visible testimony in our lives. The malice must be lain aside; the evil speakings must be laid aside. If we hate those who have injured us, either in appearance, or in reality, that hate will blight every spiritual bud. If we suffer ourselves to speak evil of our fellow-servants, we shall kill all our spiritual life. We "must lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us, and run with patience, the race set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith." Jesus is the author of our faith, and we must look to him; he is the finisher of our faith, and we must look to him. He is our advocate with the Father, and "if we abide in him, and his words abide in us, we may ask what we will and it shall be done unto us." What a blessed promise to those who abide in Jesus and keep his words. We must look unto Jesus. The closet must not be forgotten. If we do not love to pray, there is something wrong. If we do not love heavenly things, there is something wrong. We must pray always, lifting up holy hands, without wrath or doubting. In everything, we must give thanks.

The holding of God's truth imposes great and awful responsibilities upon us. We may not sit down in selfish security, feeling that we are saved, when we have learned the truth, obeyed the truth. There are others to be saved, and their blood will be required at our hands, if the message committed unto us, be not faithfully sounded out. We are set as lights in the world, and unless we grow, unless we let our light shine, our candlestick will be taken out of its place.

We know when God is the light of our countenance. And the world knows it. We know, too, when the light is gone. And the world knows it just as quickly. They cannot tell what is wrong between us and our heavenly Father, but something is gone. The visible mark is no longer upon us. It cannot be seen that "we have been with Jesus."

We must deal all the time with Jesus, and then our hearts and lips will be full of his love, and we can come to say with a martyred saint of England, "none but Jesus, none but Jesus."

We must take up our cross daily, our hearts, our treasures, our service must be given to God. We must bear testimony for him, we must lean upon him, we must hold up his truth. The eye of faith must behold what Jesus is to us, what a divine power there is in him, through his Word to make us what we ought to be, and what we must be, to meet him in peace in the day of his coming.

"Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee!"

Christ is the foundation to build on. The best, the strongest house, is built of stones on the solid rock. We are to be stones, built on this rock foundation. How firm in the faith we must be, how faithful in all Christian duties, if we would be lively stones in that beautiful house of God's building! We must be obedient disciples. Jesus is a stone of stumbling and rock of offense to the disobedient. They "stumble at the Word" being disobedient. To know the truth, we must put it in practice. Experience is the best test. "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." There comes in the blessedness,—the blessedness of knowing that we belong to Jesus, and that he is ours. If we would be living Christians, we must take hold and do. The love will come then, the peace will come then, the restful conscience will come then. But we must not only lay aside all evil things that we may desire the sincere milk of the Word and may grow thereby, we must not only work and pray, but we must watch and wait for the coming of Jesus. Where love exists, there will be strong desire to be with the Lord. "A longing for the coming of Christ is the experience of every Christian who sincerely loves him," says one of our Dunkard friends. And, oh! what an incentive it is to right living! The Lord is at hand! We care not to lay up treasures here. The Lord is at hand! and we must be found, giving the meat in due season to the household. We must hold all things loosely; we must not set our affections on the treasures of earth; we must not be covetous, but must be found ministering to the necessities of the saints, feeding the hungry and clothing the poor, and giving of our means for the spread of the truth. The Lord is at hand! That thought must nerve our arms for the work, must strengthen our hearts for endurance. Men may mock at our confidence, they may despise our faith, they may scoff at the truth, but the time is soon coming when "the refuge of lies will be swept away." The truth will stand, when tried in the fire. He who believes as he pleases because it is expedient, will find himself disrobed in that day, with no pure jewels of truth to present to the blessed One. Nothing but truth will stand the test.

We do not, as professed followers of Christ, live enough in the prospect of that day. The more we live in it, the more will there be in us of the mind that was in Christ. "To the eye that eutches the brightness of the sun all earthly things are dark." "If the glory that is before us, fills the eye of faith, everything of this world will become eclipsed." We shall use everything that we have, in reference to that day, and all our work will be done with an energy and an exhilation born of the love that looks to "the soon and forever" for its reward.

Suggestions.

Suggestion I. "His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of (his) government and peace (there shall be) no end." Isa. ix. 6, 7.

"Everlasting Father." It, in the Hebrew, the word rendered everlasting is a noun, would it not be better to say age Father, or Father pertaining to the age, the Father of the future age?

"Of the increase of his government." How can Messiah's government increase? It should be rendered "Of the increase of the governed."

Suggestion II. "And there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become (the kingdoms) of our Lord, and of his Christ." Rev. xi. 15.

"Kingdoms." Our translation uses this word twice, the Greek once. We should never use the Italic words, where they do not agree with the inspired word. Our translators carry out the idea that the Kingdoms of the world are to be converted—not destroyed. The God of heaven is to set up a kingdom.

Suggestion III. Use of symbols. Before we can read we learn our alphabet. Then we combine these symbols of sound into words and sentences which form symbols of thought. Thus m is the symbol of a certain elementary sound, a that of another, and n that of a third sound. No particular idea or thought is conveyed by either, by itself. Combine them and you form the symbol of an idea—man.

So of prophetic symbols. We should first learn their alphabet, and then combine the letters. Prophetic symbols are numerous, but their laws are few. Prophetic symbols are generally explained in the Bible. To read them correctly we must study the science of symbols. To read intelligently the books of Daniel and Revelation, we must understand the science of symbols. Of what value are interpretations of those books where the laws of symbolization are violated? And how shall we know them without study? Before we pretend to understand Hebrew or Greek we learn their alphabet, and spend years in examining their words—symbols of thought.

Symbolic language has its laws of construction, as well as literal reading, yet we have many expositors of our symbolic Scriptures who never learned its alphabet. It is a very interesting exercise to examine every word in our Scripture lessons, to ascertain whether it is literal or figurative. If figurative, name the figure and its laws. In that way we become intelligent readers.

Suppose our Scripture lesson to be Isa. ii. 2, 3, 4: "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the tops of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it."

This will be sufficient for explanation. In looking over the quotation, the words are literal till you come to "mountain." This word is sometimes literal, and sometimes symbolical or figurative. Which is it here? It is not seen in vision, nor is any attribute given it that it may not have as a literal mountain; and as every word must have its literal sense unless forced from it, we say that it is literal. Mountain in Dan. ii. 34, 44, is seen in vision, and is an actor; but in Isa. ii. 2, the mountain is not seen in vision, is not an actor, nor has it any foreign attribute; it is, therefore, a literal mountain, the mountain on which the Lord's house was formerly erected—Mount Zion. This is elevated, so that it looms up above the surrounding mountains, and forms the exalted seat of Messiah's reign of subjugation.

"And all nations shall flow unto it." Flow is an attribute of fluids—not of nations, but as fluids move in bodies, under the law of attraction, so the people will gravitate toward Mount Zion, to see and adore the Great King in his beauty.

In verse 4 the law is said to go forth—to walk—an attribute not inherent in laws, but in those that carry edicts. "Go" is, therefore, figurative.

The metallic image, Dan. ii., is symbolic, because seen in vision, and because it is expressly declared that the gold, silver, brass, iron and clay are kingdoms. The metallic image is not a system of nations, but metals—taken from the metallic world to represent a resembling combination in the political world. Analogy is the great law of symbolization. Not being agents in this vision their wealth is symbolized.

In Dan. vii. these four great monarchies are seen as acting agents. Their rulers are actors. Acting, resembling agents must symbolize them. They must be like them in character and agency. Hence the propriety of the first three beasts. The fourth monarchy had so many bodies of civil rulers, with such a complex character that no real beast could be found to symbolize. Daniel, therefore, sees a monster with iron teeth, seven heads, and ten horns.

Beasts (wild beasts) and horns represent bodies of civil rulers, and are masculine; cities and women, bodies of ecclesiastical rulers. The eyes and mouth of the little horn are ecclesiastical.

The great law of symbols requires that the symbol be taken from one class, and the thing symbolized from another but resembling class. Illustration: Hold a mirror so that the agents and objects may be seen reflected from its surface. The mirror agents and their actions are not the real agents and actions, but simply their reflections. Between the two classes there is an exact likeness. If the mirror is perfect, as the one looks and acts, so does the other.

God holds such a mirror before the prophets. We call it a prophetic mirror.

The agents seen by the prophets will exist or have existed, and their characters and acts will correspond.

Objects and agents seen in vision are symbols.

We have not room to name all the laws of symbols. Those, however, that we have mentioned, are very general in their application.

God and Jesus are both seen in vision, but as there are no beings in the universe analogous to them, and, consequently, no resembling class, they symbolize themselves.

Nations and bodies of civil rulers are symbolized in some visions by rivers and seas. But in the same vision those rulers and nations cannot be symbolized by anything else. A nation at the same time cannot represent a wild beast and waters. Nor can a symbolic agent be, at the same time, the symbol of a symbol.

One other principle should be noticed: Explanations of symbols are not symbols. Some may think that this rule is violated in Rev. xvii. 9, Heads and mountains symbolize the same nations. True; but they are not in the same vision. John had seen the woman sitting on the (mountains) waters, ver. 15, in the midst of the waters were seven mountains. In this vision she sits on a scarlet colored wild beast. The passages are correctly translated.

The seven heads are seven mountains, where, (in which vision) the woman sitteth upon them (waters) verse 15, and are seven kings (bodies of rulers.)

These suggestions are preparatory to some remarks on Dan. vii. 9, 11, 20-28.

J. P. WEETH.

Most marvelous and enviable is that fecundity of fancy which can adorn whatever it touches, which can invest naked fact and dry reasoning with an unlooked for beauty, make flowrets bloom even upon the very brink of the precipice, and when no better can be had, can turn the very substance of the rock itself into moss and lichen. This faculty is incomparably the most important for the vivid and attractive exhibitions of truth to the minds of men.

From the stars of heaven, and the flowers of earth;
From the pageant of power, and the voice of mirth;
From the inlet of the morn on the mountain's brow;
From childhood's song and affection's vow;
From all, save eternity's endless day,
There breathes but one record—"Passing Away!"

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 30, 1877.

BROTHER REED expects to attend the meeting at Mendon, Mich., commencing this week.

WE hope our brethren everywhere will make an extra effort to attend the June meeting at Argos. Let this be one of the best meetings ever held in the state. Come and stay until the meeting closes. The brethren at Argos are prepared to accommodate all who come.

BROTHER REED lectured yesterday (Sunday 27,) to perhaps as large a concourse as ever gathered in Marshall county, to any meeting not of an extraordinary character. He was invited to lecture in the large Dunkard meeting house, about six miles west of Plymouth, on the Eastern question in the light of prophecy. There is a growing interest to hear on the signs of the times and the increasing evidences that a change of dispensation is near. There were probably one thousand persons present to hear.

QUITE a number of papers will be sent out this week with a written address and a cross marked on the wrapper. This will serve to notify our brethren and friends that the time for which they have paid is expired. We shall probably send postal cards to our brethren and others, notifying them just when their time was out. We hope all will renew at once, as by so doing we shall be able to continue the RESTITUTION weekly to all. The times are critical, and the Lord's cause demands help and sacrifice on our part as well as personal consecration.

IT has fallen to our lot to be living in the grandest period of human history. Humanity has been on trial for six thousand years. It has developed extraordinary intellectual and inventive capabilities, but in morals and ability for righteous rule, is found sadly wanting. Divine influences must mold each heart, and a Heavenly Rulership control mankind every where before the world will become the abode of peace and happiness. A divine ruler is soon coming to govern this world in righteousness. Ultimately this earth will be filled with holy and happy intelligences and God's purpose in creation be realized.

WHILE there is much that is important in the news from the seat of war, there has, as yet, been no decisive battle fought either in Europe or Asia. The Russians are massing a strong force along the Danube and at the same time reinforcing the army in Armenia. So far as movements in Europe are concerned, the Autocrat seems to heed the rule "Slow and Sure." The Turkish armies in Asia meet with success at times but are said to be in a deplorable condition. It is thought that the chief difficulties that the Russians will have to encounter will be those of country and climate. Still the Turks are courageous and patient and may withstand the armies of the North beyond all anticipation. The conflict will be of a sanguinary character without any doubt.

Jonah and the Great Fish.

The story of Jonah is one of special interest to the young. The "great fish," (called ketos in the Septuagint and in the Greek of Matt. xii. 40) was not a whale (as our version renders ketos in Matt. xii. 40,) for the whale is extremely rare in the Mediterranean, and has too small a throat to swallow a man. The word ketos is a general term for any large fish. It here probably refers to the large white shark which is found in the Mediterranean, and which has been known to swallow a man whole. Muller, a natural historian of repute, relates that in 1758, a sailor fell from a frigate sailing in that sea. A shark took him into his wide throat so that he disappeared. The captain ordered a gun discharged at the fish, and the ball struck it so that it vomited up the sailor, who was picked up by his comrades alive and very little hurt. The shark was captured and exhibited by the sailor in many cities of Europe. It was twenty feet long, and weighed three thousand nine hundred and twenty four pounds.—S. S. World.

The early age of life is often passed in sowing in the mind the vices that are most suitable to the inclination; the middle age goes on in nourishing and maturing these vices; and the last age concludes in gathering in pain and anguish the bitter fruits of these most accursed seeds.

Many kind acts are often lavished upon unworthy human beings, who repay them with the most mortifying ingratitude; but this should not discourage a man from continuing to do good.

Exegetical.

Notes on 1 Cor. xv. 36-44.

I. The subject of the resurrection from the dead, as treated in the above chapter, is as sublime in its doctrine, as fundamental to faith, as it is important in the solemnity, richness, and fulness of the details worthy of such a mighty truth. We have abounding cause for praise to the riches of the grace of our God, for having placed his children in possession of the power of refuting the many varied and subtle attempts of the adversary to overthrow the faith and hope of Christianity. His hostility has ever been, and is ceaselessly directed against this doctrine; which, however artfully Satan may endeavor to induce some to treat it as secondary to the vital truths of redemption, the apostle calls it emphatically "The Gospel;" and so indeed it is, and it needs but a glance at verses 16 and 17, to be assured of the gravity of the fact. "If the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain: ye are yet in your sins." Well would it be if evangelists would point persistently to a risen and accepted Christ, who has "entered within the vail" in the power of the Eternal Spirit, and presented himself, as the spotless sin-offering before the throne of inflexible justice, to God, who demanded death as "the wages of sin;" but who has received his beloved Son back from the grave, having exhausted the penalty, satisfied the throne of divine righteousness, and obtained eternal salvation for all who believe. Here the blood shed upon the cross finds its true place and efficacy, viz., In the presence of God, who in wisdom and equity appointed it as the judicial power for the obliteration of sin and sins. Hence it is there only that the believing sinner can realize conciousness of freedom from sin, and reconciliation.

But it is not my intention to pursue the subject of the resurrection in this aspect, but to bring before the reader an interpretation of verses 36-38, 42-46, which has commended itself to me, and doubtless may prove acceptable to such as may not have seen it, in clearing a difficulty that confessedly had rested on those verses. I read it in a work lent to me by a friend some years ago, the name of which I have forgotten, but having a few notes, I will endeavor to place the exposition as plainly on record as I can.

II. In substance it is as follows: There was an objection raised against the resurrection of the dead by the opponents of the apostle Paul. "Some men will say, How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" It is likely that these objectors did not deny the future life altogether, but only that of the body. Being, perhaps, as many are now, popularly, traditionally, and philosophically satisfied of the immortality of the soul (arguments fallacious and delusive) they were on this account the more unwilling to receive the doctrine of the resurrection of the body, because that could not be made out by any similar course of reasoning. There always have been those who measure the power of God by the standard of human minds, and are loth to admit what those human intellects cannot explain. Such persons are most likely to have raised the above question.

They might witness the decay of the body, and ask if its component particles of dust are to be brought together again at the resurrection, so as to constitute the same body, "How are the dead raised, and with what body do they come?" The apostle reproaches them with starting a difficulty no greater than lies against the ordinary operations of nature; as, for instance, the growth of a plant from a seed sown.

III. It is the prevailing opinion that the very same particles of bodily substance that are laid in the grave are re-gathered and re-united at the resurrection, so as to form the same body as before death. But in the first place, this, as Paul says, would be a body of "flesh and blood," which cannot inherit. Verses 44, 50.

The illustration he gives tends to show that, whilst indeed it will be the same person, it will not be the same body. "It is sown a natural body" of flesh and blood, "it is raised a spiritual body" of flesh and bones and spirit. The personality still remaining the same.

The illustration is that of a seed sown. Verses 36-38. Now we know that a plant raised from a seed is a very different thing from the seed sown, both in form and structure. The seed is mainly destroyed as to its structure, being decomposed, whilst a certain amount of it remains to give vitality to the germ of the forthcoming plant. It does not follow that the cases of the body and the plant are strictly the same: nevertheless Paul uses the simile as far as it may be applied. "That which thou sowest is not quickened except it die," and he evidently alludes to the saying of the Lord Jesus in John xii. 24, reminding us that it is not a plant that is sown, but only a seed. "Thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain," (mere seed). "God giveth it a body, as it hath pleased him; to every seed its own body." Verses 37, 38. The resurrection body therefore must differ in many respects from the present body of flesh and blood. Verses 42-44.

IV. The expression "sown in corruption" (en phthora—corruptible, liable to corruption,)* and "sown in weakness," leads some to the supposition that the apostle refers to the committal of the dead body to the ground; but the context shows that this can scarcely have been his meaning. It is the present living body that he is contrasting with the resurrection body. He speaks of "weakness," liability to corrupt, as the Greek implies, not actual moldering corruption of the grave. "There is," he says, "a natural body," which word should be an animal body, composed of animal or creature life and elements, (Gen. ii. 7, † with i. 21, 24,) such a body as Adam had at first, "of the earth, earthy." 1 Cor. xv. 47. This differs from "the spiritual body." The two are derived from different stocks, the one from the living earthy creature, "the first man Adam," the other from "the last Adam, the life-giving spirit." Here, then, is a contrast between two frames in life, not between a dead and living body.

V. If we are speaking of the burial of a dead body, it is not correct to say that "it is sown," for seed sown has life in it, that it may grow. In the case of a buried body, the animal life has departed. But if we take the "sowing" to refer, not to burial, but to the origin of the present body, its entrance into this life, then the apostle's words are clear and intelligible. We are sown, brought upon the earth, to grow and multiply in creature frames. With such, the incorruptible and glorious body which Christ will give at the resurrection are fitly contrasted. See the following illustrations. The prophet Hosea, writing of the restoration of Israel, says: "I will sow her unto me in the earth; and I will have mercy upon her that had not obtained mercy; and I will say, Thou art my people." Chap. ii. 23. Ezekiel, writing to the same effect, says: "Behold, I am for you, and I will turn unto you; and ye shall be tilled and sown; and I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel." Chap. xxxvi. 9, 10. Zechariah follows in the same strain: "I will hiss for them, and gather them; for I have redeemed them; and they shall increase as they have increased. And I will sow them among the people." Chap. x. 8, 9.

It is verse 37 of the 15th of 1 Corinthians that gives the idea of burial to sowing. But look at it again. "That which thou sowest is not quickened"—made alive as to its new body—"except it die." The breaking up of the structure of the seed he calls death, figuratively. It is like death or dissolution. But he does not say, "unless it corrupt," but, "unless it die." If this be so, the corresponding change in our present bodies is our death. The seed is sown, then dies, then springs up again. Apply this to man. First sown in the earth (see above references), then dies, then quickened and raised. Now this will not bear comparison with a mere corpse. That cannot die; it is dead before it is put in the earth. The spirit which is to animate a better frame must be separated from the present animal earthy frame, as the germ is from the husk of the seed, before it can re-animate the resurrection body.

There could have been no thought of corruption when the Lord made use of the simile of the seed dying. John xii. 24. He compared himself living to a "corn" or seed "of wheat," which must die in order to be fruitful in producing, not his own body only, but himself, head, and members; the Christ of God, according to 1 Corinthians xii. 12; the result of resurrection from the dead.

VI. It is not necessary for a body to be the same, that it be composed of the same particles of matter; neither, in order to constitute the same person, is it necessary that the body should have the same strict form or qualities. This is evident from the growth of the man from the child. The man who was an infant is the same person still.

Throughout the whole of Scripture there is no such phrase as "the resurrection of the body," as if that identical flesh and bones must reappear. The Word of Truth speaks only of "the resurrection from the dead," or "from amongst the dead," of being "changed," "clothed upon," &c. The body of resurrection will be in the form and similitude of the body of glory of the Son of God! Phil. iii. 21. Does any one think that such body will be like the present one? "Now," says an apostle, "are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." Many powers, mental and moral, and many wondrous faculties, lie dormant within the mysterious organization of the soul, that need but the "quickening Spirit" to bring them forth in surpassing lustre and glory, thus assimilating and conforming these powers to the "building of God, our house from heaven."—H. Goodwyn, in Rainbow.

* Contrasted with aphthorsia, not liable to corruption.

† For "living soul" read "living creature." The same original word throughout.

The Wheat and Tares.

Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field. But while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way. But when the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also. So the servants of the householder came and said unto him, Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? From whence then hath it tares? He said unto them, An enemy hath done this. The servants said unto him, Will thou then that we go and gather them up? But he said, Nay; lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them. Let both grow together until the harvest: and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them; but gather the wheat into my barn. Matt. xiii. 24-30.

Then Jesus sent the multitude away, and went into the house: and his disciples came unto him, saying, Declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field. He answered and said unto them, He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man; the field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world; and the reapers are the angels. As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; And shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear. Matt. xiii. 36-43.

Notwithstanding the Savior, from verse 37-43 gave an exposition of the above parable contained in verses 24-30, yet there is none among the many parables which he spoke been made more obscure. It is due, however, to state that this obscurity does not arise out of any indefinite manner in which Jesus spoke, in the explanation, but out of the many interpretations which men have given, and a non-observance of what Jesus said.

In reference to the parable, there are few self-evident points which arise out of the language, to be admitted by all. These are:

1. That there are two great influences which are, into the human heart, depositors of seeds.

2. That these seeds deposited in the human heart after their kinds produce heirs for the objects designed.

3. That these heirs, as the seeds for their production are there sown, arise and grow together in the field—the world—*kosmos—order.

4. That at some period during this kosmos, these heirs will be separated, the one class rewarded and the other reprimanded.

5. That this kosmos—order—in, and during which the seed is sown, the heirs produced and are made to grow, and out of which the tares are gathered, is the kingdom of heaven. See verses 24, 41.

With these points before us, the great question now is, Is the kingdom of heaven—of God—of Christ—now, or is it future? Upon this point as a fulcrum turns the interpretation of the parable. If the kingdom is now, then the production, growth and separation of the children produced, pertain to this age—aion. But if the kingdom period is in its organization and organic work future, then the sowing season, production, growth, and gathering are all future and pertain to other generations than those of this aion—age.

That the kingdom is now, and therefore the above points pertaining to the parable belong to this aion—age, out of and connected with the subject matter, either directly or indirectly of the parable, three arguments are submitted:

1. That the force of the word "this," found in verse 40, (As, therefore, the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this aionos—age.)

2. That as the devil is the depositor of the seed for the wicked ones, verse 39, (The enemy that sowed them is the devil,) and is to be burned at the close of this—the present age, at the advent of Christ; see Rev. xx. 1-3; therefore he will not, and cannot, have an opportunity of performing the work herein ascribed to him, in the next age.

3. That the kingdom pertains to this present age must be true from the consideration that Paul addressed persons at Colosse and told them that they had been translated into the kingdom, (And hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son" Col. i. 13.)

That the first of these arguments is incorrect, and without any foundation, is discoverable when we give attention to the date of the parable. According to the popular chronology, the parable was spoken A. D. 31, whereas the Jewish aion—age—world, ended two years later, at the cross. Therefore if the Savior used the word touton, which means this, that, he, she, it, denoting present time and present order, as the word this indicates, then he unmistakably had reference to the Jewish aionos—age. But if he used the word touton in the sense of that as a specifying word, then it simply refers to the kingdom age, whenever that age may occur, and cannot with any degree of propriety be applied to the present age unless it can be shown clearly from other circumstances and Scriptures that the organic work of the kingdom is now. It is but reasoning in a circle, and the weakest of the weak to argue that the organic work of the kingdom is now, because of the force of the word this in the text, and then in turn that this is the proper word in the text because the organic work of the kingdom is now.

That the second argument is without any force is also plain when the fact is brought forward that the terms, devil, serpent, and dragon, are but the symbols used to denote the power of paganism. Like the government of the United States in adopting the stars and stripes as their ensign, and floating them to the breeze as a national banner, so paganism, in all lands, selected the serpent as an ensign suitable to represent their religion. That these words—devil, Satan, serpent, and dragon—are used symbolically, representing paganism, is plain to be seen in the xii. of the same book of Revelation. Then the xx. 1-3, but teaches that the benign influence of the Savior's kingdom when organized will restrain and drive back paganism. But that there will be other opposing powers and evil characters after the kingdom is established, the new-earth order introduced and the city becomes the home of the resurrected and immortalized saint, is evident from the fact that without are dogs, sorcerers, and whoremongers, ; the nations (literal nations) bring their glory, wealth and honor into it. Rev. xxi., xxii. Again, after the Lord becomes King over the whole earth, Zech. xiv. 9., then "it shall come to pass that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem, shall go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feasts of tabernacles, (a monumental institution in memory of the rebuilding of David's tabernacle. Acts xv. 13-17; Amos ix. 8-15.) Zech. xiv. 16.

Once more, after the new earth order is introduced, "there will be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man who hath not filled his days, for the child shall die a hundred years old, but the sinner being a hundred years old shall be accursed." Isa. lxv. 20. Therefore, it is discernible that even after the new earth order is introduced evil will still be in existence, and as a cause may produce evil ones as tares.

That the third argument is but based upon an expression of synechdoche—where a part is put for the whole—is evident, when Col. i. 13, is compared with other Scriptures speaking upon the kingdom. Another case of the kind upon the same subject, is Luke xvi. 16, where the gospel of the kingdom was preached and men simply embraced it. The synechdoche is a very common figure in Scripture; and also that particular form which occurs in Col. i. 13, is of frequent use. A few occurrences of the kind may not be out of place, and will serve to give light on this text.

1. Jesus says: "He that believeth on me hath everlasting life." Yet when we compare this expression with Rom. ii. 6, 7; Gal. vi. 8; Luke xviii. 28-30, it is evident that only the promise was put for the whole.

2. Rom. viii. 14-16, seems to teach that disciples are already actual heirs of God, but verse 17 shows that the heirship is still suspended upon a condition; and also Luke xx. 36, shows that one must be a child of the resurrection from the dead to be a child of God. Therefore the former text—Rom. viii. 14-16, cannot be understood otherwise than by synechdoche, a promise of heirship—an earnest of it put for the work in full.

3. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved, Mark xvi. 16, seems to indicate a full and present salvation, but 1 Cor. xv. 2, shows that the salvation is yet conditional. Also, Acts iii. 19, tells us just when our sins will actually be blotted out. It is when the times of anapsuxeos—literally, and, again, psuxeos, breathing—refreshing come from the presence of the Lord. Therefore the language in Mark xvi. 16, cannot be understood otherwise than by synechdoche to teach a salvation in part—the work commenced and the promise obtained.

So with Col. i. 13. By comparing with this text, iv. 7-11, it is discernible that Tychicus, Onesimus, Aristarchus, Marcus Justus and Paul, all were on the outside of the kingdom, and were fellow laborers together for, into, or into the kingdom—the same word eis rendered into in the former text. Next, we find all the disciples at Lystra, Iconium and Antioch on the outside of the kingdom, and informed that it was through much tribulation that they must enter it. Acts xiv. 21, 22. Many other texts might be given, but these two are amply sufficient to show that when Paul addressed the Collossian brethren, that the kingdom could, only by Synechdoche, have been in existence—some of its principles taught, and these by many embraced, and that the organic work of the kingdom is future.

Therefore, if the organic work of the kingdom is future, the whole of the parable standing at the head of our article is future. The sowing is future, the production is future, the growth is future, and so is the separation. This separation is the work described by the Savior in Matt. xxv. 31-46. Not a resurrected party in the assembly, but nations (literal, living, mortal nations). This separation is the work described by Paul. 2 Thess. i. 7-9. This separation is not a work done in a moment, nor in a day, but the work of the aion—age of restitution, when Christ will accomplish the work whereunto Adam was appointed, but failed—subdue the earth. Gen. i. 28. This is the age for multiplying, preparing and furnishing the rulers; the next will be the age for severing the tares from the wheat, and subduing the earth and the beyond—happy period—will be for ruling over, without an opposing element when God's will shall be done as in heaven so on earth.

Respectfully submitted,

Eastern Items.

NEW YORK, May 26.—A London special says: "Advices from Crete report a terrible state of affairs existing on the island. The Turks have combined against the Christian population and are committing most horrible outrages. Women are insulted, ravished and dishonored, and the entire population are in a state of the greatest terror. It is rumored that British protection has been solicited."

BERLIN, May 26.—The Ministerialist Post continues to comment on the French crisis, and says France, ruled by the Vatican, is the center of the Papal system which frivolously threatens the world's peace, and is preparing for a crusade against Germany; for there can be no doubt that a disturbance of the peace is inevitable should France continue the course she has now taken.

LONDON, May 26.—A Bucharest telegram received here announces that the Russians blew up a large monitor on the Danube, this morning, by means of launches bearing torpedoes.

LONDON, May 26—5 a. m.—The News' Bucharest dispatch says between Galatz and Bucharest the railway is all but blocked by a series of immensely long trains crowded with infantry. Bucharest constitutes the principal center, whence columns radiate to their respective destinations on the Danube. Another important artery is the road from Busco to Oltenitza.

VIENNA, May 25.—The Abendblatt says Thursday's demonstration in Constantinople assumed very serious proportions. Many thousands of people, led by armed Softas, presented themselves before the palace to demand the dismissal of the Ministry and recall of Midhat Pasha. The Sultan fled to a fortress on the Asiatic side. The military dispersed the crowd, wounding many. The Christians fled out of the city, and many Europeans took refuge on board ships. The consternation was general.

LONDON, May 26.—A Times Bucharest correspondent says present indications strengthen the conclusion that no important events will occur on the Danube until the whole front line is in position on the bank of the river. A strong corps will be formed on the right, composed of the Roumanian army and a division or two of Russians. This force will move up the Turkish side of the Timok and turn the left flank of the Balkan line by a movement on Sophia and Philippopolis. Such flank attack would not violate the promise not to enter Servian territory, and would unquestionably bring a corps of 20,000 Servians to assist it. A Russian corps crossing below Widin would paralyze the Widin garrison and leave the Timok valley column unopposed, with a friendly country on its right from which to draw supplies.

Be Ye Also Ready.

Ready when the dawning
Comes creeping cold and grey,
And we waken up from slumber
To greet another day.

Ready when the noon-tide
Is quickening with heat,
And there steals'n o'er the spirit
A languor, dreamy, sweet.

Ready when evening falls,
And lilies fill with dew;
As the westering sun's last gleam
Is fading from our view.

Ready at midnight hour
A vigil still to keep;
The heart awake, though weary eyes
Have closed themselves in sleep.

Blessed the servant found,
What time the Lord returns,
Who ready in his hand doth hold
A lamp that brightly burns.

Correspondence.

Editor Restitution:—Permit me, through the columns of the RESTITUTION, to say to our brethren and sisters that I have returned to Carthage, Jasper county, Missouri, having left Indiana last September. After living in the south-west for fourteen years, I concluded to return to Indiana to live the rest of my days. Accordingly I left Missouri one year ago last fall, and went back to Indiana, my native state. We staid there one year, but were not satisfied, and so returned to Carthage, Mo., satisfied to make our home in the south-west till Jesus Christ comes to the kingdom and promised land at the resurrection of the just. I am only about six years old in the Abrahamic faith. I tried to preach the Campbellite doctrine for twelve years in the west in Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, and Arkansas. During these years I learned that the soul of man is not immortal, and, also, that the kingdom is yet future. I learned that this earth, in the age to come, will be the saints' inheritance, and that it is not in the skies. When I saw that my faith was vain, I also saw that the baptism was vain also; the divine order being that the gospel be preached—or the things concerning the locality of the kingdom and Jesus the crowned king on the literal throne of his father David on this earth. Seeing that faith preceded baptism, the writer and wife called on Brother Isaac Herron to administer baptism to us both. We were buried beneath the waves of a stream in Benton county, Arkansas. Since that time the writer has been telling the good news of the kingdom and its locality. I preach in the court house in Carthage on the first Sunday in every month at the usual hour of meeting; also on the third Sunday of each month at the same place. Should any of our preaching brethren pass this way, we should be glad to have them call and preach to the church of God here, which the writer has organized since last fall and which consists of twelve, three of whom have been added by baptism. During the last six years the writer has baptized over 160 disciples as the results of his own preaching in the states of Arkansas and Missouri. In May I am to hold a debate on four points—embracing man's mortality, the saints inheritance, unconsciousness in death, and baptism being essential to salvation. C. W. HERRON.

[NOTE.—This letter was mislaid. Should have had earlier attention.—ED.]

Editor Restitution:—It has been some time since I have written to you, or since I have seen a late copy of the RESTITUTION. I have not traveled much since the last winter set in, on account of age and feebleness. We have a good large country here with much people in it who need the light of truth, as much, perhaps, as any place in the United States. And they are almost wholly under the influence of unbelief and sectarianism. If I thought it would do any good, I would be willing to try to raise the Macedonian cry, to see if we could not get some help. Could not some conference or association send one or two strong men, such as Orem and Myers, to travel through the northern part of Arkansas, from Bentonville to Batesville, visiting our towns and large settlements, staying a week or so in each place, establishing the faith, and building up churches as they go, carrying with them a large package of tracts to be sold at cost, and soliciting subscribers for the RESTITUTION? I am confident such a work would do good, and that those who engage in such a work will not lose their reward.

Yours, respectfully,
H. ROBERTSON.

Farmington, Ark.

Most of us have had troubles all our lives, and each day has brought all the evil that we wished to endure. But if we were asked to recount the sorrows of our lives, how many could we remember? How many that are six months old should we think worthy of being remembered or mentioned? To-day's troubles look large, but a week hence they will be forgotten and buried out of sight.

Our Letter Drawer.

Editor Restitution:—It seems a long time since we have had a RESTITUTION. I am indeed sorry that it cannot be published without a break. The eastern question has assumed a definite shape, and much anxiety is felt whether the result will justify the conclusion we have formed. We are doing what we can in the Lord's vineyard; baptized one baptist minister last Sunday. Expect to repeat the same in a short time.

NEWELL BOND.

Editor Restitution:—I send a new subscriber, and I think it will open the way for obtaining others in that neighborhood. We are all in moderately good health—have ripe cherries and blackberries, and will have ripe peaches, pears, and apricots in a short time. I wish you could spend this summer with us. I am threatened some with a second attack of paralysis. I will try to avoid it if possible. The eastern news is very interesting to the Bible student. In hope,

RICHARD CORBALEY.

Healdsburg, Cal.

Editor Restitution:—Brethren of like precious faith, greeting: I love to hear how the cause of the Master is prospering in other places. We have organized a church here, of eight members. We at present meet from house to house, to partake of the loaf and wine about once a month. Have had the pleasure of baptizing three intelligent believers of the gospel of the kingdom into that name whereby we must be saved. I give nearly all my time to teaching according to my limited capacity, and I thank the good Lord that I can get some to see that there is life only in the Life Giver which is Christ the anointed of the Father. There are some more here who are interested, and I hope that they will come out from sectarian dogmas before the marriage supper takes place and the door is closed. Dear brethren, work for our Master and do not let our paper go down, for the time surely is short. A few more days, at most, and the trump will sound when parted friends will meet where there will be no more sorrow and tears. Brethren, pray for me. May we all stand firm on the rock during the fiery trials, that we may have to pass through. People here are very wicked, and those that belong to churches are scarcely better than acknowledged infidels. The prospect here is for about half a crop. Wife and family are in good health. Let us heed the Master's warning to watch and not be found asleep.

DAVID RENNER.

P. S.—Will Brother Corbaley correspond with me if he can come to hold a course of lectures for us. D. R.

Eternal Life.

Brother E. Hoyt, your communication in the RESTITUTION of March 28th, at hand, my reply necessarily must be condensed. Eternal life is secured this side of the resurrection. This I shall make plain to the readers of the RESTITUTION; but, first let me examine your statement in the outlet of your reply. You say, "While I allow that every man, when he becomes a Christian, obtains eternal life in a qualified sense; he obtains it by promise, by hope and by a good title to it, yet he does not obtain the gift itself of everlasting life." Yes, we obtain it by promise, hope, and a good title. This should settle the question between you and me. The difference seems to be in the good title. Now, let us examine God's promise or covenant to Israel: "But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; after those days saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people, and they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, know the Lord; for they shall all know me from the least of them unto the greatest of them saith the Lord, for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." Jer. xxxi. 33, 34; Heb. viii. 10, 11, 12. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." But how? "Ask and it shall be given, seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you. . . . If ye then being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children, How much more shall your heavenly Father give the holy spirit to them that ask him?" Luke xi. 9, 10. Here is the gift of God to them that believe; it is through Jesus Christ our Lord, obtained by repentance towards God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. "To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins." Acts x. 43. "He that comes to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Heb. xi. 6.

The holy spirit given to man is the good title. It is not a promissory note due twelve months, or one thousand years after date. God made the promise in former ages, and has been, and is fulfilling it in these last days. He is always ready to fulfill his promises when man calls upon him in truth and sincerity. See Acts ii. 21; Rom. x. 13.

I accept your proof in general as a continuation of life. It commences here and reaches to glory. Here we know in part; but when that which is perfect, is come, we shall know as we are known. The mirror of the flesh will be done away when we come to a perfect station of a man. Paul to Titus i. 2. "In hope of eternal life which God, that cannot lie promised before the world began." Man lived in hope, as God promised by his holy prophets that a Savior should come, and when he came, he brought life and immortality to light. Many saw this life given and rejoiced in the reality of the gift through him. Titus iii. 7. We should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life, to the full enjoyment, with a glorified body, made like Christ, immortalized to an endless life. "As the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." John v. 21. Paul says, Ezek. ii. 1: "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." This authority Christ has been exercising ever since he came into the world.

"The hour is coming and now is when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live." St. John v. 25. "And God will give them eternal life in the day when he will judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ." Here the prize of eternal life is promised at the first resurrection and the day of judgment.

Paul to Timothy, says: "Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after." 1 Tim. v. 24. "All passages of Scripture that speak of having eternal life in the present, as I have already intimated, show that it belongs to the Christian by faith and hope, and by the title deed of Jehovah's promise, who cannot lie." Yes, a good title warranty deed, sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise. "Now, if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Rom. viii. 9. This is the gift of God, a part of his own divine nature, regeneration, a new birth, passed from death unto life.

Jesus says: "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life." St. John v. 24. Not literal, but spiritual, is passed from death unto life, past tense, not future. "The Son was lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish, but have eternal life. God gave his only begotten Son for this purpose." St. John iii. 14, 15, 16. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." Chap. iii. 36. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me hath everlasting life." St. John vi. 47. "For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven and giveth life unto the world." John vi. 33. "This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die. If any man eat of this bread he shall live forever." John vi. 50, 51. "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself. And this is the record that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son, hath life. These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that, ye may know that ye have eternal life." 1 John v. 10, 11, 12, 13. "And this is life eternal that they might know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." John xvii. 3. This knowledge God hath imparted to every one that is born of the Spirit. The world knoweth it not. God hears in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation. "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." 2 Cor. vi. 2; Heb. iii. 7, 8, 15. Present tense in the Bible, by way of emphasis. And, "Lo! I am with you always even unto the end of the world." The verb "am," is in the present tense. No grammarian will deny this. Hear the Son again, where two or three are gathered together in my name, there "am" I in the midst of them. Matt. xviii. 20. The verb "am" is present. Hath the witness, hath the Son, hath life; know that ye have eternal life. These are all past or present, not future. "Behold, he cometh in the clouds." John, here, is calling our attention to the future; a plain note of attention. He saw past, present, and future. The verb "cometh," is future, but not so with any text that I have used to establish everlasting life here.

Yours in love and hope of heaven.

Repentance.

I came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance. Luke v. 32.

Here, in a few words, is unfolded to us the glorious mission of Christ to earth. He came to call sinners to repentance. "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." 1 Tim. i. 15. "He was manifested to take away our sins." 1 Jno. iii. 5. "Christ died for the ungodly." "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Rom. v. 6, 8. "The just for the unjust." 1 Peter iii. 18.

In view of such an exhibition of God's wondrous love, as manifested toward us in the gift of his dear Son, will you not, dear sinner, come to repentance? "Or despisest thou the riches of his goodness, and forbearance, and long suffering, not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance"? Rom. ii. 4.

Oh, will you not obey the glorious gospel of the blessed God, and cease the unequal warfare? Make an unconditional surrender. Cease fighting against your benefactor and friend. Come to Christ by a living faith. Take up the light burden and wear the easy yoke of Christ. Enlist under the blood-stained banner of the Prince of life. Learn of him. Follow him. Obey him.

"Follow thou me," says the Captain of our salvation. He will lead us to victory, even victory over our last enemy—death. He will "guide our feet into the way of peace." Luke i. 78, 79. He "will save us with an everlasting salvation," if we will repent and be baptized in his name for the remission of sins.

Repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, is what is required of us. "Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance;" or as the marginal reading (which is preferable to the textual, in the ratio of one old cheese to ten,) gives it, "answerable to amendment of life." Matt. iii. 8.

Exercise godly sorrow. "For godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of; but the sorrow of the world worketh death." 2 Cor. vii. 9, 10. It is repentance unto life. Oh, repent, repent! God "now commandeth all men everywhere to repent, because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." Acts xvii. 30, 31.

"Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." Acts iii. 19 21; 1 Thess. ii. 19.

"And they (the twelve) went out and preached that men should repent." Mark vi. 7, 12; Acts xxvi. 20. "Repent and be baptized." Acts ii. 38. "Repent ye therefore and be converted." Acts iii. 19. "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Matt. xviii. 3.

Just as truly as the Galileeans perished, "whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices," so truly will the wicked perish, unless they repent. "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Luke xiii. 1–5.

"Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near; let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." Isa. i. 16–18; lv. 6, 7.

Walk in the way of salvation; in the way of life; in the way of peace. There is joy "in heaven over one sinner that repenteth." Luke xv. 7, 10.

"Bring forth therefore fruits answerable to amendment of life." Matt. iii. 8; Acts xxvi. 20; Ezek. xviii. 30, 32; xxxii. 11; 2 Peter iii. 9.

AUSTIN CURTIS.

ZELL'S ENCYCLOPEDIA.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

This justly noble work contains 120,000 articles, 2,000 engravings, and eighteen splendid maps. Though a marvel of condensation, it is probably the best work in the language as a source of universal information.

George E. Plumbe, corresponding editor of the Chicago Inter-Ocean, says: He combines, comprehensiveness, accuracy, and the sharply incisive style of the articles of a scientific, historical, biographical, and geographical nature, make it more desirable for a general reader than any other with which I am acquainted, and prefer it for double literal certainty, to any other American work of a similar character. I make this statement with pleasure because I firmly believe that a copy of Zell's Encyclopedia placed in any family containing young or middle-aged people would be a stronger incentive to study and thought than could be afforded by the expenditure of double its outlay in any other direction.

Wendell Phillips says: I have examined Zell's Encyclopedia, and found in it almost everything I thought to look for. The subjects are treated with a fulness which surprised me. In accuracy, I think you can risk comparison with any of your rivals; and one feature is especially valuable,—that when you are unable to exhaust a topic, you can find out where fuller information may be found. It is just such a work as every one needs at home for immediate reference, even if he lives near a great public library.

John Emery, 166 East Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois, is agent for this work, to whom and none all communications. T. Elwood Zell, Davis & Co., publishers. Nos. 17 and 19 South Sixth street Philadelphia, Pa. eod6jul8

A book of 500 pages, treating on the character and positions of the "Personal Advent of Christ," and the "Kingdom of God," etc., which should be in the hands of every Bible student. Ex. cloth, gilt, $1.00; cloth, 50c.; paper, 25c. By mail.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

On the 8th of June, if the Lord will, I expect to be in Champaign county, Illinois, near Pleasant, as Brother Reed it may appoint, also on the fourth Sunday, or June 24, in Martin county, Indiana, near Shoals, as Brother A. W. Stewart may appoint, and continue meetings some days. J. F. HAYES.

There will be a union camp meeting at New Hartford, Butler county, Iowa, commencing June 15th, to hold over two Sundays.

It is expected that this will be one of the last meetings ever held in Northern Iowa. All who believe in the soon coming of our Lord and King, and his personal reign on the earth, are daily invited to be present. You are earnestly solicited to come, both preacher and layman. Come with a heart full of love for Jesus and his truth. Come to work, to pray, to worship, to do good to others, and you will get good yourselves. Come let us get up to worship before the Lord.

Bring your tools and bedsticks, washboards, soap, towels, pine shavings, covercots, cushions, etc. Straw and hay will be free. Lumber for tent purposes can be had. Grain can be purchased at the market price. Groceries and refreshments can be had on the ground, and board can be had in families adjacent to the ground. Everything that can be done for your comfort will be attended to.

H. V. Reed, O. A. Morris, and others, will be present, the Lord willing, to break the bread of life.

New Hartford is on the I. C. R. R., eleven miles from Cedar Falls. Those coming from the southwest should come to Ackley, there cast to camp. Those coming on C. St. P. R. R. should change at Cedar Falls, thence east to camp.

By order of the committee G. C. RANDAL.

The Iowa Christian Conference will hold its annual session in connection with the camp meeting at New Hartford. All persons interested in the prosperity of this conference will please attend.

G. C. RANDAL, President.

The Lord willing, the third quarterly conference of the Church of God in Iowa, for 1877, will convene at New Hartford, Butler county, Iowa, on the 16th of June, and will be held in connection with the camp meeting at that place, which will commence on the 15th. We invite a general turnout of the brethren, that arrangement may be perfected so that it will be unnecessary to call any but the union conference after the several meeting.

JOHN FITZ, Secretary.

West Liberty, Iowa, May 7.

By request we will be with the church in North Fairfield, Huron county, Ohio, for quarterly meeting. Services on Saturday at 1:30 p. m., and on Sunday at 9:30 a. m., and 1 o'clock p. m. June 30 and 31. Hope to see all the brethren of our old charge present.

O. W. STETSON.

The conference of the church in Michigan will hold its next annual meeting in the brick school house, district number one, Nendum, St. Joseph Co., three and a half miles north of the village, commencing Thursday, May 31, and holding over June 1. Brother J. R. Hatch, of Crawfordsville, Indiana, is expected to be with us. The lovers of the truth from all parts of the state are urged to attend. Come, brethren, make an effort, an earnest effort, to be here. Brethren and sisters from other states are cordially invited to meet with us.

Persons coming by rail will reach us by the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad, and will stop off at Nendum, where teams will be in waiting on the arrival of each train on Thursday. Strangers not knowing where to go will inquire for the writer.

By request of the Secretary.

E. MILNER.

Upon consultation the brethren have decided to hold the annual general meeting at Argos, commencing Friday, June 8, 1877, at 10 a. m., and continue over the following Sunday.

Argos is situated on the Indianapolis, Peru & Chicago Railway, in Marshall county, Indiana, eight miles south of Plymouth, and two and a half miles south of Ankeny's grove house, where the annual meeting has been held for some years past. A general attendance of the brethren and sisters from abroad is earnestly solicited. Come, and let us have one more blessed reunion in the fellowship of the glorious gospel.

By order of the brethren.

Valuable English Works.

Our readers are informed that we expect shortly to have for sale the works mentioned below. Orders and remittances for the same may be sent at once to this office.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. G. Brodmann, Congregational minister, and W. Kelloway, editor of Bible Echo, and minister of the Gospel. 8 th of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by W. C. B. 2 That the Scriptures teach that men in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever, and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth, bevelled boards, well bound, 55c; postage 10c. Paper cover, 35c; postage 5c.

Duration and Nature of Future Punishment. By Rev. R. Constable, M. A. late Prebendary of Cork, Ireland. 320 pp. An elaborate argument touching the punishment of the wicked. Its particularly fine in its philological chapters respecting the meaning of the Greek words used by the inspired writers to indicate the doom of the lost. Price $1; postage 10c.

"We hail this book with lively satisfaction. Undoubtedly the subject which it treats with such an attractive combination of learning and modesty, of power and reverence, has held hold of the minds of many of the most thoughtful Christian men of our day. Its growth, from a pamphlet in the first edition to a handsome volume of three hundred and thirty pages in the fourth, is conclusive proof that the question discussed is one of profound importance. We are also compliment the publisher on the tasteful and handsome dress in which they present the book to the public, and express the hope that the necessary outlay will speedily be much more than recovered by the large sale of a work which must take a standard place in this painfully misunderstood department of Christian theology.—The Rainbow.

This work presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection.

"Mr. Constable has, in a series of works, devoted much labor and research to establishing from Scripture and other sources the real nature of the future state; and the present book is the result of his more exhaustive labors on one special point. His argument is supported by no little learning, a keen logic, and a clear and available style. There is a good deal to be said for the general doctrines propounded."—Nonconformist.

It is characterized by his usual vigor of thought and felicitous use of expression. To all who love truth, rather than the traditions of a creedally committed trustee."—The Church Messenger.

Bible Echo. Volume I., May to December, edited by W. Kelloway. The only English weekly that advocates the doctrine of conditional immortality. Numbers of the Bible Echo, containing important papers and discussions on vital matters, and the views concerning the subject of the scriptural doctrine of immortality. Price $2.25.

Bible Echo. Vol. III., July to September, 1876. This completes the Bible Echo as a weekly newspaper, and also finishes the old series. Price $1.50.

Bible Echo. New Series. Monthly numbers from October, 1876. The yearly subscription for this magazine, including the 3 months of last year, is $2 50.

New Facts Upon all Subjects. By the author of "Enquire Within Upon Everything." Useful to the physician, the artist, the chemist, the engineer, the manufacturer, the agriculturist, the gardener, and the housekeeper. 624 pp. Price 50c; postage 10c.

A New Work by Mrs. H. V. Reed.

Sacred Words for Hymnic Service. Nearly 300 pp. Well printed on heavy toned paper, neatly bound in cloth. Price 50c; postage 10c.

"This book is one of the most satisfactory of the kind that could be written; indeed we know of none other in every way so pleasing to those who use the sweetly of sanctifying the Bible as a recreation from God. We would be more than content, we would be proud, if the title page bore our name instead of that of the estimable and talented lady, the authoress. Her "Bible Triumphant" was a good work, and it is, we know, earnestly appreciated by many; but this work, as original, so forcible, so convincing, it would be hard to guess where its success will end. Everybody should possess a copy."—The Rock Echo.

Bible Triumphant. A new supply to expected. Price, paper covers, 60c; cloth 75c.

The Angel Watchers.

On the north and the east, on the south and the west,
Of Salem, that shineth so fair,
Twelve angels stand waiting in robes of the blest,
To welcome the weary ones there,—
Where pearly gates blaze with the light of our home,
And the jasper wall's radiance I see;
There angels of light at each beautiful gate,
Stand watching and waiting for me.

From the east and the west, and the south and the north,
To Zion the ransomed shall come;
The weary, the war-worn, the pilgrims of earth—
They haste to their heavenly home.
Oh! when they shall come with their shoutings and songs,
May I in their company be!
And see the fair angels who greet the glad throngs,
Stand watching and waiting for me.

Less and less like our home does this wilderness seem—
A desert of sorrow and fears,
Its joys are departing—like a plotter's gleam,
Its loves end in partings and tears.
But cheer thee, O pilgrim, thy rest is in view.
The loved and the lost thou shalt see;
And meet with the holy, the pure, and the true,
Where angels stand waiting for thee.

Oh! ye wanderers in mazes of sorrow and fear,
There's blessing and mercy for you;
Though earth may be dark, and the wilderness drear,
She Savior can bring you safe through.
O weary and sad one, whose feet cannot rest,
Who a pilgrim and stranger must be,
Lo! angels beside the fair gates of the blest
Stand watching and waiting for thee!

Selections.

From the Auburn Daily Bulletin.

The Truth and Victory.

To the People of Auburn—Greeting:

Life with all that makes it a blessing has its charms, especially that which pertains to the joyous hope of life everlasting. But death, with its antecedents, attendants and consequents, has none. The author of life is God, who is good, to whom we turn in prayerful appeal, in our times of distress; but "through envy of the devil cometh death," and they who hold of his side do find it with mourning, lamentation and woe." Hence we all should choose the way of life, that we may live.

The occasion for making this brief statement to the good people of this city lies in this. A brief notice of a sermon, containing facts and most important Bible truth, as to the popular reasons for rejecting the gospel doctrine of the second advent, was refused admittance into the Advertiser, (though payment was offered to make its insertion a reasonable business matter), while on the other hand, an article about ten times as long was inserted on the editorial page. In that B. F. Hall disparages and contradicts (perhaps blindly) the primal truth of Revelation, the five books of Moses, the whole most distinctive records of creation; undermines not only our faith but all faith in the primary promises of God, and casts discredit on the only hope revealed for man on earth, as to deliverance from present evils, under which the best are compelled to "groan, being burdened." Rom. vii. 19, 23; 2 Cor. v. 1, 4. Is this wise? Is it well, in this year of grace 1875? Our assurance of faith says, no! Nor does it seem well or wise for us to withhold a testimony to the truth, to which these gentlemen seem such strangers.

My aim is to state the truth and the fundamental facts involved, in terms plump and square, but in charity to them and all. Surely they are the erring ones; they are among the most mistaken of men; or else what can be done, when "The wisdom of God says he that is not with me is against me;" because, in that case, they stand arrayed against the highest intelligence and against the only system of redemption from sin and slavery to evil passions, and Satan, "the end of which is death." Rom. vi. 21; John iii. 16, 2?; 2 Tim. ii. 26.

My difficulty in making this statement lies in condensing the wide range of truth that it embraces, because, though most easy of apprehension in itself; and its elements are open and known to all; like the orbs of light in the canopy, yet it has never been made familiar, even to most of educated minds, by frequent repetition. Indeed, much of our education has been skeptical, and the grand facts of creation and God's providential dispensations are too generally regarded as disjointed and isolated, while their harmony through all ages demonstrates their unity, as parts of one all comprehending plan. "They continue this day, according to thine ordinances." Ps. xix. 1; cxix. 91.

Please note the facts on which our faith is founded. Every house is builded by some one, but he who built all things is God. The truth is, that there is no house without a builder; no plant without its root or seed; no child without its parents; no day without its sun. We live in a world of cause and effect. It has two great lights, one for the day, and the other for the night. The stars also. "Which are for days, months and years, for signs and seasons." Gen. i.

Through all historic time, this order has obtained without abatement or change, and while there is vast variety, there is unaltered continuity, which is the basis of all our chronology, astronomy and science, properly so called. Do think! You would, if allowed, knock out your own foundation.

The pre-historic period has also scraps of ancient records, traditions, memorials and philological, geographical and ethnological facts, reaching back to the beginning, which revelation illumines and makes consistent with these world-wide facts that "are known and read of all men." "For the heavens declare the glory of God." Ps. xix.

His existence and power are clearly seen by the things that are made. Now let our ex-Judge & Co. outweigh such facts; let them be just to themselves rather than write and publish at loose ends, as if we were not in a world where order is the law! Let them not lose their reason in the twilight of sceptical speculation; where the ignorant, intemperate and "vicious change the truth into a lie, and treasure up wrath against the day of wrath and the righteous judgment of God." Rom. i. 18-26.

Gentlemen, you have no other world than this! You know no other origin of this world than that which the Bible records! Nay, more; you know no other origin of sin and death and the devil; nor any other remedy for the abounding woes of man and earth than that which these, whom your article aims to annihilate, proclaim! Nay, more; you may learn from this, that the language and labor of these men, whom you so decry, lie entirely in the line of apostolic ministries; so that your thrusts do not stop at us, but extend to them, and to the Great Teacher, Messiah. "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do." Ps. xi. 3.

The grandest facts of all the ages, the Patriarchal, the Mosaic and the Christian; and the four mightiest dynasties, of all time—Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome—form the two banks of the channel of the covenant and people of promise as they extend on toward their consummation; in "the times of restitution; in the taking away of the sin of the world; in the contemporaneous thousand years' reign of Christ; and the subjugation of all evil, even to the last enemy, death; and the deliverance of the creature (creaturehood) from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God." Rom. viii. 19-23; xv. 8-12; Rev. xx. 1-7; Ps. lxxii.; Isa. ix.; Dan. vii.; Matt. xii. 17-21; xix. 28.

Gentlemen, the first and last promise of God has a Savior, Deliverer and Restorer in it! Gen. iii. 15; Rev. xxii. 20. The end or object of his reign is redemption, restitution and deliverance; that will wipe out sin and Satan, the curse and death. Now, who has a reason to object or to "reply against God" in this revelation of his loving will? We regret that many feel straightened in reading out this all-comprehending promise, prophecy and prayer, all of which combine in these pregnant words, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven!" Matt. vi. 10. This embraces creation, Gen. i. 1, and this consummation attained, will be godlike and good enough. "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things, and blessed be his glorious name forever, and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen and amen. The prayers of David, the son of Jesse, are ended."

The Bible, as the moral Sun, reveals not only the origin, but the end of evil, and vindicates the ways of Providence. It discloses the heathen, Jewish and Christian apostacies; and the mortal conflict between truth and error, as well as the final triumph of truth. This strife began in Eden, and soon showed its deadly character between Cain and Abel; but in Moses with Aaron, and Balak with Balaam, we have the general features of this strife through every age, to ours in Auburn. Hence Balaam may stand for every doubting, worldly-wise religionist, whose habit is to go the length of his erring will, to oppose the cause and people of God; and he may show that his ass is more worthy to be a prophet than his self-seeking rider, when such rider acts the part that would only become the ass; because every such genius is morally more blind and dumb than the beast he rides. (See Lange, p. 84, Int., vol. 1.)

Gentlemen, if you glory in negations, if you delight in disseminating doubt, and in disparaging God's witnesses, (though erring, perhaps because still human) you must, I presume, go on. But we cherish companionship with all the worthies in the faith and fellowship of divine promise. Heb. xi. This faith centers in the second advent of Christ, "who was once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." You may have yet to learn that this doctrine is in the Greek text, and in every text, and in every pulpit in all Auburn. Nay, further, it is in the published exposition of the text by all, save some private interpretation, (see the heading of chapter and page, Matt. xxiv. and xxv., Mark xiii., Luke xxi., 1 Thess. iv. and v., 2 Peter iii.) Nay, more, it may surprise you to learn that the doctrine of the second advent of Christ is embodied in every important creed in Christendom! Furthermore, it is an unaccountable wonder to most, as they learn it, that the reason assigned for not believing it, lies in explaining away the plain terms of the text of truth, on this doctrine. It was on "the New Hypothesis," that we were not bound to accept these terms of Revelation "in their proper sense.' Note, this "New Hypothesis" of Dr. Daniel Whitby is so recent that it has come into the popular favor since our Bibles and the platforms of faith were arranged as now published!

Here we rest the case: for surely truth bears away the victory. It is best to believe God.

We have no need to vindicate the advocates of the doctrine of the Lord, on this point of truth, or any other. Their vindication will come when Jesus, the Coming One, shall come to fulfill his promise and give his people the kingdom. 2 Thess. i. 5-10. The vision is for an appointed time. If it tarry, wait for it. It will surely come, and will not tarry. Hab. ii. 1-4; Acts xvii. 31. This is assured because God has said it. It is confirmed to our faithby the literal and historical fulfillment of the primary parts of prophecy through six thousand years, so as to constitute the sum and strength of history; through all four of the great kingdoms, Zech. i.[18-22; Dan. vii.; and "the time of the end where many are running to and fro, and knowledge is being increased." Dan. xii. Ours is a prophetic generation and a period of general expectation to the Jew, the Mohammedan, and the Christian. The omens that foretokened the destruction of Jerusalem eighteen hundred years ago, were not so signal as those that now herald the doom of the Apocalyptic Babylon, and the false prophet, (false teaching personated), and the old serpent, the devil; but all this belongs to the coming crisis and the opening of the better day. Surely the millennium can not come with this Babylon, the Grand Turk and the devil in it. No, no! The Lord is to send forth judgment unto victory. Matt. xii. 17-21. Then his loving will can be done in earth as it is done in heaven. Amen.

The most popular objector to the consummation of the gospel plan is constrained to use our language, more or less, as it is the strongest and happiest that can be employed to set forth his own best thoughts of "the kingdom to come," or the future of our world.

Hence our peculiarity lies mainly in the reality of our apprehensions! He finds this language in Revelation as if it suggested mysteries; while to us it discloses the realities of our great Messiah's "reign on the earth and under the whole heaven." "The kingdom, even the first dominion, that is to come," must be as real as it was to man in Eden; for this is the divine promise. Micah iv. 1-13; Acts iii. 21; Daniel vii. 14, 18, 27; Matt. v. 5; Rev. v. 10.

"All was once good, and all must be again restored, else God in his dishonored works would himself endure dishonor, and be wronged without redress."

Though Judge* Hall has sadly erred in his estimate of our doctrine, as well as of us, yet I need only add that so far as he has excelled Justice Miller or others in official honors and domestic virtues, he is entitled to the congratulations of his publisher and other fellow citizens.

J. B. COOK.

The Creator of the universe has filled all the store houses of Nature full to overflowing, designed for the use and benefit of man, but only by the sweat of thy face shalt thou earn thy daily bread. As it is in the outward and temporal, so it is in the spiritual and eternal—to insure a perfectly successful life, they are one and inseparable; for if we would build a house an earthly home, to shelter and protect us, we must take God's granite from his hills; or, if we would build a bark to cross the broad ocean, we must take God's oak from his forests. To seal, without imperfection, the pilgrimage of life, and leave behind us a name in all things, honorable, respected and beloved, we must take God's everlasting truths, as taught by Christ and his apostles."

The Second Coming.

The early church were Adventists, in that they looked for their Master's return from heaven. Massilon says in reference to the faith of the first centuries that to not sigh for the Lord's return was regarded as the first step in apostasy. The Apostles started out with their minds imbued with this hope. Their Lord's words: "I will come again and receive you unto myself;" the sentence "Thy kingdom come and thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven," in their brief formula of prayer, and the language uttered by the two men in white apparel: "Ye men of Galilee why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven," were well calculated to make them long for the second coming, as a grand epoch in God's unfolding plan. This to them was the golden portal to all the glories of the future state. No prior entrance into some far distant elysian among the stars divided their hope, or drew off their gaze from this point to which they localized all the promises. Such was the hope of these proclamers of the gospel, such the hope that God's inspired word presents for the comfort and consolation of the waiting church. Now let the honest inquirer put his questions in the leading terms of God's precious promises, and the word of faith responds at once with an explicit answer. To begin, take the general term reward, or recompense. When will the righteous be rewarded? Jesus says: "When the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels then shall he reward every man according to his works. Matt 16: 27. "For thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Luke 14: 14. "And behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give every man according as his work shall be." Rev 22: 12. These Scriptures return a plain and positive answer, therefore, satisfactory to the humble mind. If the inquiry is made in reference to any of the constituents of the reward the same plainness is shown in the answer. If you want to know when the crown shall be given, the Word echoes, "When the chief Shepherd shall appear ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." 1 Pet. 5: 4. And Paul says: "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them, also, that love his appearing." 2 Tim 4: 8. Is the glory the subject of inquiry? "When Christ who is our life shall appear then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. 3: 4. Again Paul likewise places it at that time. He speaks of this glory to be revealed in us, setting it against the sufferings of the present time, (Rom, 8: 18) and that it shall be revealed when the manifestation of the sons of God takes place (19 v.), when the creature is delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God (21 v.), and the body is redeemed (23 v.) This harmonizes with the passages which speak of Christ's "coming in glory" and our being glorified together with him. When will the obedient get the kingdom? At the end of the world or age, when Christ sends forth his angels to gather out of his kingdom the things that offend and do iniquity. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Matt 13: 43, Daniel connects this with the deliverance of God's people at the resurrection of the dead, at the end of the days when the prophet himself shall stand in his lot. Dan 12: 2, 3, 13. In the 7th chapter he places the possession of the kingdom after the persecuting power symbolized by "the little horn" has run its wicked course, and the Ancient of days has come. In symbolized language, using the past tense, he says: "And the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." 7: 22. Then the promise of thrones to the twelve apostles will be fulfilled in the regeneration, or new creation, "when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory." Matt 19: 28. Then they shall eat and drink at his table, Luke 22: 30. "When the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. Matt. 25: 31. John represents the whole church, martyrs and all, sharing in the first resurrection, and jointly reigning with Christ through the thousand years. It is the resurrection and change which prepares the believer for possessing the kingdom. "Flesh and blood (the mortal nature) can not inherit the kingdom of God," says Paul. This language is followed by the statement: "Behold I show you a mystery. We shall not all sleep (die), but we shall all be changed in a moment in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." 1 Cor. 15: 51, 52. It must be evident to the most casual reader, that Paul, in this chapter, associates nothing desirable with the intermediate state (state between death and the resurrection), but on the contrary, every thing, in the nature of a gift or blessing, with the coming of the Lord and the resurrection of the dead. The eternal and incorruptible kingdom comes then with all the gifts of God's grace in Christ relating to our future state.

When shall we be like our great Head and see him as he is? "But we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." 1 Jno 3: 2. Then we "bear the image of the heavenly as we now bear the image of the earthy," 1 Cor. 15, 49, and "our vile body will be changed and fashioned like unto his glorious body." Phil. 3: 21. In the 20th v. the apostle says: "our conversation is in heaven from whence also we look for the Savior." We look for him to come because we cannot go to where he is. His own words are directly opposed to such a notion. "Little children, yet a little while I am with you. Ye shall seek me; and as I said unto the Jews, whither I go ye cannot come; so now I say to you." Jno 13; 33. Where was Jesus going? The following words are connected with his answer to the Jews: Then said Jesus unto them: "Yet a little while I am with you, and then I go unto Him that sent me; Jno 7: 33. This fact, that we can not go where he now is, is the reason for the apostolic injunction, so often repeated in the Epistles: to wait and watch for our Lord's coming.

When will the saints be on an equality with angels? When we die? as very many good folks think. "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world (age) and the resurrection from the dead neither marry nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God: being the children of the resurrection." Luke 20: 35, 36. Children of God in fact, by virtue of an immortal nature acquired by a resurrection from the dead. It was in the light of this fact that God declared himself the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The grand issue of the faith of the old patriarchs who dwelt in the promised land as pilgrims and strangers will be reached when the chief heir comes and all are perfected together; for Paul testifies, that they, and not they only, but a long line of ancient worthies all died in faith not having received the promises, God having provided some better thing for us that they without us should not be made perfect. Heb 11: 13, 39, 40. These heroes of faith looked off to the resurrection and the perfection attained through it. This was the nature of the ancient faith, a kind that is almost obsolete now. How many dreary centuries have swept by since the promise was given or made to Abraham; but that subsequent time denoted by the little word "after" in Heb. 11: 8, has not yet come.

The fulfillment of the promise at that "after" time, by a resurrection, was the hope of Israel, to which the twelve tribes instantly serving God day and night hoped to come; and for this Paul was "judged" and "bound with a chain" Acts 26: 67, and 28: 20. He hoped to realize the blessing promised, at the same time, and in the same way that the twelve tribes hoped to realize it. With his eye fixed on that "after" time he wrote for the good of the church of this dispensation this injunction: "Ye have need of patience that after ye have done the will of God ye might receive the promise." When? "For yet a little while and he that shall come will come and will not tarry." Heb. 10: 36, 37. This "little while" carries the faith and hope of the church ever to that glorious "after," the era burdened with the "Far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." 2 Cor 4: 17. Yes it is over this hope that the apostle worked up the Greek into a double superlative, and over which many of us now feel like writing rhapsodies. Hasten, O Lord its glad fruition!

The Paris Patrie gives some particulars about the "treasures of Islam." It says that all the pilgrims who visit Mecca cast an offering into the three sepulchres for the defense of Islam. The writer calculates that not less than $3,000,000 a year are thus contributed; and adds that from one of the sepulchres, which was opened in 1820, immense sums were drawn. Another sepulchre was opened during the Crimean war, and now the Sheik-ul-Islam has gone to Mecca to draw from the third, which has not been opened since 1415. Taking the three sepulchres together, it is computed that they must contain about $120,000,000.

The Emperor Alexander has thanked the Holy Synod for finishing, after twenty years of incessant labor, the translation of the Bible into the Russian vernacular. This is the first translation into the Russian approved by the Czar and the Church. The British and Foreign Bible Society's translation is now prohibited in Russia.

A type foundry in St. Paul has lately furnished the type for the Framsari, an Iceland newspaper to be published in the Iceland colony at Keewatin, on the Red River, in British territory, about sixty miles from Fort Garry. This will be the first newspaper published on the American continent in the Icelandic language.

The British and Foreign Bible Society have made arrangements with the Rev. R. Van Eck, for eleven years a missionary of the Utrecht Missionary Society, to translate the Gospel of St. Mark into the language spoken by the natives of Bali, an island of 800,000 inhabitants, in the Indian Archipelago. If he succeeds, it will lead to the translation of the whole New Testament.

Missions have been very successful in Polynesia. More than three hundred islands have been converted from idolatry to Christianity within less than fifty years, and their language reduced to writing. The sea is the largest of all cemeteries, and its numbers sleep without monuments. All other graveyards, in other lands, show some distinction between the great and the small, the rich and the poor, but in the great ocean cemetery the king and the clown, the prince and peasant, are alike undistinguished. The same waves roll over all; the same sun shines, and there, unmarked, the weak and the powerful, the plumed and the unhonored, will sleep on forever.

The Day of Rest gives the following marvelous particulars respecting the production of the Bible: "The Bible production in our time is equal to more than a million copies a year, or say more than nineteen thousand every week, more than three thousand every day, three hundred every hour, or five every minute of working time. At this rate the press is producing an English Bible or New Testament every twelve seconds. These Bibles are not wasted—they are required—and more copies of the Sacred Scriptures are demanded in the English tongue than in the languages of all the other nations in the world, although the number of versions to which this country gives encouragement and assistance, over and above, is considerably more than one hundred and fifty."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortalized saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the translatization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Time of Reward.

Can any one, holding the common view of man's nature and destiny, believing that the soul, as separate from the corporeal frame, is a conscious entity and enters on a new career when the body falls under the power of death, account for the fact—for fact it is—that in divine revelation none of the great promises relating to the believer's future state stand connected with the supposed entrance of the soul into this second mode of existence, that, instead of any of God's promises falling due at the date of death, their payment is deferred to a distant day, the day of the Lord's coming. That God knew how to word his own promises, can not be questioned. But how will our co-religionists account for the fact that God has overlooked the real wants and needs of the unclothed soul, leaving it destitute? They have never, to my knowledge, undertaken the task, and perhaps never will. We account for said fact on the ground that an unclothed soul entity is a myth of the human imagination about which the Bible knows nothing; that death so unmakes man in his entire being that he can enjoy nothing, and hence his resurrection is rendered an absolute necessity.

This omission on the part of God's Word, has, however, been supplied from various sources which it is not necessary for me to name in this article. The result has been a wide departure from Bible doctrine and language, ending in confusion of tongues. It is true the Bible is claimed as lending its support to the many false notions growing out of this fundamental error of the soul's separate existence. But how is this shown? By a system of exegesis, which, if applied to any other book, would certainly be very damaging to its real doctrines. Parable and inference are appealed to with a view to setting aside a faith and hope based upon the most positive and explicit promises and prophecies of God's Word. Men do this without seeing what mischief they are doing in undermining what ought to be to them the most fondly cherished hope. They set themselves directly against the most plainly revealed facts and truths, as if determined to be on the side of the scoffers to which Peter alludes.

When a man understands that all the good things belonging to his next life come with the coming of the Lord; that then, for the first time, the glory of the eternal things flashes upon his vision; that then, he enters into the riches of his inheritance; that then, and not till then, he passes the boundary between faith and sight, I say when he embraces this view of the matter, he ceases to be a scoffer at this blessed hope. With him scoffing would be a moral impossibility. But so long as a man (one professing Christianity) holds and cherishes the hope of entering, at death, into a heaven of bliss, so long will he treat the subject of the Lord's coming with a cold indifference that contrasts too plainly with the warm and prayerful attachment of the apostolic believers to this hope. Or, forced by the logic of his own premises to be consistent, he will reject the doctrine of a literal personal coming, as Henry Ward Beecher and many others have done, seeing no necessity for the event, and likewise, no necessity for the resurrection of the dead.

As I designed that these articles should contain an argument based upon the promises of God against the popular notion of consciousness in death, I will now, invite the reader's attention to the consideration of additional evidence in this line of argument.

The statements to which I now refer, preclude the possibility of the correctness of the common notion. Jesus speaking of his return from heaven, says: "I will come again and receive you unto myself." This statement, or promise, stands directly opposed to the common belief of a reception of the believer at death into the presence of the Lord. His coming is necessary to this reception, and both are essential in order that Christ's disciples may be where he is. See John xiv. 3.

There being no promise, then, in all God's Word of the believer's reception and his being where Christ is, prior to his coming, it follows that this is the only hope. This promise of Jesus is out of all harmony and fitness with the idea that the soul, separate from the body, is the personality, and that the latter is only a tenement or house. I will come again and receive you unto myself, does not sound courteous, or reasonable, when associated with the body, as a mere habitation. It is the style of the Bible throughout, to associate personality (the ego) with the body, but never with the soul, or spirit, separate from the body. This fact understood, and its importance duly regarded, would soon lead to a correct knowledge of man's nature.

Paul, associating his co-laborers with himself, and in view of death by martyrdom, wrote: "Knowing that he who raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also by Jesus and shall present us with you." 2 Cor. iv. 14. The apostles dying the deaths of martyrdom, and the believers at Corinth dying natural deaths, will all be presented at one and the same time when the apostles are raised up from the dead, when clothed upon with their house from heaven, when mortality is swallowed of life, and when all appear before the judgment seat of Christ. Chapter v. 2, 4, 10.

To the Lord's coming all the promises and the light of prophecy converge. Then the scattered church will be gathered and presented as a chaste virgin to Christ. It is then that the dead and living saints meet the Lord in the air. 1 Thess. iv. 17. This implies that they had not been with him in heaven. The "we" and "them" denote the personalities of the living and dead. All will agree the living, denoted by the pronoun we, had not met the Lord; it is just as certain that the dead denoted by the pronoun them, had not met him in the interior of the death state, hence both classes meet him when he comes. This view is confirmed by the apostle's telling the living to comfort one another with these words. Verse 18. There is not one word, nor the remotest hint concerning the blissful condition of the soul. How unlike the modern way of comforting the bereaved. Was it an oversight in Paul? 1 John ii. 28. "Now little children, abide in him that when he shall appear, we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming." Why could not John connect confidence and shame with the soul, at death, if it is the proper person, and meets the judge then? He could not, and did not, for the very best reason, a Bible reason: "The dead know not anything." Eccl. ix. 5. Also for the reason that Jesus said: "Whither I go ye can not come." John xiii. 33. Jesus says: "For whosoever is ashamed of me and my words, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels." Luke ix. 26.

To sum up; I have shown from plain statements of God's Word that the reward comes with the coming of the Lord; that eternal life, immortality, incorruptibility, the perfect state, deathlessness, equality with angels, being like Christ, the kingdom, the inheritance, the grace, the glory, the honor, the praise, the reigning and the crown, all stand in the Word of promise connected with the coming of the Redeemer, and the resurrection of the dead. I now ask this question of those holding the so-called orthodox view: Why is it that the Word of promise connects none of these things with the soul in the intermediate state? With our view, the importance of the event of Christ's coming can not be over-estimated: all depends on it. Then, as I have shown, we meet him; are received unto him; are presented; have boldness and confidence before him. Apostles and preachers will rejoice then over the churches of their planting (1 Thess. ii. 19,) when these same churches are "established unblameable in holiness before God .... at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints, or holy angels." 1 Thess. iii. 13. Blessed hope! In view of it who would turn aside to enjoy the fleeting vanities of the world? Who would seek to gain the applause and favor of men? Who set at naught the plain promises of our heavenly Father? Let come what will, may we stand, having our loins girt about with the truth. JOHN L. WIRE.

Doctrine made Practical.

The Gospel is the good speech of God addressed to sinful dying men. It is the Gospel of God, the Gospel of Christ, the Gospel of salvation. Its announcements are to all who have an ear to hear, authorizing them by all that is divine, to hear, believe, obey and live! But how many presume to interpose their own personal impressions, that embarrass the enquirer on entering into the way of life.

The example of our Lord and the precepts of the Gospel urge us to say to all "come and take of the water of life freely." Jesus received sinners and ate with them. Luke xv. St. Paul "became all things to all men, that he might by all means save some." 1 Cor. xix. 20-27. He was one of the mightiest examples of lofty devotion to God and his loving will. The corresponding precepts give us our rule of conduct throughout our Christian life. Nay, the commander's voice thrills through the New Testament: "Go thou and do likewise!" Amen. The adversary on the other hand prompts party men to mount guard, take God's truth and honor under their special care, and cry come to us! join our party! we are the church! Here I think we have the principle of the narrow way of life practically in contrast with the "broad way to destruction!" Matt. vii. 13-14. "If a man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." Rom. viii. 9. This spirit adopts the divine example of Jesus. The other takes that of all sects and schisms, and together they constitute "the great apostasy" from Christ. Again, all the prophets proclaim four, when they give the forms of the "kingdom of men." Dan. ii. 7; Jer. xv. 3. "These four are the Gentiles." Zech. i. 18-21; Luke, xxi. 24; Rom. xi. 25-29. But this number four is practically forgotten, ignored, or somehow exchanged, as imagination impels, into the loose apparent way that worldly wisdom makes probable. As if man's wisdom ever did rise above the divine! As if the sects at the first advent were more accurate than Simeon and Anna—than the angels and apostles, whose words and way were all in the wake of patriarchs and prophets! No! No! God's way of life is above the wise, that he may depart from hell beneath! And though it be high as Heaven above us all (Isa. lv. 9.) it seems narrow to men, because it always holds them to His straight, consistent and religious way, as it is revealed by his servants the prophets, Amos iii. 7. Yet they, vain mortals, want to be thought wise though born ignorant as "the wild ass's colt." Job. xi. 12. Hence they say in action, "Our lips are our own; who is Lord over us?" As the Jews, the Pharisees and Sadducees, would not bow to the word of the Lord, they could not enter into the narrow way, the way of life. The word of the Lord tried Joseph. Ps. cv. It tries and tests us all. It furnishes the scales of the sanctuary in which we may be weighed, and if we will not receive it) be found wanting. Here is the grand, practical test of character. You, I, all of us, must bow to the Lord or else be broken. God is no respecter of persons.

His will as to the four kingdoms of earth that lead on to the kingdom of God, is no revealed. I accept it, hoping against hope, against all outward appearances and speculations to the contrary. Rome, the fourth, did destroy the city and sanctuary of Israel. Dan. ix. 25-27; Matt. xxiii. 37-39. Nay, more: this desolation does extend on to the consummation, and that determined that shall be poured out upon the desolator. The fourth beast representing Rome, is to be slain at the Judgment. Dan. vii. 9-11. The imagery, geography and chronology of Rome in Revelation xii. to xvii. apply only to Rome that did reign over the kings of the earth. Nay, the kingdom of which the prophet spake of old, Ezek. xxxviii. 17, was the Assyro-Babylonian. Isa. x. and xiii. In Jeremiah alone we have this Gentile power of the north twenty-two times: in no one of which can it be Russia. Judea was and is the standpoint of prophecy. Syria was the king of the north, as Egypt was of the south, through some 2,000 years. This may be but a little of the testimony to Bible geography, and the number (four) of the kingdoms of men.

Note first, that the beginning of his kingdom by Nimrod was through varied stages, and was completed by Nebuchadnezzar, the Babylonian. Dan. iv, 29-37. The last—the fourth—is Rome! Turkey the third part is the Eastern.

Note second. St. Petersburgh was began A. D. 1703, and is less than twice as old as our nation, as one of the great powers of the earth. It has no place in God's number four; nor in their geography, or their relation to Palestine and Popery, except as all American, northern European, and other incipient colonial nationalities, are embraced in the ends of the earth.

Note third, the Meshech, Tubal, &c., of Ezek. 27, were then within the range of the Black and Caspian seas, the precise geography of Syria, Dan. xiv., and the Assyro-Babylonian of Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel, and [illegible] north to Israel, ever [illegible] time! Just as the Mediterranean was west, and Egypt south. After this who can.

Note fourth, true Russia is north of Palestine, as America is west, but neither has a place in the four kingdoms—four horns of the Gentiles that scattered Israel, Judah and Jerusalem. The last horn of the fourth beast, Rome, speaks great words until the judgment; whosoever may object thus it is written.

Most eloquent and earnest men have proclaimed that the United States is the fifth, or kingdom of God. Others think Russia is to triumph, fill the largest page in the history of time, and be the kingdom they number five. "Russia Triumphant," page 5 and all through. When the symbols, Rev. xvii., were then said to represent Russia, I answered that Rome, alone, had the seven mountains, seven heads and ten horns, and was the reigning city over the nations. Nay, more, that the blood and bondage of Israel with that of the martyred saints, lay at the door of Rome; and hence, that the imagery and answering history belonged only to Rome. This was too positive and too plain to be denied, but the author of that theory among us presumed to meet it by asserting that Russia would become Roman (this fifth fall back into the fourth) when Russia shall take its place on the Roman habitable. This principle, I answered, would sink the conqueror in the conquered, the devourer in that he devours, and make the dragon-serpent on swallowing a lamb to be himself lost or absorbed in the lamb. It involves the most absolute absurdity that was ever adopted to cover up that most egregious error. It was a fallacy too flagrant to be repeated, though it seems never to have been abandoned by those under its author's personal influence. As with the poor Jews, appearances are taken, instead of the oft repeated statements of the prophets; and that, too, against the most palpable facts of history, geography, chronology and prophecy. Take Syria, the king of the north, (not to note Babylon and Persia, through the older prophets,) and every child should know that Russia has no part or place in its history, geography or chronology. In fact Russia has no place at all in association with Israel, or the early church—the land and people of God; for her existence begins two thousand years too late. Nay, further; I have never, for over twenty years, found one who did not take the theory of Dr Thomas in "Russia Triumphant" altogether on his authority. I forbear to give names and dates and facts further. Indeed, the above are given to relieve troubled minds as to this main subject. Facts seem to require this of me. The mistake was grossly marvelous; neither its author nor its advocates ever since have ventured to sustain or defend it, to my knowledge, yet the speculations of its author are all tainted with that central and monstrous blunder.

Doctrine is always practical when we believe and speak as the oracles of God; but when the divine word is concealed, and human pride and speculation run riot instead, then the doctrine of the Lord is wrested to what in the end may be destruction. "Thus (to me) it is written." The Lord alone is supreme. His word is himself revealed. Every knee must bow and every tongue confess at last.

No Condemnation to Those Who Are in Christ.

There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit. Rom. viii. 1.

Query: Why is there no condemnation to them which are in Christ? Answer: "For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made them free from the law of sin and death." Verse 2. That is, free from the Mosaical law, which could not give life, for if there could have been a law that could have given life, verily righteousness would have been by the law, says Paul; and again Paul says, if the old law was faultless, there would not have been a place sought for another. But the law that now is, maketh all perfect that draweth nigh unto it with a pure heart, and search it (the law) to see what is in the law, so they can obey the same. Wherefore, if we give diligence to the things written in this law, "we shall never fall," for he that is faithful hath said he would be with us always, even unto the end of the world."

Let us then be faithful, looking and pressing forward unto that great day of the Lord, and keep these things in memory, that we may overcome at last, wear the crown, and be permitted to set down in the kingdom of God with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the redeemed ones that have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

But back to the text again. The question might arise in the worldly-minded person, How am I to get into Christ, so that I may be permitted to enjoy all these blessings? We answer:

1. According to the teaching of the gospel, by faith in the Lord the Christ and the Son of the Living God.

2. By repentance, which leadeth to a godly sorrow, and causes the mind to be taken off of worldly things and placed upon things heavenly, which are eternal.

3. By being baptized (by immersion) in the name of the Lord; John iii. 5; Romans vi. 4-5; Col. ii. 12; and raised to walk in newness of life, and to grow in grace and knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. Eph. iv. 22-24; Col. iii. 9, 10.

Now to this class of people there is no condemnation (as long as they remain loyal to their federal head), because they are born of the incorruptible seed, the word of God which liveth and abideth forever. 1 Peter i. 23.

There may be some who will take exceptions to this, but I think when they understand what I mean by "no condemnation," we will agree. For this I know, we are all resting under condemnation in one sense of the word—but not under the same condemnation as the sinner and ungodly.

But says 1 John iii. 14: We have passed from death unto life. How, John? because we love the brethren, or by loving the brethren? Yes, says Paul, "love is the fulfilling of the law." Rom. xiii. 8, 10.

But how is it on the other hand? Let John tell us: "He that loveth not his brother abideth in death." And oh, how great is that death! Jesus "says they shall not see life." John iii. 36. How is this? Why, Christ died for the sin of the world, which was Adam's transgression. Now Christ has taken that out of the way, and now we stand related to God as Adam did before the transgression, (only we have not the tree of life to perpetuate our lives), and we can obey the law that God has given to us and live, or disobey and die. For God has promised to bring all who would obey his voice out from under the Adamic penalty, that they may live over yonder in the golden age. Glorious promise! Let us be be faithful, that we may attain unto these glorious blessings!

Yes, brethren, I fancy that I can see that beautiful city, the New Jerusalem, descending from heaven, and that I can see the redeemed of the Lord flowing into it, where sorrow and sighing will flee away, and where all will be everlasting joy and gladness, in that beautiful city beyond the river.

Pray for me, brethren, that I may meet all the redeemed in the kingdom of God. J. M. HARLAN.

Conference at Antioch, Illinois.

Friday evening, May 25th, conferences convened at Antioch, Ogle county, Illinois, as per notice given in the RESTITUTION. Brother Geo. Moyer preached concerning the Future Age and its glories.

Met Saturday at 9 a. m., Brother John Arnold, acting as president. Brother J. M. Gloffelty was appointed secretary in absence of Brother S. P. Renner. Brethren J. W. Appleyard, R. Appleyard and J. A. Moyer, were appointed committee of arrangements. While the committee were arranging programme, Brother Button entertained the brethren by giving a brief but very interesting history of the Mohammedan religion; after which we listened to short exhortations on different points of interest to the building of each other up in the most holy faith. Then adjourned to meet at 2 p. m.

Met as per adjournment; Brother Arnold spoke half hour, Brother A. J. Eychaner half hour on the first principles of the faith, giving a short review of our past labors. Brother Button occupied the balance of the time, using Rom. i. 5, as the subject of his remarks. Adjourned to meet at 10 a. m. Sunday.

Sunday morning, Brother Jacobs made a few remarks regarding the authenticity of God's Word. Brother Arnold spoke on the subject of the Bread and Wine, after which a goodly number of brethren and sisters partook of the emblems of Christ's broken body and spilled blood. Brother Geo. Moyer then delivered a very interesting discourse on the "Signs of the Times," demonstrating that we are living in the latter days, proving that Gentile rule will last but a little while, and then the faithful, tried and true, will reap their merited reward. We adjourned for dinner, and met again at 2 p. m., and appointed the next conference to be held at Dixon in the latter part of August, or first of September, as the president may appoint. Then Brother R. Appleyard delivered a short discourse on the obedience of the gospel. Others offered a few remarks, and the meeting adjourned.

Met at 7 p. m. Brother Arnold read part of Col. iii. Brother Mitchel followed in prayer. Fifteen minutes were offered to each person wishing to speak. Several responded, and two and a half hours were occupied in speaking, singing and prayer. There seemed to be a spirit of willingness to act that is seldom more marked than on this occasion, in so much, that one brother rose three or four times before he gained an opportunity to speak. Many were present, and some came who are living, as it were, alone, and who have not the opportunity of meeting often with any of "like precious faith." To them, especially, the meetings were very interesting, and, no doubt, all were greatly benefited.

It was, indeed, a great pleasure to meet in such capacity; but what are the joys and pleasures of this meeting when compared with, that of the saints in their eternal home? Let us be of good cheer, for soon the Master will come, and then, if found faithful, we shall wear the victor's crown.

By order of conference,
L. BOOTH.

Were it the design or province of faith to say to a literal mountain, "Be thou removed to yonder place," it would obey instantly; for that could be done by force far inferior to faith itself. An earthquake, a subterranean explosion could do that. Faith takes hold of objects more stubborn than a mountain, does what the Curses never did, controls spirit. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even your faith."

The Way of life blooms only once.

The Restitution.

S. A. OWAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 6, 1877.

WE have received about two hundred copies of Brother Sweet's pamphlet on The Rich Man and Lazarus, from Brother T. Finn, for the benefit of the RESTITUTION. Price, fifteen cents a copy. By sending for this work, brethren will aid the cause to the extent of purchases.

WE are in receipt of a book entitled, The New Medical Era: being a Popular Medical Treatise on Cholera, Cholera morbus, Cholera infantum, Yellow Fever, Cerebro Meningitis Spinalis or Spotted Fever. By H. Beadle, M. D. St. Louis, Mo. Price $1. Dr. Beadle is engaged in the practice of medicine in the city of St. Louis, and devoting especial attention to consumption, rheumatism, sick headache, dyspepsia, and female complaints. As yet, we have been so preoccupied with the affairs of the RESTITUTION that we have only glanced through the book. Brother Beadle writes that his practice is eminently successful.

WE hardly thought that a formal and definite declaration of our sole reliance on the word of inspired prophecy, in explaining current events, or forecasting the probabilities of the future would be necessary. While admitting that "coming events may cast their shadows before," and that certain minds are susceptible of premonitions of advancing calamity, our unwavering confidence is in the Divine Spirit's revealings as embodied in the Scriptures. We have neither the time nor the space to say more now. Please let us picture humanity as it is. Unfortunately it is imperfect, and partaking of it ourself, we probably have a large share of its imperfections.

IN our paper of this week will be found several communications relating to the condition politically, of the Turks and Jews. The simultaneous wasting of the Moslem's power, and the emancipation and prosperity of scattered Israel, are the great beacon lights of prophecy indicative of an impending crisis in human history. The abominations that have so long desolated the holy places, and defiled Immanuel's land, are about to be swept away with the destructive besom of war. The land of holy history—of inspired song and prophecy—is about to revert to the rightful owners. As the Crescent sinks, the Star of Jacob rises. The Mosque of the False Prophet, and the church of rival apostate ecclesiasticisms, will, in due time, give place to Jehovah's temple of the latter day glory. As the Israelitish fig tree is putting forth its leaves, we know that its summer of blossoming and fruitage in the gardens of God is at hand. "He shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root; Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit." Isa. xxvii. 6. In the very commencement of this work Messiah comes to the air and glorifies his church. When the shadows fall thick, the midnight call to meet the Bridegroom will be heard. Watch and pray.

"The Sea and the Waves Roaring."

A tidal wave has once more rolled over the mighty Pacific. On the 10th of May, a destructive upheaval of the ocean was experienced along an extent of coast from Mexico to Chili in South America. It destroyed several places on the coast of Peru. It extended to the Sandwich islands. In some places the water rose sixty feet high. At the Sandwich Islands it rose to the height of thirty feet in places. Thus, with the Eastern war, and with famines in China and India, and earthquakes and tidal waves along Mexico and South America, and destructive fires in different cities and different parts of the country, there is sufficient reason for apprehension and failing of hearts. The fashion of this world passeth away.

The Hindoo pariahs through British India continue to endure the contempt, which, for ages, the other castes have thrown upon them, but in the French territory of Pondicherry they have united, five thousand in number, in an address to the Government, demanding the same rights as the brahmins. "We drag after us," they say, "the heavy chain, not only of bodily slavery, but of moral slavery. We are regarded as impure beings, not only essentially unclean in our natures, but as cursed by a contaminating power which communicates itself by touch to any one encountered." The petition concludes by demanding that the children of pariahs shall be admitted into the College of Calvi-Soup-praiselelly on equal terms with the sons of brahmins, or that an especial college shall be founded for them, where the instruction shall be the same.

Palestine Repeopling, and Signs of The End.

1. The New Land Laws in Palestine—2. The New Laws of Military Service in Russia—3. New Civilization in the East—Missions—The Consulates—Influx of Visitors—The Hoffmanites—Building Societies—The Prophecies Fulfilling.

At a moment when all eyes are turned to the East, it cannot be unimportant to learn that, after the slumber of ages, Palestine is awakening to new life, and Israel is actually returning to its shores in such numbers, and in such a way, as they have never been known to do. While in the former instances, whether under pagan, Christian, or Moslem masters, they were equally the subjects of extortion, oppression, and contumely; now they are beginning to hold a position of comfort, independence, and power. This remarkable change is in itself significant, and the whole movement should surely be watched by the student of prophecy with eager and expectant attitude.

The great importance of the day in which we live arises from the very general agreement amongst commentators who take the historical view of prophecy, that the period of 1,260 years of Papal and Mohammedan temporal power is now fast expiring. At its termination the Jews are to return, before their conversion, to their own land, in very considerable numbers. Dan. xii. 7; Rev. xi. 3, etc.

It may be asked, are there any signs as yet of the commencement of this momentous event? A residence of some years in the Holy Land, and an intimate acquaintance with what is now passing there leads me unhesitatingly to answer that such there are. The last four or five years have witnessed a return of the Jews to Palestine from all parts, but more especially from Russia, which has been altogether unprecedented. The Hebrew population of Jerusalem is now probably double what it was some ten years ago.

In 1872 and 1873 such numbers came to reside in Saphed, one of the four holy cities of the Jews in the mountains of Galilee, that there were no houses to receive them, and building was for a considerable length of time carried on all night, as well as all day—this, be it remembered, in the East, where "the night [illegible] time "in which no man can work." Great accessions still continue daily; and whereas ten years ago the Jews were confined to their own quarter in Jerusalem, the poorest and worst, they now inhabit all parts of the city, and are always ready to rent any house that is to be let. Notwithstanding this happy change, want of accommodation still being felt, building societies have been formed, and many of their simple tenements are now rising outside the city to the north-west. Moreover, the Jews in Palestine are certainly acquiring possession of landed property in the villages and country districts. I believe the Hebrew population of Palestine proper must now be stated at 30,000, of whom more than half reside in Jerusalem. This is, without reckoning the Jews of Sidon, Beyrout, and Damascus, all within the limits of the Land of Promise, probably some 7,000 or 8,000 more.

Three causes have, in the providence of God, mainly contributed to bring about this marked return to the Land of Promise: first, new land laws affecting Palestine; secondly, new laws of military service in Russia; thirdly, new civilization throughout the East.

1. As regards the new land laws in Turkey, formerly none but rayahs, or subjects of Turkey, could hold real property in any part of the Ottoman empire. Some nine years ago, however, a most important alteration took place. In June, 1867, an Imperial rescript (Hatti Humaïun) gave to all subjects of foreign powers a right to purchase landed property in their own name. It was a part of that marked improvement in the position of foreigners in Turkey, which dates from the time of the Crimean war.

No sooner was the law passed, than many began to purchase plots of ground for building in and around the principal towns of Palestine. At first, men found it hard to believe that safe possessions would be guaranteed, and that Jews, who but a few years before were greeted in the public streets with opprobrious names and shameful ill-treatment, would be allowed by the haughty Mohammedans to become in peace the lords of the soil. But as time wore on, and one villa and cottage after another arose outside the walls of Jerusalem, where the owners lived in safety, new confidence was inspired, and more became desirous of possessing a portion of the sacred ground. In the country districts whole villages, with lands around them to the extent of over 8,000 dunums, or acres, have been bought—lands which, though unmanured from year to year, unimproved in any way, and cultivated with the least possible amount of labor, are immensely productive, owing to the extraordinary fertility of the soil.

Already land in the neighborhood of several towns has enormously increased in value. To my knowledge, one plot of ground close to Jerusalem was sold, three years ago, for twenty times the sum which was paid for it some time previously, by the owner. This increase in value has arisen from the right of foreigners to purchase real property.

2. In the second place new laws of military service in Russia, coming into operation shortly after the promulgation of the new real property laws in Palestine, have greatly tended to lead Israel's weary steps back to their own land. Formerly, in Russia, they were not, as a body, compelled to take arms, but were allowed, if they chose, to pursue their usual peaceful avocations; now, however, this has all been changed. Russia has been, ever since the Crimean war, preparing for the next great struggle against Turkey, and part of that preparation has been the introduction, in 1874, of the German scheme of military service, which forces all the Jewish population in her dominions to enter the army.

All Jews throughout Russia are now required to be enrolled and drilled at the age of twenty-one. Israelites are singularly averse to the military calling. They have therefore, taken alarm at the terms of this new system. Moreover, they are especially disinclined to fight for Russia. In that country they have suffered much—in common with all who differ from it—at the hands of the Greek Church. Many persecuting laws have been passed against them, more especially in Poland.

Now, in Palestine they are still entirely exempt from service in the army. A trifling poll-tax amounting, I believe, to about a majedy (four shillings) a head is taken from Jews and Christians in Syria in lieu of their liability to conscription. They have, therefore, decided to leave Russia when and how they can. This is not easily managed, for such are the despotic laws of that state, that in many cases their preparation for departure would be a ground for their imprisonment. Still, great numbers of them [illegible] the Bow arriving in Jerusalem, and they already form a very new element of wealth and influence in the Holy City. During the years 1871 to 1874 every steamer from Russia brought her large quota of Hebrew passengers, and those whose business it was to meet travellers at Jaffa, and conduct them to Zion, marked with astonishment the great crowds that came by these ships. This state of things, it is said, still continues.

I have, myself, repeatedly heard from their brethren in Jerusalem, and from Turkish officials in that city, who were in a position to know, that the Russian Jews, in a body, have, ever since the adoption of the German system of military service in 1874, anxiously sought to leave Muscovite territory, and settle in the Holy Land. They cannot, if they would, escape all at once. The stream of emigration, however, is now slowly but steadily flowing towards Emmanuel's Land, and will, there is every reason to believe, continue to flow—the more speedily as the dark war-clouds now impending settle down on Europe—till Russia is emptied of a Hebrew population that probably numbers one-third of the whole nation of the Jews.

3. But we have yet to notice the influence on this movement of a new civilization in Syria. Neither the facilities for acquiring land in Palestine, nor the dread military service in Russia, would have been inducements strong enough to have led back European Jews to the country as it was some thirty years ago, in 1847. In those days Jerusalem could not be entered save in Eastern costume; the Jews were shut up in their own unwholesome quarter, and it would have been death to live amongst the Turks. No one could venture alone outside the walls of Jerusalem after dark, much less live in any country-house. A Jew of highest position walking through the Suk (bazaars) was liable to the grossest insult, for which there could be no redress.

For instance, a Turk would take off his shoe, throw it at the poor fellow, and bailing him as a dog, bid him fetch it, an indignity to which he was bound to submit. Fanaticism, violence, ignorance, and dishonesty had everything their own way. Such was the state of things in the towns. In the country districts the land was wholly uninhabitable for Europeans. There was not a single road in the country; and when it is added that the Bedouin Arabs at harvest time swept across the unprotected fords of the Jordan, to rob the threshing floors and levy black mail, we have a true outline of the terrible picture of ruin presented by Emanuel's Land some years ago. Now, the change that has taken place in all this is indeed very striking.

The coming of the missionaries to reside in the country, about forty years ago, has doubtless, under God, been the chief of these causes. No honest Hebrew acquainted with the modern history of Palestine can fail to know very well, however little he may care to confess it, that the altogether new comforts and privileges he now enjoys are due in no small degree to the work, direct and indirect, of Protestant missionaries, and more especially of the early missionaries to the Jews.

Amongst other agencies of civilization, must be enumerated the establishment of Consulates, in various towns of Palestine, by which means most of the leading nations of Europe are now represented. Not only has the presence of these European representatives, many of them diplomatic agents entrusted with considerable powers, been in itself a great check upon the general lawlessness which preceded their coming; but it has rendered it possible for all subjects of their respective nations to live in comparative comfort and safety.

Another cause of the present improved condition of the country, is the annual influx of a very great and increasing number of visitors. Of late years, from the commencement of December to the beginning of the following May, but more especially during the delightful spring season, crowds have thronged the ordinary pilgrim ways. Royal personages have been conspicuous among the number. Formerly only a few very wealthy travellers could accomplish the journey. Now it may be said to be within the reach of ordinary tourists. There are two well-known conductors of traveling parties in England, Mr. Cook and Mr. Gaze, and one in Germany, who constantly bring tourists, and very many Americans and Russians come. In consequence of the visits of some royal personages, the principal roads have been repaired, and in some cases made anew. The improvements in this direction during the last three years have been very marked.

A German community known as "the Society of the Temple," also called familiarly "the Hoffmanites," from their leader Dr. Hoffman, a band of piously disposed Germans, to the number of about a thousand, have in the last few years settled as colonists, principally at Jerusalem, Jaffa, and Haiffa, where as tradesmen, mechanics, and domestic servants, they have helped most materially to improve the condition of the country. They believe that in thus coming they are fulfilling prophecy. God's future revealed purpose for Palestine is, according to their interpretation, that it should be colonized by Christians from out of all nations, who will finally build a temple at Jerusalem.

Other improvements have taken place. Until five years ago, the gates of Jerusalem were all shut at sunset, and were not opened, except to the privileged possessor of a special pass, until the next day. This highly inconvenient practice came to an end some five years ago.

At Jaffa, by command of the governor, the massive town wall, an extensive fortification, has within the last few years been pulled down, and some of the stones were bought, as building material for a new school house in connection with Miss Walker Arnott's excellent work. Shops have of late sold European commodities; so that some of the comforts and luxuries of western life may now be procured; and vegetables or fruits, which formery were so scarce, are now cheap and abundant.

No less than three building societies have been organized among the Jews, which are rapidly erecting new houses, and of which Sir Moses Montefiore has given an excellent account. Another remarkable fact is that an Ordnance Survey Map of Palestine from Dan to Beersheba is nearly completed by the English Palestine Exploration Society, on the scale of an inch to a mile.

Now that to Turkish bankruptcy has been added an awful outbreak of Turkish barbarity, the crisis has come, and the dread settlement of the Eastern question can, it is felt on all hands, no longer be delayed. What that settlement is in part to be, is written over and over again in the Word of God. When the "river Euphrates" the symbol of the Turkish power, is dried up, it is that "the way of" the Jews, "the kings of the East, may be prepared." Israel are to return to their own land. This event, in its incipient stage, I have shown to be now actually taking place. That which is yet to be looked for is the restoration of the Jewish nationality under the protection of some one or more of the Great Powers. And all this is preparatory to the second coming of Christ.—By Rev. J. Neil, late Incumbent of Christ Church, Jerusalem, in Bible Examiner

Disintegration of the Turkish Empire.

In the first half of the sixteenth century, during the reign of Sultan Solleman, the Turkish Empire had gained control of its greatest reach of territory. At that time the armies of the Sultan had gone as far West and North as to have their encampment pitched under the very walls of the city of Vienna. The capital of Austria was really in great danger of falling a prey to the rapacity of the Turks. The then Kingdom of Hungary had almost fallen under the power of that masterly ruler. Roumania, Servia, Greece, the Islands in the Ægean and the present possessions in Asia and Africa were all firmly in his grasp. Turkey was then notably one of the most powerful Empires, as it is now one of the weakest and most loosely-constructed Governments known to civilization. It gave manifestations, at that time, of its greatest vigor. The reign of Sulleman was its golden age. Compared with other periods of its own history, Turkey was a cause of great alarm to all Christendom. The world stood in complete awe of her power. The Turks were, at that time, in control of the best part of three great continents—where man had made his greatest achievements in art, literature, culture, refinement, religion and civil government. This region was the very paradise of human grandeur in the whole history of mankind.

The first great triumphs of power on the part of the Turk were achieved in the destruction of every visible sign of a former civilization, and the reduction of the inhabitants of those beautiful countries to a condition of primitive helplessness and vassalage. Having fairly accomplished all this, his only anxiety seems to have been to keep his subjects in this abject condition of helplessness and oppression.

Austria was the first Power that offered successful resistance to the victorious Turks in their encroachment on the West. From this time onward the Turkish Empire began gradually to wane. After a century's sway over Hungary, the Ancient Kingdom of the Magyars was re-established; and the Turks removed their encampment far away from Buda—gradually retreating to more limited quarters. The Black Sea, which had been for centuries completely within the limits of the Turkish Empire, was in part given up; and little by little Russia, continuing her encroachments on the north and east, has gained peaceable possession of two sides of that great inland sea.

In 1815 Servia's repeated revolutions against the power of Turkey came to a successful termination. Her home rule was acknowledged by the Porte, and has also been maintained to the present time. In 1856 Moldavia and Wallachia were reorganized under the name and title of Roumania, with the right and authority of managing their internal affairs—on the condition of paying a nominal tribute, and in turn acknowledged the Sultan as their feudal Lord. A few days ago Servia and Roumania both declared their independence of the Porte, and they are now ready to support their position by the arbitrament of the sword. In 1821 little gallant Hellas struck for revolution and independence, and after several years of dire conflict and extreme suffering, in 1829 her independence was also acknowledged by the Porte. Thus, within the limits of about two centuries there has been chopped away from this once formidable Empire, territory enough to furnish to-day homes for about 25,000,000 souls.

Tunis, Egypt and Syria are to-day held only by a slender cord. Any sudden revolution may burst the tie that still holds them subservient to the Empire. Nearly all of Armenia has within one month yielded its control to Russia's victorious arms. At the present rate of progress, it will not be long before a large part of the southern shore of the Black sea is destined to be in the power of Russia by the right and rule of conquest. What shall we say of Epirus, Thessaly, Macedonia and Bulgaria? These are only waiting for a good opportunity to carry revolt to a successful termination. The first decided victory of the Russians along the Danube will serve as a decisive spur to impel all these provinces to arms. Herzegovina and Bosnia have already been under arms for two years, and the present movements of Russia have had the effect of giving new inspiration to their revolution. The mountaineers of little Montenegro have been in arms against the Turks for six centuries, and have never at any time rendered willing obedience. They are trained warriors from their mothers' knees—to swear eternal resistance against the rule of the Tartar Turks.

This is indeed a sad, yet truthful, picture of the condition of the once powerful Ottoman Empire. Can it long survive the present attacks threatening on every hand? This is the great problem, to-day, in European politics. If the Turks had been left to themselves, they would have perished long ago as rulers from the face of the earth. It is the support which has been received from other powers that has sustained them up to the present time. Whether this support can be continued much longer is, at least, becoming to be seriously questioned.—Chicago Evening Journal

Crebities.

There are now sixty-nine daily, weekly and monthly periodicals in Bengalee and Tamil, the two languages of India in which the greatest activity is shown. Twelve of these are devoted to Mussulman interests and about twenty to Christian.

There is an almost complete equality in the worlds sexes. In France this balance is most nearly attained, there for every 1,000 men there are 1,007 women. In Sweeden, to 1,000 men there are 1,064 women, while in Greece, to the same number of males there are but 938 Greek women. In Paraguay there are only 1,000 men to every 2,090 women, a state of things mainly due to the ravages of the Brazilian war.

A whale sixty feet long has been cast up by the sea near Tyre, near the spot where the whale cast up Jonah 2,700 years ago. The Pasha of Beirut has presented it to the Syrian Protestant college.

In the inside of a lump of coal, taken out of the Seattle mine a few days ago, was an oyster of full and perfect shape. It was nearly three inches long, hinged, filled and fully shelled. It had been turned to coal.—Puget Sound Express.

The city of Orleans, in France, celebrated on May 7 the 445th anniversary of its deliverance by Jeanne D'Arc. Flags were displayed, artillery boomed, a high mass was celebrated in the Cathedral, and splendid fireworks were ignited in the evening. The old standard borne by Jeanne D'Arc was also displayed in the Cathedral and then returned to the keeping of the Bishop of Orleans, when Father Monsabre pronounced a panegyric upon the heroic maiden. The Comte de Paris and the Emperor and Empress of Brazil were present.

Not only is the Turkish navy commanded by Hobart Pasha, an Englishman who still holds a commission in the British navy, but numbers of subordinate positions in the Turkish army and navy are held by Englishmen who are either full or half pay officers in the British service.

The Modoc Indians, now numbering fifty-four males and sixty-three females, are located on a very fertile tract, containing 4,000 acres, in the northeast corner of the Shawnee reservation, Indian Territory. They have engaged energetically in labor during the past year, and, as a result, they have a large and valuable crop on their farm.

Time was when geology was cited as a witness against the Mosaic record of creation; perhaps the time is not far distant when Moses will be deemed the Great Geologist, the father of the decree that demands "infinite time" as its postulate. In a recent conversation, a gentleman who is a disciple of Darwin and an enthusiastic geologist, made this remark: "Geology and Genesis agree so perfectly in the great outlines of creation that I am at a loss to know where Moses got that information."

The Rev. Wiley Jones of Norfolk, Va., spoke in National Hall, Williamsburgh, on "The Kingdom of God soon to be Literally and Visibly Established on Earth." Mr. Jones's remarks were extemporaneous, and he had no definite text, quoting liberally from the Old Testament in the course of his address, in which he said: The Kingdom of God will be set up on the earth, and will be just as literal and visible as any earthly monarchies that have already existed. The crisis will occur when the Euphrates is drying up—that is, when the Turkish Empire is being destroyed. This crisis is indicated in the 38th chapter of Ezekiel; the great Russian shall march "Out of his place in the north parts." This is said to occur when "all men that are on the face of the earth shall shake at the presence of the Lord." The second verse of Ezekiel 38th, should read, "The Prince of Rosh, Meschech, and Tubal," the Rosh being the Russian. He asserted his belief that the end of the world is near at hand, and implored his hearers to seek the throne of grace before it was too late.—New York Sun.

In Memory of Lucy Shaffer, Who Died April 14th, 1877.

We turn away in mournfulness,
From strange inquiring eyes;
And bend our footsteps where we know,
Our dearly loved one lies.

In patience thou didst suffer long,
And oft we've heard thee tell:
"I want to rest till Jesus comes,
I know that all is well."

A mother mourns her child so dear,
His sorrow none can tell;
Dear Lucy, thou won't all be here,
How hard to say farewell!

A husband bends beneath his grief,
A loved one no more there;
His home looks sad and desolate,
And there's the vacant chair.

An only sister goes to yonder mound,
While tears roll down her cheek;
Life lost no pleasures now for her,
Dear sister, let me weep.

The rose above thy grave shall bloom,
To mark where thou dost be;
But, oh! the aching hearts of some,
Can never say—good-bye.

Then peaceful be thy silent rest,
There'll be a glorious dawn;
Then shall meet, to part no more,
In the resurrection morn.

Your sister in Christ,

Four Weeks in Palestine.

BY PHILIP SCHAFF, D. D., LL. D.

BANIAS (Cæsarea Philippi,)
April 18th, 1877.

"In those fields,
Over whose acres walked those blessed feet
Which, eighteen centuries ago, were nailed
For our advantage on the bitter cross."

At last I have fulfilled a long-cherished desire to see with mine own eyes and to tread with mine own feet the most sacred and the most classical land in the world. My only regret is that I did not visit it twenty or thirty years earlier. I have been neither favorably nor unfavorably disappointed. I found the country and the people pretty much as I expected, but I trust I understand both better than before. My faith in the Bible has not been shaken but confirmed. The Bible is the best handbook for the Holy Land, and the Holy Land the best commentary on the Bible.

I approached Palestine from the wilderness and the Philistine city of Gaza, where the Jewish Hercules exhibited his strength and his weakness. Two pillars of granite are still shown which Samson pulled down, destroying himself and three thousand Philistines assembled at a feast. The Moslems of the place claim him as a Mohammedan, the Greek Christians as a Christian! I am interested in the old Greek church and school, and still more in three Protestant schools which Mr. W. Prittobett, a pious Englishman, established in this city, with three teachers—one a grateful pupil of the late Dr. Calhoun of Lebanon, and two sisters of Miss Thompson's school at Beirut. This gave me the first idea of the educational work going on in Palestine and Syria in the interest of evangelical missions. I then crossed over fertile plains and rocky hills to Bet Jibrim (the ancient Eleutheropolis) and Hebron, the city of Abraham, surrounded by rich vineyards. I went to the door of the famous mosque which conceals the remains of the patriarchs, and had a taste of Moslem fanaticism in a rude attack of a dervish and the curses of the children in the street, but got complete satisfaction from the governor, who imprisoned the offender and sent us a military guard. I stood under the venerable oak of Mamre, where the father of the faithful entertained his angelic visitors. I spent some hours in Bethlehem, and was shown by a kind Franciscan monk the place where our Savior was born, the manger in which he laid, and the study where St. Jerome translated the Bible. I enjoyed the extensive view from Neby Samuel over the battle field of Gibeon and Bethhoron, the Plain of Sharon, and the cities of Ramleh and Jaffa.

I spent ten days at Jerusalem, visiting the traditional localities of the greatest events which ever occurred or will occur, and attending the solemnities of the Latin and the Greek Easter with mingled feelings of joy and sadness. I looked upon this most sacred and most desecrated city from Mt. Olivet, where our Savior ascended to heaven. I visited the ruins of Bethany and descended to what is said to be the tomb of Lazarus. I floated on the waters of the Dead Sea, in full view of the Mountains of Moab, where Jehovah "kissed Moses to death," after showing him the beauties of the Land of Promise. I took a refreshing bath in the muddy, swift-flowing waters of the Jordan, at the traditional site of Christ's baptism. I spent a night at Jericho and barely escaped "falling among robbers." I rested on a stony pillow at Bethel, dreaming the dream of Jacob and singing—

"Nearer by God to thee."

I saw the ruins of Shiloh, which once sheltered the Ark of the Covenant. I sat on Jacob's well, where our Lord weary from traveling, offered to a poor woman the water of life which has since quenched the thirst of innumerable souls. I read there with some friends the fourth chapter of St. John and thought of the touching allusion to this scene in the "Dies Iræ:"

"Quærens me sedisti lassus,
Redemisti crucem passus,
Tantus labor non sit cassus."

I ascended the ruins of the temple of the Samaritans on Mt. Gerizim, where the remnant of 150 members of this mongrel sect still make their annual sacrifice of paschal lambs; and I saw their ancient manuscript of the Pentateuch (the original as well as the copy.) I rode over the lovely fields and hills of Samaria through which Jesus passed on his annual visits to Jerusalem. My eyes feasted on the Plain of Esdraelon—the cattle field of Israel,—which was spread out like a green carpet of waving grain fields. I touched at Nain, where our Lord raised a widow's only son from death to life. I spent a memorable Sabbath in Nazareth, where the Savior of the world lived thirty years in quiet waiting and preparation for his work, misunderstood by his own townsmen and kindred! I ascended Tabor, the traditional (though not probable) Mount of the Transfiguration, and the Rift of Palestine. I rode on the banks and sailed on the waters of Lake Gennesareth, which is as beautiful as a Swiss lake, with a better climate and greater fertility, but now fearfully neglected and desolate; only half a dozen poor fisher boats of Tiberias can be seen, and the very site of the once populous cities of Capernaum, Bethsaida and Chorazin are still matters of dispute among archæologists. I had to make my way through a jungle of thistles and briars to the ruins of Tel Hum, where the broken columns of a synagogue lie about in confusion. I camped at Banias, the ancient Cæsarea Philippi, where Peter confessed the divinity of Christ, and Christ spoke to him those remarkable words: "Thou art Rock, and upon this Rock I will build my Church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

And, after all, what have I seen? Ruins, ruins, ruins! Yet these ruins are the witnesses of the greatest deeds of God for men. These ruins are the strong arguments for the truth of the prophecies of the Scripture. They prove the literal fulfillment of the words of Christ when he went over ungrateful Jerusalem. What Israel has rejected has become the life of the world. But I cannot go on with these reflections without transgressing the usual limits of a letter.

The place from which I date this letter is the northernmost boundary of Palestine and of the journeys of our Lord. Here he elicited that remarkable confession of Peter which is the mother of all Christian creeds: here he spoke to him those mysterious words which have become the exegetical rock of the amazing assumptions of the Papacy. Near this place, on Mt. Hermon, the Transfiguration probably took place. Here is the upper source of the Jordan, which issues in several rivulets of clear fresh water from beneath the limestone rocks under an overhanging cliff and soon becomes a rushing stream flowing through thickets to Dan, four miles off, where it unites with the lower source, and then to the waters of Merom, and the Sea of Galilee, and at last into the Dead Sea. The little Arab village still bears the ancient Greek name Banias (Paneas, i. e. Sanctuary of Pan,) while the later Roman or Herodian designation, Cæsarea Philippi, has passed away and has some remains of old roads, forts and bridges. On the top of the hill are the ruins of the castle Shuteibeh, of Roman, Saracenic and Christian architecture,—the most extensive I have seen in Palestine and well worthy of a close examination by archæologists. The view over the valley is very fine. The scenery reminds me of some parts of Switzerland or Northern Italy. The olive, fig and oleander flourish here luxuriantly, but the country is neglected and overgrown with weeds. The climate is delightful, and the weather as warm as in June in America. I have not had a rainy day since I entered Palestine.

To-morrow I shall ascend Mt. Hermon and bid forever farewell to Palestine. In two days I expect to reach Damascus, the earthly Paradise of the Mohammedans, unless the rumor which reached us to-day that war has broken out between Russia and Turkey should prove correct and force us to avoid the city where, only sixteen years ago, some four thousand Christians were massacred, without any provocation, by the fanatical Mohammedans. In that case we might also have to give up Baalbek and take the nearest route to Beirut and the Austrian steamer.—N. Y. Observer.

Some day earth will know no gloom,
Some day faith will rise from sleep,
Some day hope will bud and bloom,
Some day man will cease to weep;
When the path of life is rough,
Some day Death will cry, "Enough!"

LONDON, June 1.—A dispatch from Vienna Friday night reports that extraordinary precautions have been taken relative to the czar's journey. Already trains usually used for imperial journeys have twice passed along the Galician railways, all the windows being closely curtained. Each time it was believed the czar had passed. Twelve regiments of horse guards will be sent on in advance by twenty-four separate trains.

VIENNA, June 1.—A few days ago the commander of several army corps reported to the Grand Duke Nicholas that the crossing of the Danube was necessary in consequence of the sanitary condition of the army. The highlands of Bulgaria are much preferable to the Roumanian swamps. The sick lists of the army are very large.

Tazly Pasha reports from Sookgoun-Kale, under date of May 29, that four battalions of troops, with some Circassians, defeated the Russians posted between Sookgoun-Kale and Kutais, capturing eight mounted guns and a quantity of ammunition. The Russians threw seventeen guns into the river Kodin, and destroyed the bridge after them.

The war assumes every day more of a religious character, and, whatever the private designs of the porte or the czar, the rank and file of both armies are nerved by the belief that they are the defenders of the faith and are fighting in the interest of the Most High. It is believed that the result of thus arousing the religious frenzy of the people will be to excite a bitter and relentless warfare in which humanity will be shocked by still more cruel deeds of blood.

LONDON, June 2.—The Times' Constantinople correspondent, having just returned from a close inspection of Varna, Rustchuk, and Shumla, says he cannot conscientiously report much in favor of the military authorities. The private soldiers are undoubtedly good and patient, but are miserably fed. The officers, with a few striking exceptions, are not equally good. Abdul Kerim Pasha, commander in chief, is old and in bad health. The troops are well armed, the cavalry especially so, and fairly horsed. The hospital arrangements are not worth mentioning, and there is much sickness and scurvy. The vegetable diet, lately issued at the request of an English doctor, has proved beneficial. Chloroform is greatly needed. Three-fourths of the officers are newly appointed, and have had no previous training. The general fault of the army is a lack of organization and Oriental slowness. Some of the officers, however, are most able and hard-working. At Varna, the Austrian General, Strecker, works day and night. Only one English officer is in the army, and he is merely a captain of cavalry.

BRUSSELS, June 1.—A great fire has occurred in Tiflis. The whole of a principal street was destroyed, together with a large amount of property.

A Curious Prophecy.

Just before the defeat of Mr. Greely for the Presidency, several gentlemen were congregated on a piazza in Newport. Among them was Chief Justice Chase. Another was one of the first conversationalists in the world. The latter repeated, not an anecdote, but a prophecy, which had been uttered by a hermit in Bavaria many years before; and this prophecy was not only delivered, but printed by a number of the Allgemeine Zeitung of about 1857. The Austro-Prussian war was correctly predicted, as well as the Franco-Prussian war and the taking of Paris. Now for the future. In 1876-7, the Pope is to die, which will cause a general European war. Next, France and Prussia are to have another conflict. France is to be defeated and Paris taken for the second time. There will be a partition of France. The Iberian powers, (Spain and Portugal,) are to have a large share, as also Italy. Belgium gets the northern part. Holland is ceded to Prussia. All that will remain of France will be the old "Ile de France," of which Paris is the capital. These results having been obtained, there will be a general acknowledgment of the folly and futility of excessive armaments. All the powers will agree to disarm. Swords will be beaten into plowshares.

The hermit's prophecies for 1866 and 1870 were fulfilled. It seems as though the rest might be. The Pope is in bad health. The chances of a general war growing out of the Eastern question are excellent. Should France think the moment favorable to attack Prussia and be defeated, the conqueror would show no mercy. France would be rendered harmless and her territory divided. The partition of Republican France is the dream of the Prussian "Junker party." The general reduction of armies is less probable. It is easier to change the map of Europe than human nature.

Correspondence.

Editor Restitution:—In the good care of our Father in heaven we are here; and while we have been reminded by rough seas of the impotence of man we felt easy in the mind, looking to a Pilot whom the seas obey. We could discern the wreck on the Welsh coast of our sister vessel, the Dakota; but ours came safe to land with all aboard—though there was some fear of property. We were both sick part of the time, my wife especially; but we were able to take our meals during the latter part of the voyage. On the Sunday a Presbyterian clergyman conducted a meeting in the saloon, and a Catholic priest one in the steerage. Our courteous captain permitted me to speak in the steerage at 2 p. m. I had good attention from a few, while I showed from Dan. ii. that sooner or later the stone must smite the image. In the evening I improved an opportunity to say a little on "the things of the kingdom" to half a dozen of the saloon passengers. So testimony was delivered, perhaps not wholly in vain. Again an opportunity for testifying of the truth to some of the saloon company occured, of which I took advantage. The conversation was between myself and a skeptic; one who thought much of the teachings of Proctor, Tyndall, etc. The person did not like to appear openly an infidel before the company: so when the discussion reached a decisive point, he gave it up. But my satisfaction was that several persons heard what they did of the truth of the resurrection, and its essentiality. Some of these were members of churches, who will not forget all they heard.

When I arrived at Cadishend I found that there had been a despoiling of my afflicted sister's household effects to defray expenses attendant on her situation. Sadness came over me for a time—but I thought again of the treasures which fail not. Let ours be such treasures. H. HEYES.

Editor Restitution:—I have good news to tell you. The hearts of the little flock in Cleveland have been made to rejoice as God has given the increase to the church of seven members. Last Sunday Eld. Bro. Elton Oviatt ate into Christ by baptism. Eld. Bro. Jones one on Wednesday evening. I remain your brother in Christ, GEORGE DOWEL.

Cleveland, O., May 25, 1877.

Editor Restitution:—I am far separated from a single one of the faith, but with the Book for help, though the waters may be deep they never overwhelm. The maxim, "Be sure you are right, then go ahead," applies as well in a religious sense as any other. If it had not been for the bow of promise we should have thought here in Kansas that we must go under. 'Twas not "Oh, the beautiful snow," but "Oh, the rain, the rain!" Would be very glad to increase your subscription list by sending you a long list of names, not forgetting accompaniments, but say "subscribe," and the reply is "grasshopper." If any of the Kansans fail to enter the Kingdom, I verily believe some of them will try to impute the blame to this insect.

The Scape-Goat.

Is not Jesus represented by the scape-goat as really as he is by the one the priest sacrificed? And if so, and if that goat was for an atonement just as much as the one sacrificed, does it not follow that after our High Priest comes out of the holy place (heaven itself) he will make an atonement for the children of Israel without an offering for sin, as Paul says, speaking of the new covenant that God will make with Israel and Judah: "Where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin," etc. Heb. x. 16-18; xvi. 8-11. P. S.—A good article might stimulate some to investigate this subject of salvation in the coming age.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

On the 5th of June, if the Lord will, I expect to b[e] in Champaign county, Illinois, near Fooston, [a] Brother Russell may appoint; also, on the fourth Sunday, or June 24 in Martin county, Indiana, near Shoals, as Brother A. W. Stewart may appoint and continue meetings some days. J. S. HAYES.

There will be a union camp meeting at New Hartford, Butler county, Iowa, commencing June 14th, [and] hold over two Sundays.

It is expected that this will be one of the best [camp] meetings ever held in Northern Iowa. All who believe in the encouraging of our Lord and calling, are [by] his personal return on the earth, to be greatly interested [in] the present. You are earnestly solicited to come [and] both pray for and by means. Come to us, if you can; [if] full of love for Jesus and the truth. Come to worship, to pray, to worship, to do good to others, and you will get good yourselves. Those for whose sake we [go] before the Lord.

Bring your tents and bedticks, sandwiches, soap, towels, pins, shawls, overcoats, rubbers, etc. Straw [can] be had. Grain can be purchased at the market price. Groceries and refreshments can be had on the ground, and board can be had in families adjacent to the ground. Everything that can be done [for] your comfort will be attended to.

H. V. Reed, C. M. Myers, and others, will be present, the Lord willing, to break the bread of life.

New Hartford is on the I. C. R. R., eleven miles from Cedar Falls. Those coming from the east would change at Cedar Falls, the train not to catch.

By order of the committee. C. C. HAMAR.

The Iowa Christian Conference will hold its annual session in connection with the camp meeting at New Hartford. All persons interested in the prosperity of this conference will please attend.

C. C. HAMAR, President.

The Lord willing, the third quarterly conference of the church of God in Iowa, for 1877, will convene at New Hartford, Butler county, Iowa, on the 19th of June, and will be held in connection with the camp meeting at that place, which commences on the 14th. We invite a general turnout of the brethren, that arrangements may be perfected so that it will be unnecessary to adjourn but the union conference after the present meeting.

JOHN FITZ, Secretary.

West Friesy, Iowa, May 7.

Upon consultation the brethren have decided to hold the annual general meeting at Argos, commencing Friday, June 8, 1877, at 10 a. m., and continue over the following Sunday.

Argos is situated on the Indianapolis, Peru & Chicago Railway, in Marshall county, Indiana, eight miles east of Plymouth, and two and a half miles south of Antioch meeting house, where the annual meeting has been held for some years past. A general attendance of the brethren and sisters throughout is earnestly solicited. Come, and let us have one more blessed reunion in the fellowship of the glorious gospel.

By order of the brethren.

Valuable English Works.

Our readers are informed that we expect shortly to have for sale the works mentioned below. Orders and remittances for the same may be sent at once to this office.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Brasdman, Congregational minister, and W. Kelly, editor of Bible Echo, and minister of the Gospel. Both of England. The positions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a lifeless, conscious state after their decease, affirmed by W. C. B. 2. That the Scriptures teach that man in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever, and that they rest in darkness, silence and dust. Cloth, bevelled boards, well bound, [illegible] postage 10c. Paper cover, 35c; postage 6c.

Duration and Nature of Future Punishment. By Rev. H. Constable, M. A., late Precentor of Cork, Ireland. 320 pp. An elaborate argument touching the punishment of the unsaved. It is particularly full in its philological chapters respecting the meaning of the Greek words used by the inspired writers to indicate the doom of the lost. Price $1; postage 10c.

"We hail this book with lively satisfaction. Undoubtedly the subject which it treats with such an attractive combination of learning and modesty, of power and reverence, has laid hold of the minds of many of the most thoughtful Christian men of our day. Its growth, from a pamphlet in the first edition to a handsome volume of three hundred and thirty pages in the fourth, is conclusive proof that the question discussed is one of profound importance."—Nonconformist.

"It is characterized by his usual vigor of thought and choiceness of expression. To all sincere lovers of truth, rather than of tradition, we cordially commend the treatise."—The Church Messenger.

Bible Echo. Volume I., May to December, edited by W. Kelly, 1874. The only English weekly that advocates the earliest Gospel. Bound volume of numbers of the Bible Echo, containing important papers and discussions on vital matters, and the news concerning the spread of the scriptural doctrine of immortality. Price $3.75.

Bible Echo. Vol. III., July to September, 1875. This completes the Bible Echo as a weekly newspaper, and also finishes the old series. Price $1.50.

Bible Echo. New Series. Monthly numbers from October, 1875. The yearly subscription for this magazine, including the 3 months of last year, is 33 50.

New Facts Upon all Subjects. By the author of "Exquisite Words Upon Everything:" Useful to the physician, the artist, the chemist, the engineer, the manufacturer, the agriculturist, the gardener, and the housekeeper. 324 pp. Price 50c; postage 10c.

A New Work by Mrs. H. V. Reed.

Sintered Words for Blessed Singers. Nearly 200 pp. Well printed on heavy tinted paper, neatly bound in cloth. Price 60c; postage 10c.

"This book is one of the most satisfactory of its kind that could be written; indeed we know of none other in every way so pleasing to those who see the necessity of studying the Bible as a revelation from God. We would be more than content, we would be proud, if the title page bore our name instead of that of the estimable and talented lady, the authoress. Her "Bible Triumphant" was a good work, and it is, we know, warmly appreciated by many; but this work, so original, so fortuitous, so captivating, it would be hard to guess where its success will end. Everybody should possess a copy."—Mt. Bible Echo.

Bible Triumphant. A new supply is expected. Price, paper covers, 50c; cloth 75c.

ZELL'S ENCYCLOPEDIA.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

This truly noble work contains 150,000 articles, 3,000 engravings, and eighteen splendid maps. Though a marvel of condensation, it is probably the best work in the language as a source of universal information.

George E. Plumbe, corresponding editor of the Boston Inter-Ocean, says: "Its concise, comprehensive, accuracy, and the scholarly treatment of the subject of a religious, historical, biographical and geographical nature, make it more desirable for the general reader than any other work with which I am acquainted, and prefer, like at double the cost, certainly, to any other American work of a similar character. I make this statement with pleasure because I firmly believe that a copy of Zell's Encyclopedia placed in any family containing young or middle-aged people would be a stronger incentive to study and thought than could be afforded by the expenditure of double its outlay in any other direction.

Wendell Phillips says: I have examined Zell's Encyclopedia, and found in it almost everything I thought of looking for. The subjects are treated with a fulness which surprised me. To account, I think, you can risk comparison with any of your rivals and our feature is especially valuable—that when you are unable to find a topic, you can find out where fuller information may be found. It is just such a work as every one needs at home for immediate reference, even if he does not have a great public library.

Unity Plan of Salvation; or Her Purpose Concerning Man and Earth. By J. M. Bierbower. 316 pages, large, clearly printed, by card 31. The Restitution.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 8, 1877.

We have received about two hundred copies of Brother Sweet's pamphlet on The Rich Man and Lazarus, from Brother T. Finn, for the benefit of the RESTITUTION. Price, fifteen cents a copy. By sending for this work, brethren will aid the cause to the extent of purchases.

We are in receipt of a book entitled, The New Medical Era: being a Popular Medical Treatise on Cholera, Cholera morbus, Cholera Infantum, Yellow Fever, Cerebro Meningitis Spinalis or Spotted Fever. By H. Beadle, M. D. St. Louis, Mo. Price $1. Dr. Beadle is engaged in the practice of medicine in the city of St. Louis, and devoting especial attention to consumption, rheumatism, sick headache, dyspepsia, and female complaints. As yet, we have been so preoccupied with the affairs of the RESTITUTION that we have only glanced through the book. Brother Beadle writes that his practice is eminently successful.

We hardly thought that a formal and definite declaration of our sole reliance on the word of inspired prophecy, in explaining current events, or forecasting the probabilities of the future would be necessary. While admitting that "coming events may cast their shadows before," and that certain minds are susceptible of premonitions of advancing calamity, our unwavering confidence is in the Divine Spirit's revealings as embodied in the Scriptures. We have neither the time nor the space to say more now. Please let us picture humanity as it is. Unfortunately it is imperfect, and partaking of it ourself, we probably have a large share of its imperfections.

In our paper of this week will be

Exegetical.

The Disturbed Thessalonians.

Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, that ye be not soon shaken in the faith, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand. 2 Thess. II. 1-2.

The Christians at Thessalonica seem to have constituted the model Church of apostolic times. They certainly enlisted Paul's regard and commendation beyond any other congregation assembled by his labors. We may therefore safely look to them for a truthful and complete exemplification of what true Christianity is. And when we come to inquire narrowly into the nature of their experiences and character, we find their Christianity summed up in two grand articles. In his first letter to them, the inspired apostle says: "Ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God;"—this is the first article;—"and to wait for his Son from heaven" (I. 9, 10);—this is the second article. And this was the whole of their Christianity.

From this, then, it appears that the earnest and confident expectancy of the coming of the Lord Jesus from the heavens, was as much and as vitally a part of primitive, practical, and experimental Christianity, as conversion itself; nay, that it was one of the very elements of the early conversions, and one of the great and leading things to which apostolic conversions were made. And it would verily seem from this Scripture, that those who have not been brought practically to take in the doctrine of the Second Advent, are only about half converted. They may have turned from serving idols to serve the living God; and so far, their religion may be true and genuine, but, until they have added the other item of waiting for his Son, Jesus Christ, from the heavens, they have only gone half the length of these Thessalonians, and are so far short of being complete Christians. It is a sorrowful statement, and one which bears disastrously upon the claims of much that passes for Christianity in our day; but how to escape from it, with these texts before us is not so easy to be seen.

The text quoted gives intimation that the church at Thessalonica had become, to some degree, perplexed and disturbed by certain misrepresentations touching their expectations, which misrepresentations were of a character to change a topic, hitherto their strength and joy, into a source of disquietude and alarm. What was that misrepresentation?

From the reading of the English text, it has been taken that the Thessalonian Christians were in distress and perturbation at the idea of the nearness of the day of the Lord; as if they were afraid of it, alarmed at it, and overwhelmed at the prospect of having Christ to come in their day. It has even been quoted to prove that it is dangerous and anti-apostolic to preach the doctrine of any near or speedy coming of the Lord; that it unsettles people, and robs them of their proper spiritual comforts, and fills them with unnecessary anxieties. But nothing could be further from the facts in the

Al blessed Lord. They were converted turned from their old idolatries, and entered port the service of the living God, in waiting for and loving the coming. Paul speaks of new hope as their crown of rejoicing—as their rejoicing, highest and most effective comfort—in such that the Lord Himself was speedily to know descend from heaven with a shout, stance with the voice of the archangel and tion, the trump of God. And he contrasts equal their hopes of happiest rest at the revelation of the Lord from heaven. How begin could it be possible, then, that their fort, agitation of mind and perplexing remi trouble were the result of an apprecanthension that the Savior was to come sure in their day? So far from being a prop source of disastrous disturbance, this tid was the gladdest and most consoling tate But this being "at hand," of which pro the apostle speaks, was something of entirely different from the idea that post the day of the Lord was only about to ter come. The original word in ενεστηκεν for (from ενιστημι), and occurs seven lan times in the New Testament, but nowhere else in the sense of impending or near, in the relation of not yet quite as arrived. In five out of the seven inmc stances, it is translated by the word sor "present," in the sense of already come. The phrase, "at hand," is used in twenty other places in the New Testament, in the sense of near, though not yet quite arrived; but not in a single instance is the original ενεστηκεν, as here. Others versions are much truer to the meaning of this word. The Syriac, which is the oldest translation that was ever made, renders it by the phrase, is come. The Swiss version renders it the same, est arrive. MacKnight translates it, hath come. And the evidence is perfectly conclusive that such is the proper and only true significance of the word. Luther renders it vorhanden sei, to be present, to exist at the time. Olshausen says it refers to "what is present." Bengel says "[illegible]" It does not mean something at hand, in the sense of being near, though not yet come, but something at hand in the sense of having already come—as being already present—without the possibility of any further waiting for it.

And the moment we take this true and only proper sense of this word, the complexion of the whole passage is entirely changed from the false interpretation which some have put upon it, and the precise nature of what was disturbing these Thessalonian believers becomes manifest. Somebody had been telling them that the day of the Lord had already come; that it was then present; that it had arrived, and was no longer a subject of hope or expectation. If what some were thus teaching them was true, they felt that a great misfortune had befallen them. They had been comforting themselves by the idea that, with the arrival of that day, their dead were to be restored to them; that their companions in the faith, who had fallen asleep, were to arise with the dawn of that day; and that they themselves were to be translated, and caught away to the clouds, to be forever with the Lord, when that day should come. And if now it had already come, the conclusion was inevitable that they had been cherishing all these glad hopes in vain, and that all their joyous expectations had proved a cheat and a failure, for their dead had not been raised, and they were still left upon earth. Could it be that their faith was a mere deceit, and that all they had hoped from it was a mere delusion?

Such a doctrine, then, as that the day of the Lord had come, was a virtual subversion of their Christianity and their hope. It was well calculated to shake them from their mind as Christians, to confuse and confound all their ideas, and to fill them with utter despair. Hence, the interference of the apostle to counteract the misrepresentation, and restore their peace and comfort. He beseeches them and conjures them most solemnly, by our gathering together unto the Lord Jesus, and as they valued their hopes, not to be so easily and quickly shaken in mind, not to be troubled by such sorrowful misgivings, and not for a moment to believe that the day of the Lord had come, or was then present in any such sense as to be no longer a subject of joyful anticipation, as it had once been. No matter in what way such a false idea might come to them, whether by apparent revelation from the Spirit, or by oral communication as if by apostolic authority, or even by letter, professing to come from under his own hand, he charges them by no means to believe it, and not for an instant to give place to the truthless assertion that the day of the Lord was not still pending, and still future.

No, no; not so unsubstantial and disappointing are the promises of Christianity. Not such an unreal thing is the doctrine of Christ's coming, the resurrection of the dead, and the gathering of the saints in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. These things are literal realities. And whether from the Scriptures or from philosophy, men propose to explain them away, and to resolve them into mere poetry and gorgeous Oriental metaphor, it is the part of true Christian faith and obedience to refuse place to anything short of the literal and complete fulfillment of what the Savior promised, and his inspired apostles so constantly preached. It was Hymenæus and Philetus who, in apostolic times, undertook to spiritualize and explain away the resurrection as past; but Paul says of them, that, concerning the truth, they erred; that they were overthrowers of the faith; and that their words were a corroding canker. 2 Tim. ii. 17, 18. And he here says as much concerning all such as would spiritualize and explain away what else pertains to the literal promises and hopes touching Christ's coming and the day of the Lord. None of these things are past, and none of them have yet transpired; and he who says they have, however he may explain it, is a heretic of a deadly sort, and no Christian can hold with him without ruin to his faith.

But this passage also shows the very different manner in which the early Christians must have conceived of the day of the Lord and the coming of Christ, from that which now obtains, in order to have been liable to such an erroneous impression on the subject. With the present popular conceptions of the sudden grandeur, conspicuity, and universal publicity of the coming of Christ, it would be utterly impossible to obtain currency for the idea that it was already present or accomplished. People now are looking for the world to come to an end,—for an utter break-up of the whole system of nature,—for a complete wreck of the universe. When we talk to them of the last day and the return of Christ, [illegible] of all sublunary things, and of the complete extinction of human life, and even of the whole dwelling place of man and all created things. But if the early Christians had thought of this subject after this style, how is it possible that they could have believed the last day had come when the world still stood, and the stars remained in their places, and the whole course of nature was still going on as before? The thing is out of the question; they could not have entertained it for a single instant. But we have the inspired testimony that they did entertain it; and that they were so deeply and grievously swayed by it as to require the special interposition of the apostle to save them from despair on account of it. We argue, therefore, from these facts, that the primitive and proper ideas touching the coming of Christ and the day of the Lord were quite different from those which people now very generally entertain. The truth is that all this poetic nonsense of "the wreck of matter and the crush of worlds," is no part of Christianity, but a miserable and delusive interpolation of the faith. However great the changes from what now exists may be, when ultimately wrought out, it is abundantly set forth in the Scriptures that there will be many stages in the process, and that no such summary and violent universal collapse shall ever occur as that of which poetry and superstition have dreamed. And when we come to look at what is predicted of these successive stages, and of the leading particulars which are to mark them, there is every reason to believe that most of them will occur while yet the world and the great mass of men are going on the same as now.

Take for example the arrival of the Savior at those regions of the air whither his saints are to be gathered together unto him; what right have we to suppose that it will at once be visible and known to men in general? Has not the Lord's coming been repeatedly described as partaking of the nature of the coming of a thief? Has not he himself so described it, as well as his apostles? The time will be when he will manifest himself, and when every eye shall see him; but where is the evidence that it will be so at the beginning? And when we are told, over and over, that his first arrival will be in some stealthy and unrevealed manner, in which the world at large will know nothing of it, and not at all believe that such things are transpiring.

Some lay great stress on the declaration that the Lord is to "descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God," and argue with great confidence that this proves the openness and publicity of the advent. But we do not at all perceive the force of such reasoning. A very important link is wanting to give it conclusiveness. It is nowhere said that this is to be a shout or voice which the world hears. The object of the shout and trumpet-call is to reach the saints, to awaken those that sleep in their graves and to call both them and those alive away from the earth. There is not the slightest intimation that any one else will hear the call. When Christ arose and ascended, it is written that God went up "with a shout;" but who of earth's godless populace heard it? Why, then, may he not come again with a shout, which shall be equally unheard by the common world? And even if there should be supernatural sounds and sudden tumultuous demonstrations in earth and sky, that does not at all argue that they will be understood by people generally, or that the advent in its first stages, will be other than invisible. The men who journeyed with Paul, and were present when the Savior personally appeared to him, heard a voice, and felt a mysterious commotion; but they saw nothing of the heavenly Speaker, and "heard not the voice of him that spake," much less comprehended the fact of the Divine presence.

Take, also, the matter of the resurrection of the sleeping saints, to which those Thessalonians were looking with so much holy comfort; and what proof is there that men generally will see or know anything about it when it occurs? The resurrected ones will know it, and those alive and remaining, who are to be caught up together with them, will know it, perhaps; but there is no intimation anywhere that it will be manifest to any one else. No one saw Christ rise; and no one saw those rise who rose with him; and the presumption is fair that his saints will also come from their graves quite as unobserved by the unbelieving multitudes, who will continue to go forward with their schemes and occupations as if nothing of the sort were transpiring.

And so in regard to the few waiting and ready ones among the living, who are then to be removed to the heavenly places. At least two men, during the past ages have been thus removed. On the other side of the flood, "Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him." Gen. v. 24. Luther has the remark that "the original signifies that Enoch was lost or disappeared, contrary to the thought or expectation of all the other patriarchs, and at once ceased to be among men. Enos, Seth, and all the other patriarchs, knew not by whom or whither he was taken away; they sought him, therefore, but found him not." This thing occurred without noise or display, and no one was able to tell anything about it. In after time Elijah also "went up by a whirlwind into heaven," without tasting of death. As a special favor, Elisha was permitted to witness it; but no one else saw it. Fifty men went out after him and sought three days, but found him not. Even the sons of the prophets could not be convinced for a time that he had gone as Elisha reported. They neither saw nor understood it, and much less was it manifest to the general community in which it occurred. And the wise man assures us that "the thing that hath been is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done." Eccl. i. 9. The Savior's own account of the matter leaves the mind under the same impression. "I tell you, in that night there shall be two in one bed; the one taken and the other left. Two shall be grinding together [at the mill]; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two shall be in the field; the one shall be taken and the other left". Luke xvii. 34-36.

Now, with all this well agress the liability of the Thessalonians to be deceived with the false idea that the day of the Lord had, perhaps, come without bringing them the fulfillment of their expectations; but it utterly confutes those wild and delirious pictures of the day of judgment which received their existence during the dark ages, and quite too much distort and render repulsive and alarming the sweet and precious doctrines of the faith in the common imagination. As Christians we have reason to learn the lesson of laying aside those distressing ideas of terror, and of looking forward to our Lord's coming, and all its relations to us, as only blessed, peaceful, and glad. It is not some great thunder crash of destruction, laying the universe in sudden and instantaneous ruin, that we are to be expecting; but the gentle and loving call of our Lord, at which we shall evanish from the earth, rejoin our friends who sleep in Jesus, and take our everlasting places with our Savior, where we will be hidden in the peaceful sky.

This case also furnishes an illustration of the real ground for alarm on the part of the unwatchful and unprepared, in view of the rapture of the saints. These Thessalonians were unfortunately led to think that the day of the Lord had come, and that they were left behind as having no part in the blessed gathering to the Lord in the air. The result was, that they were being driven to distraction. The very thought filled them with overwhelming anguish and dismay. And yet it was only an erroneous surmise—a mere peradventure, for which there was a bare possibility. But the hour is coming when what they but dimly imagined shall be sad reality to many. Though the unready and unsanctified may not see the dead arise, or the translated ones ascend, they will find it out afterwards. The truth in due time shall become manifest. And when the awful reality appears, that the day of the Lord is already come; that Jesus is present in the clouds; that the dead in Christ have been recalled from their tombs and are with him in the heights; that the earnest, waiting and watching ones, who have so mysteriously disappeared have gone with them like so many Enochs whom God hath translated; and that they are "left,"—left to take their portion with hypocrites and unbelievers—left to suffer the sorrows of the great tribulation, having lost their crowns and their part in the resurrection of the just;—alas! alas! alas! for the consternation and dismay which shall then take possession of them!

One of the most affecting pictures of that scene contained in the Scriptures is the parable of the ten virgins. Our blood within us stirs as we realize the sad predicament of the five unwise ones, at the moment of their vexatious discovery that their lamps were expiring, and that there were no supplies now to replenish them. We can almost feel the mingled consternation and perishing hope of each, as she draws up the wick anew, and nurses the feeble flame, which brightens a little only to burn the less. But theirs was a picture of the case of multitudes who will then for the first time discover that they are irremediably wanting, and that the blessedness for which they hoped has clean gone from them forever!

Rouse thee, then, O drowsy professor and careless lingerer about "Zion's gates, and think what will be thy estate when the day of the Lord shall come. Survey thy supplies for that emergency, and thy store for the requisitions which shall then be made. Look at thy dim lamp, with its feeble flame already flickering to extinction. How wilt thou join that glorious procession of torches bright with such a mockery of provision? And where are thy reserved supplies to make it better? Suppose that this night the Savior should call from the heavens for his waiting saints, would you be among them? Would the summons find you with grace in store for such an emergency? Oh, if there be a doubt overshadowing thy future, be-stir thyself, haste thee to thy prayers, renew thy consecration, and from this hour give thyself wholly to thy God.—J. A. Seiss.

The Rocks of Calvary.

In Fleming's "Christology," it is stated that an unbeliever visiting the sacred places of Palestine, was shown the rocks about Calvary. Examining them narrowly and critically, he turned in amazement to his fellow travelers, and said: "I have long been a student of nature, and I am sure that the rents and clefts in this rock must have split according to its veins, and where it was weakest in its parts: for this I have observed to have been done in other rocks, when separated or broken after an earthquake; and reason tells me it must always be so. But it is quite otherwise here; for the rocks are split athwart and across the veins, in a strange and preternatural manner, and therefore I think God that I came hither to see the standing monument of miraculous power by which God gives evidence to this day of the divinity of Christ."
